Italian patriot Alessandro Manzoni, best known for his fiercely nationalistic novel The Betrothed (1827) was born on March 7 in Milan. His father was a wealthy landowner, and his mother was the daughter of Cesare Beccaria, a well-known jurist and author of an influential treatise on crime and punishment. His parents separated in 1792, and, as a child, he moved with his mother to Paris where he received his education at several Catholic schools. His earliest works are characterized by a deeply anticlerical sentiment, as well as by strong support for Jacobean and democratic ideologies. He later rejected deism for an equally fervent devotion to Roman Catholicism. Manzoni returned to Italy in 1810, where he met and married Enrichetta Blondel.

Although he published several early works, Manzoni’s most prolific period as a writer came between the years of 1812 and 1815. During this time, he began the poetry collection Inni Sacri, which he concluded 10 years later with the final piece, La Pentacoste (1822). His poetry is noted for its warmth of religious feeling. He also wrote two tragic dramas, Il Conte di Carmagnola (1820) and Adelchi (1822), as well as an ode to Napoleon upon his death, “Il Cinque Maggio” (1822).

Manzoni’s best-known work, I prommessi sposi (1827; translated The Betrothed 1951), was written between 1821 and 1827, during which the author was influenced by Sir Walter Scott. Developed from a series of theoretical writings, the historical novel is set in 17th-century Milan and provides a lavishly detailed and fiercely patriotic look at life in Italy. In Lombardy, a local tyrant thwarts the love between two peasants. After initial publication of the work, Manzoni continued to make revisions to create a stylistically superior version of the text, publishing the final revised edition in 1840. It now stands as a prime example of modern Italian prose. In revising, Manzoni sought to remove all traces of non-Tuscan idiom. This act revived the age-long conflict as to which dialect should be the standard for Italian prose, an issue in which Manzoni was interested. Manzoni was convinced that Tuscan should be the standard, national Italian literary language.

Beginning in 1842, Manzoni turned away from writing fiction and concentrated on theoretical works and as well as his involvement in politics. In 1860, he was elected senator of the new Italian kingdom. He was also assigned as president for the commission for the unification of the Italian language. For his work in this capacity, he was granted Roman citizenship.

Manzoni died on May 22 in Milan. He is best remembered for his constant contribution to improving the Italian prose style, as well as for his patriotic ideology and religious fervor. His legacy is such that, on the first anniversary of his death, the composer Verdi wrote his Requiem in honor of Manzoni.

A Work about Alessandro Manzoni

Barricelli, Gian Piero. Alessandro Manzoni. Boston: Twayne, 1976.

Marinetti, Filippo Tommaso

(1876–1944) nonfiction writer

Emilio Filippo Tommaso Marinetti, one of the founders and a leading proponent of the Italian futurist movement (see FUTURISM), was born in Alexandria, Egypt. The son of a wealthy lawyer, he was educated in a strict French Jesuit school in Alexandria. He completed his studies in Paris and then studied law at Pavia and Genoa universities. His devotion to literature soon overshadowed his plan for a career as a lawyer.

At 16, while still at the Jesuit College, Marinetti began to develop his skills as a writer, publishing a literary magazine from 1892 to 1894. He experimented with the emerging poetic form of free verse, publishing his first poems in that style in 1898. By 1900, he had abandoned all pretense of aspiring to the legal profession and devoted himself full time to the study of French and Italian poetry and literature. In 1905, he founded another literary magazine, Poesia, which was published in Milan until 1909. Through this journal, he embarked on a crusade to liberate poetry from the traditional constraints of language, form, and meter by providing an outlet for emerging non-traditional writers. Still a virtual unknown, Marinetti gained instant recognition with a single publication in Le Figaro on February 20, 1909. His essay Foundation and Manifesto of Futurism initiated a controversial shift in the nature of literature. In the work, he glorified the rapid pace of the future—machines, danger, speed, violence, and war. Other artists, unaware that Marinetti was not only the movement’s leading theorist but also its sole member, soon joined the trend so that by 1910, a small but vocal group of artists, writers, and musicians were known as the first wave of futurists.

A brilliant publicist, Marinetti spurred the growth of the movement by inundating the public with a series of manifestos, each one progressively more vehement and filled with promises of the future. His earliest manifestos were published in Poesia, but subsequent works were printed in his new journal Lacerba after its inception in 1913.

Alongside his manifestos, Marinetti was also hard at work as a novelist. His works, which followed the tenets set forth by his own concept of futurism, most particularly the denigration of women, often caused controversy. The publication of his experimental novel, Marfarka the Futurist (1910), resulted in his arrest and imprisonment on charges of pornography.

Marinetti continued to work to expand the goals of futurism to encompass all areas of the arts, including literature, music, painting, architecture, costume design, and photography. Two years after meeting his future wife, Benedetta Cappa, he published another manifesto, Against Marriage (1919); however, he broke from his own reasoning and the two were finally wed in 1923.

The end of futurism and the end of Marinetti's life coincide. Italy's defeat in the war changed the popular opinion of violence and conflict, and, with the loss of Marinetti in 1944, the movement was unable to sustain its brief but explosive momentum.

A Work about Filippo Tommaso Marinetti

Blum, Cinzia Sartini. The Other Modernism: F. T. Martinetti's Futurist Fiction of Power. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1944.

Maron, Monika (1941–) novelist, short-story writer

Monika Maron was born in Berlin during World War II. Her father was a Communist who served as East Germany's minister of the interior. Her mother was a Pole of Jewish descent. After Maron completed grammar school, she studied drama and art history. She worked at a factory and for East Berlin television before spending six years as a journalist for Für Dich and Wochenpost. She became a full-time writer in 1976.

Maron's first novel, Flugasche (Flying Ash, 1981), was banned in East Germany for its critical portrayal of conditions there; it was, however, successful in the West. The novel describes the efforts of a journalist to shut down a power plant that is poisoning residents of an industrial city. Flugasche is the first book to address the problems of pollution in East Germany. Maron's second novel Die Überläuferin (The Turncoat, 1986) continues her theme of criticizing the East German state. In this work, she describes a woman's psychological collapse while living in dehumanizing conditions. Maron wrote a third novel in 1991 to form a trilogy about East Berlin. Part of a rebellious and critical generation of German writers, her criticism of East Germany also appears in her short stories and essays. In 1992, Maron won the coveted Kleist Prize.

Another Work by Monika Maron

Silent Close No. 6. Translated by David Newton Marinelli. Columbia, La.: Reader's International, 1993.

Masaoka Shiki (Masaoka Tsunenori)

(1867–1902) poet, diarist, critic

Masaoka Shiki was born in Matsuyama in present-day Ehime Prefecture to Masaoka Hayata and Yae. He began to write prose and poetry while still in grade school there. He left Matsuyama in 1883 to attend University Preparatory College in Tokyo. In 1890, he entered the Literature Department of Tokyo Imperial University but left in 1893 to devote himself to literature. During his university period, he traveled around Japan, and in 1895, he volunteered to become a war correspondent in China during the Sino-Japanese War (1894–95). In the last years of his life, tuberculosis virtually confined Masaoka to a sickbed. He succumbed to this illness in 1902.

While still at university, Masaoka published three analytical books that were highly critical of modern haiku poetry, in particular attacking the stature of widely acclaimed haiku master Bashō Matsuo (1644–94). By 1896, he had softened his perspective and published Buson the Haiku Poet, which praised the style of Buson Yosa (1716–83). In 1897, he started the magazine Hototogisu to provide an outlet for modern haiku. He then wrote a critique of tanka poetry called Letters to the Tanka Poets, published in 1898. His most highly regarded poetry was written from his sickbed toward the end of his life and published posthumously in a volume called Poems from the Bamboo Village (1904).

Masaoka is known more for revitalizing the haiku and tanka forms of poetry than for writing poetry. He espoused a new style of poetry based on shasei (copying life). He claimed the traditional poetic conventions that restricted haiku and tanka were killing them as art forms.

Other Works by Masaoka Shiki

Masaoka Shiki: Selected Poems. Translated by Burton Watson. New York: Columbia University Press, 1997.

Peonies Kana. Translated by Harold J. Isaacson. New York: Theatre Arts, 1972.

A Work about Masaoka Shiki

Beichman, Janine. Masaoka Shiki. New York: Kodansha International, 1986.

Maupassant, Guy de (1850–1893)

novelist

Although some accounts vary, Henri-René-Albert-Guy de Maupassant was most likely born at the Château de Miromesniel in Dieppe, France, to a noble family. He spent his childhood in Normandy, where, graced with an almost photographic memory, he began to gather the rich and vivid details that he would later use in his stories about the Norman people.

In 1869, Maupassant went to Paris, where he began to study law, but he left school at age 20 to serve in the Franco–Prussian War. When he returned to Paris, he became obsessed with the idea of becoming a writer and sought out the company of other writers including Gustave FLAUBERT, from whom he learned much about the writer’s craft. He also began to search his memories for ideas of his own and soon published the short story “La Main ecorchée” (1875), in which he richly details the haunting image of a mummified hand. The story was based on an experience Maupassant had as a teenager when he actually saw a mummified hand up close. The details of his description reveal not only the vividness of Maupassant’s memories but also his adherence to accuracy.

Aligning himself with the naturalist school (see naturalism), Maupassant published collections of poetry, the first of which was Des Verse (1880). It was his short stories, however, that gained critical and popular acclaim. In a journal edited by Émile ZOLA, Maupassant published what has come to be regarded as one of his greatest works, “Boule de Suif” (“Ball of Fat,” 1880). Set during the Franco-Prussian War, it is the sad tale of a prostitute and her inhumane treatment by the bourgeois passengers with whom she must travel on a coach. She is forced to spend the night with a Prussian officer so that he will allow the coach to proceed. The next day, she is scorned by her fellow travelers, even though it is her action that allows them to complete their journey.

Throughout the 1880s, Maupassant wrote more than 300 short stories, six novels, and three travel books. All of his works are marked by his attention to detail, objectivity, and a remarkable sense of comedic timing. Most often, they focus on everyday events in the lives of common people, while revealing the hidden sides of human nature. Two of his best-known works include A Woman’s Life (1883), which details the frustrating and unhappy existence of a Norman wife, and Pierre et Jean (1888), a psychological tale of two brothers. The latter inspired debate about its morality, as the hero of the tale is successful only because he commits acts that are morally questionable.

Another of Maupassant’s works, Le Horla (The Hallucination, 1887), established him as a master of the horror tale. The main character, probably suffering from syphilis, believes he has summoned the Horlas, invisible cousins to vampires, and, in an attempt to get rid of them, burns down his house, killing his servants. When this does not work, he commits suicide. Maupassant himself suffered from syphilis, contracted at age 20, and the increasing madness brought on by the disease is readily apparent in his later works. One-tenth of his total literary output is in the form of horror stories and, of these, the main recurring theme is madness.

Maupassant attempted to end his own life on January 2, 1892. The attempt was unsuccessful but did lead to his admission to a private asylum, where he died one year later.

Other Works by Guy de Maupassant

A Life: The Humble Truth. Translated by Roger Pearson. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999.

The Necklace. Translated by Jonathan Sturges. London: Pushkin, 1999.

A Work about Guy de Maupassant

Lerner, Michael G. Maupassant. New York: George Braziller, 1975.

Mayakovsky, Vladimir (1893–1930) poet

Vladimir Vladimirovich Mayakovsky was born in Bagdadi, Georgia. Vladimir Konstantinovich, Mayakovsky's father, was employed as a forest ranger. Mayakovsky started school in 1902 but was not very interested in his studies. His older sister Ludmila, a student in Moscow, brought home political pamphlets, which Mayakovsky read avidly. When Mayakovsky's father died in 1906, his mother, Alexandra Alexeevna, moved her family to Moscow. Mayakovsky was instantly absorbed by the political situation of Moscow: At age 14, he was a full member of the Moscow Bolshevik Party.

Expelled from school in 1908 for nonpayment of tuition, Mayakovsky served as a messenger and lookout for the Bolsheviks. He was arrested for his activities but soon was released on probation. A year later, he was again placed in jail for his association with the revolutionaries. He wrote his first poem in solitary confinement. In 1911, he decided to study art and was admitted to the Moscow Institute for the Study of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture. Painter David Burliuk introduced Mayakovsky to modern painting and poetry and was the first person to read Mayakovsky's poetry.

Mayakovsky joined the futurist movement, denouncing the rich literary tradition of Russia. He labeled Aleksandr PUSHKIN and Maxim GORKY, for instance, "insignificant." He did not rebel against only the literary canon but also against the conventional use of language. Many of Mayakovsky's poems contains words that do not actually exist in the Russian language. Mayakovsky published his first two poems, "Night" and "Morning," in 1912; they were published the same year in a collection with other poems and some prose pieces entitled A Slap in the Face of Public Taste.

In 1913, Mayakovsky produced his first play, Vladimir Mayakovsky: A Tragedy. The play consists of a number of poetic monologues that explore the self-perception of the poet, and the leading part was played by Mayakovsky himself. It was not a big success with the public. Mayakovsky's first major poem, "A Cloud in Trousers," appeared in 1915. The poem is a tale of love and uses unusual images to denounce the traditional romantic representation of the poet in such lines as: "I am spit of the filthy night on a palm of a beggar."

Between 1915 and 1918, Mayakovsky produced a number of poetic works that dealt mostly with political ideology and were clearly propaganda for the Communist Party, which took control of the country in October 1917. He was an enthusiastic supporter of the Bolshevik regime and wrote in 1924 a poem in praise of Lenin.

In 1925, Mayakovsky visited the United States, attending meetings of labor unions, giving lectures about workers' rights, and sometimes joining the picketers during a strike. Mayakovsky described these experiences in two collections of poems, Poems of America and My Discovery of America (1926). In 1927, Mayakovsky established a literary journal, Novy Lef, in which he attacked Maxim Gorky. The short-lived journal published purely political poems that criticized capitalism, the West, and the "vices of the bourgeoisie." After a trip to Europe in 1929, Mayakovsky produced Poems About a Soviet Passport, a collection that recounted the reactions produced by his passport as he traveled across Europe. During 1928 and 1929, he also produced a number of propaganda pieces that dealt with various mundane issues of the proletariat, such as the joys of electricity, the advantages of running hot water, and the necessity of five-year plans. But his political verse alternated through the 1920s with much more personal love poems.

Mayakovsky received numerous awards from the Soviet government. Yet, he wrote two plays, The Bedbug (1928) and The Bathhouse (1930), that satirized Soviet bureaucracy and were suppressed by the authorities. His most successful play, Moscow on Fire (1930), appeared just a few days after his death, and recounted the events of the revolution of 1905.

In 1930, Mayakovsky shot and killed himself in his Moscow apartment. He seems to have been motivated by disappointment in love as well as by anxiety about the reception of his work. After his death, his body was placed on display for three days, and more than 150,000 mourners came to say their farewells. Stalin eulogized him, and generations of Soviet students memorized his poems. Today, critical opinion his works remains mixed, as it was during his lifetime. Mayakovsky completely broke away from literary tradition, establishing his own unique style for poetry and drama; at the same time, he attacked and denounced a number of writers and poets who did not adhere to the principles of SOCIALIST REALISM.

Other Works by Vladimir Mayakovsky

The Bedbug and Selected Poetry. Translated by Max Hayward. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1975.

For the Voice. Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press, 2000.

Listen! Early Poems. Translated by Maria Enzberger. San Francisco: City Lights Books, 1991.

Mayakovsky: Plays. Translated by Guy Daniels. Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern University Press, 1995.

Works about Vladimir Mayakovsky

Bowra, C. M. "The Futurism of Vladimir Mayakovsky." In The Creative Experiment. New York: Grove Press, 1958.

Terras, Victor. Vladimir Mayakovsky. Boston: Twayne, 1983.

Mazumdar, Anita

See DESAI, ANITA.

Meeks, Brian (1953–) nonfiction writer, poet, fiction writer

Born in Montreal, Canada, to a Trinidadian mother and Jamaican father, Meeks grew up in Jamaica. There he attended Jamaica College before doing undergraduate work at the University of the West Indies, St. Augustine, Trinidad, during the politically turbulent early 1970s. After earning a doctorate from the University of the West Indies, Mona, Meeks acted as a media and political education consultant for the People's Revolutionary Government of Grenada. He also edited The Free West Indian during the early 1980s. Musicians Bob Marley, John Coltrane, and Miles Davis significantly influenced Meeks's work. In the acknowledgments to Radical Caribbean: From Black Power to Abu Bakr (1996), Meeks thanked Gordon Rohlehr and Kamau BRATHWAITE for teaching him "the importance of rigorous study and appreciation of popular culture as both central cause and effect of the political process."

Themes of human agency, revolution, and radical Caribbean activism reappear in Meeks's intellectual works. Caribbean Revolutions and Revolutionary Theory: an Assessment of Cuba, Nicaragua and Grenada (1993) traces revolutionary concepts from the French Revolution to reconsider revolutionary meaning. In Radical Caribbean: From Black Power to Abu Bakr, Meeks maps two decades of radical movements in the Caribbean to examine why revolutions occur. An International Affairs reviewer wrote, "In the case of Grenada [Meeks's] account of the tragic fall of the revolution goes beyond anything which has been written before."

Before returning to the University of the West Indies, Mona, where he is currently a senior lecturer in comparative politics and political theory and head of the Department of Government, Meeks taught at James Madison College, Michigan State University. In addition, Meeks has written poetry, which has been published in many anthologies. His recent and consistent intellectual contributions foreground significant revolutionary issues, making him one of the most influential contemporary Caribbean political theorists.

Other Works by Brian Meeks

Narratives of Resistance: Jamaica, Trinidad, the Caribbean. Kingston, Jamaica: University of West Indies Press, 2000.

“NUFF at the Cusp of an Idea: Grassroots Guerrillas and the Politics of the 1970s in Trinidad and Tobago.” Social Identities 5, no. 4 (1999).

“The Political Moment in Jamaica: The Dimensions of Hegemonic Dissolution.” In Manning Marable, ed., Dispatches from the Ebony Tower. New York: Columbia University Press, 2000.

A Work about Brian Meeks

Allahar, Anton, ed. Caribbean Charisma: Reflections on Leadership, Legitimacy, and Populist Politics. Boulder, Colo.: L. Rienner Publishers, 2001.

Mehta, Gita (1943–) novelist

Gita Mehta was born in Delhi, India. Her parents were deeply involved in India’s political struggle for independence against the British. Her father, Biju Patnaik, is one of India’s most famous freedom fighters who went on to become the political leader of the state of Orissa, India. Mehta was sent to boarding school at an early age, as both her parents were constantly in and out of jail due to their political activities.

Mehta was educated in India and England, and her novels reflect her preoccupation with the ongoing relationship between Western and Eastern cultures. She explores this theme in her nonfiction book Karma Cola: Marketing the Mystic East (1979) in which she looks into the fascination that Eastern cultures hold for “hippies” from the West. As the title suggests, the novel is based on global economy and explores the commodification of one culture by the other.

Her first fictional work, Raj: A Novel (1989), is a historical novel about a young girl from a noble family who comes of age during the British Raj. Through her experiences, it becomes obvious that the roots of British and Indian culture cannot be easily untangled in colonial India, especially among the privileged classes who have benefited from British education. What develops alongside the maturity of the heroine is India’s own birthing process into independence from the British. Mehta’s latest work, Snakes and Ladders: Glimpses of Modern India (1997), further explores aspects of India’s change after its independence.

In addition to writing novels, Mehta is a journalist and documentary filmmaker. She has directed four films on the Bangladesh war and one on the Indo–Pakistan war for the BBC and NBC.

Another Work by Gita Mehta

A River Sutra. New York: Vintage Books, 1994.

A Work about Gita Mehta

Byer, Kathleen Collins. “The Lama and the Vanaprasthi: Rudyard Kipling’s Kim and Gita Mehta’s A River Sutra.” In A. L. McLeod, ed., The Literature of the Indian Diaspora: Essays in Criticism. New Delhi: Sterling, 2000.

Memmi, Albert (1920–) novelist

Albert Memmi was born in the Jewish quarter of Tunis, Tunisia. His father was a Jewish-Italian skilled saddler, and his mother was a Berber (a member of the non-Arab minority of North Africa). When Memmi was four years old, he went to rabbinical school and studied there for three years. In 1927, he attended the school of the Alliance Israélite Universelle in the rue Malta Srira in Tunis. Memmi would often help his father in his workshop where he listened to stories told by an old family friend. While attending school, Memmi was actively involved with local Jewish youth groups; this strongly influenced his perceptions, which would later surface in his writings, especially those relating to colonial issues. Memmi graduated from the Lycée Carnot in 1939 and was awarded the honor prize in philosophy. From 1941 to 1942, he studied philosophy at the University of Algiers. After the invasion of France by Nazi Germany when anti-Semitic laws were implemented by the collaborationist Vichy government of France, Memmi was expelled from the university and sent to a forced labor camp until 1945. After World War II, he moved to Paris and continued his studies at the Sorbonne. After Tunisia gained full independence, Memmi settled in Paris, where he took on various professorial positions. He retired from teaching in 1987.

Memmi's works were heavily influenced by the political and social situations that shaped his life, and his dual position as a member of the French educated elite as an impoverished and marginalized Jew also influenced his writings. In his first novel, La Statue de sel (The Pillar of Salt, 1953), Memmi's main protagonist, Mordecai, pours out his despair and sorrow. He is plagued by poverty and solitude, living as an estranged "outsider" who tries to make sense of his existence in a foreign land. Memmi's political views, his sociological training, and his own experiences, especially during World War II, allow him to discuss and explore the complexity of colonialism, particularly in his 1957 work, The Colonizer and the Colonized, in which he examines the social and psychological foundations of the views held by the colonizer and the colonized. To Memmi, the two groups constitute a framework in which neither group can exist without the other: The colonizer and the colonized are interdependent, but each group is a complex organization.

Memmi's works clearly show his genius as one of the leading intellectuals in postcolonial theory and thinking. He wrote all of his works in French, but many have been translated and published in English.

Other Works by Albert Memmi

Dependence: A Sketch for a Portrait of the Dependent.

Translated by Philip A. Facey. Boston: Beacon, 1984.

Desert. Pueblo, Colo.: Passeggiata Press, 1992.

Jews and Arabs. Translated by Eleanor Levieux. Chicago: J. P. O'Hara, 1975.

The Liberation of the Jew. Translated by Judy Hyun. New York: Viking Press, 1966.

Racism. Translated by Kwame Anthony Appiah. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1999.

The Scorpion. Translated by Eleanor Levieux. New York: Orion, 1971.

A Work about Albert Memmi

Roumani, Judith. Albert Memmi. Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1987.

Menchú, Rigoberta (1959–) memoirist
Rigoberta Menchú was born in the village of Usopanadan in the western highlands of Guatemala to Vicente Menchú, a Quiche Maya Indian and an organizer of the Committee of Peasant Unity, and Juana Menchú Tum, also a Quiche Indian. She began to work at age five to help her mother pick coffee beans. At age nine, she was helping her father hoe and plant maize, and at 12, she joined in the communal work of her people by participating in the harvesting of maize. By then, her eldest and youngest brothers had died, the former from having breathed in the fumes of pesticide that had been sprayed at the farm where he worked, and the latter from malnutrition.

At age 13, Menchú, who was eager to learn to read and speak Spanish, the language of her oppressors, decided to accept a position as a maid in the distant capital. The exploitation she experienced as a maid, as well as her father's imprisonment at this time for his efforts at organizing against the landowners who were intent on depriving the Quiche Indians of their land, contributed to her later transformation into a leader of her people. Menchú's political activism began when she was still a teenager, involving herself in social reform through the Catholic church, the women's rights movement, and a local guerrilla organization. In 1979, she joined the Committee of Peasant Unity (CUC), as her father had recently done. Yet, it was not until the Guatemalan army brutally killed her father, her brother, and her mother in separate incidents in 1980 and 1981 that she became prominent in the CUC. Aware of the horrendous torture each of her family members received before being burned to death, Menchú was forced to go into hiding in 1981, first in Guatemala then in Mexico.

Since then, Menchú has dedicated her life to resisting oppression in Guatemala and fighting for the rights of all its Indian peasant groups. She was one of the founders of the United Representation of the Guatemalan Opposition (RUOG) in 1982, and the following year, she recounted the story of her life and the ways of her people to the anthropologist, Elisabeth Burgos-Debray, who proceeded to transcribe the tapes and edit them into the internationally known book, I, Rigoberta Menchú (1983), which was translated into English by Ann Wright and published in 1984. However, an unexpected controversy erupted in 1999 after anthropologist David Stoll raised questions concerning the authenticity of Menchú's autobiography in Rigoberta Menchú and the Story of All Poor Guatemalans. In response to Stoll's book, Arturo Arias edited The Rigoberta Menchú Controversy (2001), a compilation of the various newspaper reports, articles, and letters—including one by Stoll—written in response to this ongoing controversy.

After the publication of her autobiography, Menchú continued her activism, becoming a member of the National Committee of the CUC in 1986 and, in 1987, participating as the narrator of When the Mountains Tremble, a film protesting the suffering of the Maya people. Menchú was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1992 and, in 1996, became a Goodwill Ambassador for UNESCO.

Another Work by Rigoberta Menchú

Crossing Borders. Translated by Ann Wright. New York: Verso, 1998.

A Work about Rigoberta Menchú

Schulze, Julie. Rigoberta Menchú Tum: Champion of Human Rights. New York: John Gordon Burke, 1997.

Michaux, Henri (1899–1984) poet

An accomplished painter and poet, Henri Michaux was born on May 24 to a bourgeois family in Namur, Belgium. As a student, he was indifferent at best and held himself apart from his peers. He found comfort in art, languages, and literature, all of which helped him through World War II and the German occupation of Belgium.

Although Michaux attempted to write poetry while he was still in school, he concentrated mostly on reading everything from the works of the saints to avant-garde poetry. He considered entering the priesthood but instead followed the advice of his father and embarked on the study of medicine. Dissatisfied, he left to work as a sailor on a merchant vessel, disembarking only two days before the ship capsized. He returned to Belgium where, after a series of miserable jobs, he discovered the works of the Comte de LAUTREAMONT.

Inspired, Michaux moved to Paris, where he began to paint and secured a job in a publishing house while developing himself as a writer. After the death of his parents in 1929, he traveled extensively and became fascinated by Eastern religion. His writing career was firmly established due to favorable criticism from André GIDE. Among his best-known collections are My Properties (1929), a work that explores the imagination and consciousness, and Plume (1930), a comic exploration of self-identity.

Michaux married during World War II but lost his wife in a house fire. After this, he began to experiment with drugs. He became a French citizen in 1955, abandoned drugs, and began to focus his writing on the themes of drug addiction, human anguish, and despair; in Miserable Miracle (1956), for example, he details the journeys of the imagination as it searches for self-knowledge while under the influence of mescaline.

Michaux was admired by both the surrealists and the U.S. beat poets. Toward the end of his life, he turned more and more to Eastern meditation as he focused on the study of the human spirit. Michaux died on October 18, having contributed greatly to both the origins of the surrealist movement and U.S. beat literature.

Another Work by Henri Michaux

Tent Posts. Translated by Lynn Hoggard. Los Angeles: Sun and Moon Press, 1997.

A Work about Henri Michaux

Broome, Peter. Henri Michaux. London: Athlone Press, 1977.

Mickiewicz, Adam (1798–1855) poet, playwright

Adam Bernard Mickiewicz was born in Nowogródek, Poland. Regarded as one of the greatest Polish poets and activists for Polish independence, much of his past remains a mystery, including the possibility that he might have been of Jewish descent on his mother's side. Biographical data, particularly regarding his relationships with women and his interest in mysticism, were kept quiet during the years of Communist rule in Poland. Spirituality of any kind was looked on unfavorably, and much of Mickiewicz's history was deliberately hidden to maintain his flawless public image. After his death, Mickiewicz's son, Władysław, destroyed documents that might have negatively affected his father's public image. Mickiewicz's actions and writings, however, reveal not only a romantic poet and great artist but also a political activist. Mickiewicz's major poetic and dramatic works were written during a three-year period before his attention shifted to political writing.

Mickiewicz received a government-sponsored education in Polish literature and history. He made friends with many fellow students who were members of secret youth organizations. On graduating, he took a high-school teaching position in Kovno to repay his government scholarship, but when authorities discovered secret student organizations at the school, an investigation resulted in a six-month prison term and a five-year exile in Russia.

Mickiewicz's banishment had a positive influence on his career as a writer and activist. He befriended Russian poet Aleksandr PUSHKIN and traveled to Germany where he attended Hegel's lectures and met GOETHE. Hearing news of the November uprising in 1830, he attempted unsuccessfully to return to Poland. When the uprising failed, Mickiewicz, along with many other Polish artists, moved to France.

In Paris, he began to focus on political journalism, appealing to Polish emigrants to unite in the common cause. In 1839, he took a position as lecturer on Roman literature at the University of Lausanne and, in 1840, on Slavonic literatures at the Collège de France. He was suspended from his post in 1844 for his antichurch attitude and mystic or supernaturally oriented ideas.

Mickiewicz's poetry was first collected in two volumes called Vilna (1822–23) and reflected his love of Polish folklore and tradition, particularly folk songs and legends. This love is evident in his plays The Forefathers Eve (1823) and Grazyna (1825). Mickiewicz's poetic novel Konrad Wallenrod (1828) is based on the history of the Teutonic knights. His work always contains a sense of patriotism and a desire for Poland to one day regain its independence.

Mickiewicz was also a poet of prophecy, a trend held in high regard in Poland throughout the 18th and 19th centuries. He linked his patriotism and nationalism to mysticism and spirituality. Influenced by Andrzej Towiański, a known mystic, Mickiewicz came to believe that Israel was a fellow sufferer of Poland and that Poland was the "Christ" of all nations. He believed that the kingdom of God would prevail in the middle of the 19th century and that the chosen nations would be the Poles, French, and Jews. This commitment to Judaism is often linked to his mother's ancestry and is evident as well in his positive representation of Jewish characters such as Jankiel, the patriotic Jew in Pan Tadeusz (1834). Written while he was in exile, this epic poem, his last strictly poetic work, attempts to recapture the Poland of his childhood as an idealized place and time. After the publication of this work, Mickiewicz made what he referred to as a "moral decision" to commit himself to prophecy and political activism, viewing the writing of poetry as trivial in light of Poland's tragic political situation.

More than just a poet and playwright, Mickiewicz was a spiritual leader to the Polish nation. His writings provided hope to not only the people of his native Poland as they struggled under Russian, Prussian, and Austrian rule but also to his many fellow exiles in the emigré circles in Paris.

Other Works by Adam Mickiewicz

Forefathers. Translated by Count Potoki of Montalk.

London: Polish Cultural Foundation, 1968.

The Great Improvisation. Translated by Louise Varèse.

New York: Voyages, 1956.

Olzer, Krystyna, ed. Treasury of Love Poems by Adam Mickiewicz. New York: Hippocrene Books, 1998.

Works about Adam Mickiewicz

Gardner, Maria. Adam Mickiewicz, the National Poet of Poland. New York: Arno Press, 1971.

Welsh, David J. Adam Mickiewicz. Boston: Twayne, 1970.

Midang

See SO CHONG-JU.

Milosz, Czesław (1911–2005) poet, novelist

Czesław Milosz was born on June 30 in Seteksniai, Lithuania. Recipient of the Nobel Prize in literature in 1980, he is considered one of the leading figures of contemporary Polish poetry, though his works, like many of his contemporaries', were once banned in his native land.

Milosz received his early education in Roman Catholic schools. In 1917, at the start of the October Revolution, he left war-torn Russia to live with his grandparents in Szetejnie. He earned a law degree from King Stefan Batory University, where he became politically active, cofounding a leftist literary group called Zagary. On graduation, he began working for a Polish radio station but was ultimately fired from his position for associating with Jews.

Milosz's greatest early influence was his uncle, Oscar Milosz, a noted French Lithuanian metaphysical poet. He published his first collection of poetry, Poemat O Czasie (Poem in Frozen Time, 1933) at age 22. A second volume followed shortly thereafter, and in 1934 he received an award from the Union of Polish Writers for his poetry. World War II intervened and Milosz served as a radio operator. He returned home only to be captured in the Russian occupation of his city. He managed to escape to Poland where he joined the resistance in Warsaw.

Although he was ultimately exiled from Poland, Milosz became well known as a poet in literary circles but suffering greatly, however, from government censorship. He assembled an anthology of English and American poetry that he was not allowed to publish; in addition, so many changes were made to a screenplay he cowrote that he refused to allow his name to appear in the credits. In 1945, he joined the Polish diplomatic service, serving in New York and Washington. A year later, his works were banned in Poland, and the government withheld his passport in 1950 as a result of his leftist views and his critical stance against the Communist regime in Poland.

Milosz was allowed to leave Poland in 1951 to seek political asylum in Paris. He obtained refuge at "Kultura," a haven for exiled political writers and artists, with other influential Polish émigrés. Alone and financially destitute, he wrote The Captive Mind (1953), in which he harshly criticized Stalinism and "The vulnerability of the twentieth century mind . . . and its readiness to accept totalitarian terror for the sake of a hypothetical future" (Milosz). Although officially banned in Poland and viewed with much negativity by French left-wing intellectuals, the book was astoundingly successful. It was printed by Kultura's underground publishing house, and copies were shipped secretly to Poland.

For five years after the publication of The Captive Mind, Milosz did not produce any works. His exile left him feeling alone. He wrote his second novel Issa Valley (1955), which tells of childhood in Lithuania, as a means of reconnecting to his past. He was finally able to reunite with his family and, in 1960, moved once again, this time to the United States, where he took a post in Slavic languages and literature at the University of California at Berkeley.

In 1981, Milosz returned home for the first time since 1951. Martial law was declared, however, in December of that same year, and his works were once again banned in Poland. After winning the Nobel Prize, his recognition grew to the point that his poem You Who Wronged a Simple Man was used on Solidarity flyers and also inscribed on a monument to Gdansk shipyard workers who had been killed during the 1970 protests. Milosz continues to write and lecture in California and is still active in his support for the future of Solidarity in his native land.

Other Works by Czeslaw Milosz

Milosz's ABCs. Translated by Madeline G. Levine. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 2001.

Road-side Dog. Translated by Czeslaw Milosz and Robert Haas. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1998.

The History of Polish Literature. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1983.

A Work about Czeslaw Milosz

Nathan, Leonard, and Arthur Quinn. The Poet's Work: An Introduction to Czeslaw Milosz. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1991.

Miron, Gaston (1928–1996) poet

Gaston Miron was born in Sainte-Agathe-des-Monts, Québec. He is one of most famous contemporary Québécois poets and has played a significant role in fostering Québécois writing. He cofounded Hexagon, which he directed from 1953 to 1983, and he has lectured on Québécois writing and has read his work throughout Europe and North America.

Miron's poems are rich in rhythms, melodies, and evocative words; yet at the same time, they convey an impassioned militant independence. In 1954, he began his major poetic cycle with "Ago-nique Life," "Walk with Love," and "Bateche." Fragments of these works were eventually published in the early 1960s, and in the 1970s, university presses continued to publish collections of the cycle. Miron's work is today regularly reprinted, translated, and anthologized, reaching a wide and diverse audience. For his work as an editor and essayist, in addition to his work as a poet, he received numerous awards, including the Academy of Letters of Quebec Medal (which recognized Miron's role in celebrating Québécois culture). In 1995, he received an honorary doctorate from the University of Montreal. Miron is considered one of the most significant poets of Quebec.

Another Work by Gaston Miron

The March to Love: Selected Poems, Gaston Miron.

Edited and translated by Douglas J. Jones. Pittsburgh, Pa.: International Poetry Forum, 1986.

Mishima Yukio (Hiraoka Kimitake)

(1925–1970) novelist, short-story writer, playwright

Mishima Yukio was born in Tokyo to Hiraoka Azusa and Shizue Hashi. Shortly after his birth, Mishima's paternal grandmother, Natsuko, took him to raise. In accordance with his grandmother's wishes, he attended the elitist Gakushūin, a school founded to educate the imperial family. Mishima was a good student and displayed a talent for writing even while he was young.

While still at Gakushūin, he published his first prose work, A Forest in Full Bloom (1941), a historical novel. Mishima disclaimed this story as imitative of Austrian poet Rainer Maria RILKE, but critics received it favorably. Having made a literary entrance, Mishima widened his literary circles, becoming associated with the Japanese romantics.

As World War II raged, Mishima prepared himself to go to war. However, when he went for his final physical, he was misdiagnosed with tuberculosis. As a result, he sat out the war, working in a navy library, and was accepted to Tokyo Imperial University in 1944.

After World War II, the romantics were out of favor in a world dominated by the struggle to recover from the war. Mishima's work was regarded as too introspective, so he had difficulty publishing his stories. However, in 1946 he met KAWABATA Yasunari, who helped him publish two stories. The first of these—"The Middle Ages" (1946)—was a portrayal of the grief the historical figure Ashikaga Yoshimasa felt over the death of his son, Shogun Ashikaga Yoshihisa. The second story—"Cigarettes" (1946)—was based on Mishima's experiences at Gakushūin. The protagonist becomes a target of members of a rugby club when he reveals that he has joined the literary club. Shortly thereafter, Mishima received his degree from Tokyo Imperial University and went to work for the finance ministry. After less than a year, he left the ministry and joined a group of leftist writers, who helped him once again to publish his work.

In 1948, he published his first novel, Thieves, a story of love among a group of upper-class youth. The novel was not well received but demonstrated the development of a romantic style that reached its fulfillment in Mishima's next novel.

Confessions of a Mask (1949) established Mishima as a writer of merit. The story is about a man who struggles with a growing awareness of his homosexuality and attempts to throw off the mask of heterosexuality. In this novel, Mishima tackles for the first time the issue of false appearances, a theme that recurs in his later works.

Although Confessions of a Mask launched Mishima's career, the stories that followed were not of the same caliber. Two years passed before he published his next major work, Forbidden Colors, a novel that describes the homosexual subculture of Tokyo in the immediate postwar period.

In 1956, Mishima published his best-received work, The Temple of the Golden Pavilion. The story centers on a temple acolyte who is handicapped by a stutter. Frustrated by the inaccessibility of beauty, he decides to destroy the temple, a symbol of beauty, and burns it to the ground. This novel won Mishima the Yomiuri Prize for literature.

Mishima married Yōko Sugiyama, the daughter of a well-known painter, in 1958 and settled into a comfortable life. During this period his nationalistic beliefs began to resurface, and he wrote "Patriotism" (1956), a short story based on an attempted coup d'état by imperial army officers in 1936. "Patriotism" was the first in a series of stories that deal with characters who either betray or uphold ideals.

These nationalistic stories helped build to the climax of Mishima's life—his ritualistic suicide within the compound of Japan's Self-Defense Forces in Tokyo in protest of the demilitarization of Japan. On November 25, 1970, Mishima and three members of the militaristic group he organized, the Shield Society, took Gen. Kanetoshi Mashita hostage. After a publicized speech from a rooftop in which Mishima called for a return of the emperor to power, he retired into the building and committed seppuku (a ritualistic suicide using a sword).

Other Works by Yukio Mishima

After the Banquet. Translated by Donald Keene. New York: Knopf, 1963.

Madame de Sade. Translated by Donald Keene. New York: Grove Press, 1967.

The Sailor Who Fell from Grace with the Sea. Translated by John Nathan. New York: Knopf, 1965.

Works about Yukio Mishima

Nathan, John. Mishima: A Biography. Cambridge, Mass.: Da Capo Press, 2000.

Scott-Stokes, Henry. The Life and Death of Yukio Mishima. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1974.

Yourcenar, Marguerite. Mishima: A Vision of the Void. Translated by Alberto Manguel. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1986.

Miss Lou

See BENNETT, LOUISE.

Mistral, Gabriela (Lucila Godoy Alcayaga) (1889–1957) poet, essayist

Gabriela Mistral was born in a rural community in northern Chile to Jerónimo Godoy Villanueva (former schoolteacher, guitar player, and songwriter) and Petronila Alcayaga Rojas. As a child Mistral was falsely accused by her schoolmaster, also her godmother, of stealing paper from a supply cabinet. After the incident, she never returned to the local school and received most of her early education from her mother and an older sister. By age 15, she had completed her teacher training and had begun to teach reading and writing to Indian children and adults in remote villages.

In 1914, Mistral began to publish poems in various journals in Chile and overseas. It was at this time that she adopted her pseudonym as a tribute to two writers she admired: the Italian Gabriele D'ANNUNZIO and the Frenchman Frédéric Mistral. As she devoted much of her energies to her career as a school administrator, which she considered her real vocation, it was not until 1922 that she published a larger selection of her poems under the title Desolation. Her first book drew immediate praise from critics, other writers, and audiences. In it, the poet addressed many of the themes that would preoccupy her throughout her life: maternal affection, the joys and trials of love, the suffering of the poor. Her second book, Tenderness (1925), includes much of the children's verse that originally appeared in Desolation and that Mistral strove to develop as a genre in its own right. Felling (1938) represented a break from the style of her earlier works: While the poetry remains essentially simple, the stanzaic structure of poems in this and the last book Mistral published, Wine Press (1954), tends to be more variable and complex. It is the simplicity, emotive force, and subtle profundity of Mistral's poetry that make it so moving and unique. The poem "Mourning" from Wine Press begins, "In one single night there burst from my breast / the tree of mourning; it heightened and grew."

Later in life Mistral received international recognition as a poet, an educator, and an ambassador, and in 1945, she was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature. She is considered one of the most important figures in early 20th-century Chilean and Latin-American poetry, and her influence has proven extensive. Both as an educator and as a poet, she made poetry accessible to all classes of society and, in this way, has contributed directly and indirectly to much of the great poetry that has appeared in Chile and other Hispanic countries in the last several decades.

Other Works by Gabriela Mistral

Agosin, Marjorie, ed. A Gabriela Mistral Reader.

Translated by Maria Jacketti. Fredonia, N.Y.: White Pine Press, 1992.

Selected Poems. Translated and edited by Doris Dana. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1971.

Works about Gabriela Mistral

Arce de Vázquez, Margot. Gabriela Mistral: The Poet and Her Work. Translated by Helene Masslo Anderson. New York: New York University Press, 1964.

Fiol-Matta, Licia. A Queer Mother for the Nation: The State and Gabriela Mistral. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 2002.

Mistry, Rohinton (1952–) novelist

Rohinton Mistry was born in Bombay, India, and is of Parsi descent (a community exiled after the Islamic conquest of Iran and one of the smallest existing ethnic minorities in India). After his studies in mathematics and economics at Bombay University, Mistry left India and immigrated to Canada in 1975. He joined the University of Toronto, where he graduated with a bachelor's degree in English and philosophy. This blend of interests may explain the recurring commentary on class status that is an important theme in his works, which are strongly expressive of his upbringing in Bombay and Zoroastrian beliefs.

Mistry's future with writing was sealed after he won first prize in a writing contest held at the University of Toronto. Following this success, Mistry wrote two collections of short stories, later compiled together in Swimming Lessons and Other Stories from Feroz Shah Baag (1987). These works portray both the problems and tribulations of being a Bombay Parsi. Most of the characters are Bombay Parsis who are under pressure to find a balance between their split identities as Zoroastrian Parsis and Indian Parsis.

Mistry's first novel, Such a Long Journey (1991), is a continuation of these issues, and it won the Commonwealth Writers Prize. His novels are written in English but are saturated with a multilingual (English–Hindi–Parsi) colloquialism that is peculiar to Bombay city-talk. Mistry's characters are harmonious hybrids out of the clash between histories and communities. His second novel, A Fine Balance (1995), for example, traces the lives of four characters of different castes and religions who must defy social, even individual, prejudices to help each other survive the 1947 partition of India and Pakistan.

Unlike other Indian authors living abroad who, because of distance or exile from India, write about problems surrounding migration or postcolonial subjectivity (see POSTCOLONIALISM), Mistry's works are remarkably free of these perspectives. The India of his books is equally recognizable to Indian readers for its authenticity as it is rewarding to an international audience that has little opportunity to read Parsi authors in English.

Another Work by Rohinton Mistry

The Tales of Ferozsha Baag. London: Faber, 1992.

A Work about Rohinton Mistry

Dodiya, Jaydipsing, ed. The Fiction of Rohinton Mistry: Critical Studies. London: Sangam, 1998.

Mo Yan (Guan Moye) (1956–) short-story writer, novelist

Mo Yan was born on February 17 in Gaomi township in China's Shandong province, a poor rural community. He often went without food and clothing in the harsh northern climate. Like most young people of his generation, he joined the People's Liberation Army (PLA) in 1976, at age 20, serving as a police commissar and a propaganda officer. He also began writing, publishing his first story, "Rain Falling Thick and Fast in the Spring Night," in 1981.

Mo Yan often describes his writing as an outgrowth of the extreme poverty and isolation of his childhood, as well as of his family's strong oral tradition. He chose an ironic pen name that belied his desire to express himself (Mo Yan means, "don't speak"). In 1986, he graduated from the PLA's Armed Forces Cultural Academy's literature department and joined the Chinese Writers Association. By then, he had completed his first book of stories, The Crystal Carrot (1986). He also finished Red Sorghum (1987), his best-known work, which addresses the plight of China's rural poor while describing an unusual love story set among the sorghum fields of his hometown. Taking place during the Japanese occupation of China, Red Sorghum contains patriotic themes. Zhang Yimou's film version won the top prize at the Berlin Film Festival in 1987.

Mo Yan's second novel, The Garlic Ballads (1987), addresses corrupt practices by Chinese officials. He writes in World Literature Today that it is "a book about hunger, and it is a book about rage." His third novel, The Republic of Wine, is both an examination of greed and a reflection upon Mo Yan's own struggles with alcoholism.

Mo Yan's writings are vividly rendered and are often exceedingly graphic in their portrayal of human excess, desire, decadence, and waste. However, his compassion for the Chinese peasant is always present. Most criticisms of Mo Yan's works are aimed at the continuation of patriarchal themes in his work.

Mo Yan remained an employee of the PLA until 1997 when he joined the editorial staff of the Beijing Procuratorial Daily. His latest book of short stories, Shifu, You'll Do Anything for a Laugh, was published in English in 2001; the English translation of his novel Big Breasts and Wide Hips (2003) is forthcoming. He lives in Beijing.

Another Work by Mo Yan

“My American Books.” In World Literature Today 74:3 (Summer 2000).

Works about Mo Yan

Goldblatt, Howard. “‘The Saturnicon’: Forbidden Food of Mo Yan.” In World Literature Today 74:3 (Summer 2000).

Inge, M. Thomas. “Mo Yan through Western Eyes.” In World Literature Today 74:3 (Summer 2000).

Wang, David Der-Wei. “The Literary World of Mo Yan.” In World Literature Today 74:3 (Summer 2000).

modernism

The term modernism generally refers to the literary and cultural movements associated with the early part of the 20th century from the start of World War I in 1914 to the start of World War II, though there are claims that it began in the middle of the 19th century with the publication of BAUDELAIRE’s Les Fleurs du mal and FLAUBERT’s Madame Bovary in 1857, as a response to urbanization, the increasing commodification of life, and the devaluation of art. The modernist movement in literature was created by a change in the way writers looked at the world around them. Influenced by the horrors of World War I and the rise in societal materialism, as well as socioeconomic and religious suppression, these writers’ perceptions, not only of the world as a whole but also of humanity’s place in that world shifted radically. They needed new ways to express their shifting perceptions.

Modernist writers experimented, often radically, with form. In poetry, formalized rhymes and meters became free verse. Novelists began to write more loosely, for example, forsaking a logical sequence of thoughts for a stream-of-consciousness style. In particular, the conventions of REALISM were discarded in favor of distorted time sequences and collages of imagery. These new forms and styles were often complex and posed a challenge to readers, who then had to struggle to find their own positions relative to the fragmented nature of the works. This creation of a feeling of isolation and dislocation in the reader was one of the main ideas behind modernism.

Modernist writers wanted their readers to think differently about the cultural and political changes occurring throughout Europe and America at the start of the 20th century. The horrors of World War I as well as the discovery of hidden forces motivating and governing human behavior (made by thinkers such as Karl Marx, Sigmund FREUD, and Friedrich NIETZSCHE) led to a search for hidden meanings elsewhere in society. There was also a shift towards mysticism as an alternative to traditional ideology.

A widespread loss of confidence in the concept of identity was also foremost among the philosophical questions that plagued modernist writers. Longstanding scientific beliefs about the origin of humanity were challenged. The industrialization and mechanization of society was rapidly displacing people from their jobs. Christianity was becoming widely associated with capitalism and with an oppressive, often hypocritical, view of morality. At the same time, the critical study of biblical texts and the rising popularity of Darwin’s theory of evolution gave rise to further religious challenge. Finally, a growing awareness of other cultures also influenced modernist concepts and world views, leading to changes in the perception of reality, which began to seem like an external concept rather than an innate one.

Like many other eras of social and political upheaval, the early 20th century found its expression through the arts, with modernism at the heart of that ideology. World War II brought a new period of social change, thus marking the end of this particular movement and paving the way for other trends.

Latin-American Modernism

Modernismo, or Latin-American modernism, was a mostly poetic literary movement, distinct from European and American modernism, that began at the end of the 19th century and lasted until the end of World War I. It resembles French SYMBOLISM and borrowed extensively from the ideas of Charles BAUDELAIRE, especially those concerning art for art's sake.

Modernism rose in a cultural framework defined by a disillusionment with ROMANTICISM and a desire for a renewal of spiritual ideals. Its central figure is poet Rubén DARÍO, who, in the 1880s, revitalized Latin-American poetry through his unique diction and his upholding of artistic beauty as life's ultimate ideal.

The modernist poem valued sensations over ideas. This was a revolutionary position in Latin America where, up until that time, most poetry had been either didactic or sentimental. Modernist writers also employed a collection of symbols, borrowed from the French and from antiquity, to represent their ideas in a more visceral fashion. The swan was the most prominent of these symbols. White and graceful, it was a symbol of ideal beauty; at the same time, its neck—hooked in the form of a question mark—represented the doubts of modern humanity.

The erotic, which earlier Latin-American writers had avoided, was embraced by modernists. The sensual aspects of love were celebrated, and erotic passion was equated with the artist's desire to create.

The modernists proposed that artists were in contact with a higher being and were able to unlock life's mysteries by the powers of art. To this end, they concentrated a great deal of effort on developing formal virtuosity and inventing new kinds of versification.

The high modernism of Darío and his followers, with its French influences, was a highly aestheticized movement, cosmopolitan, and not tied to national or patriotic issues. Modernism took a different turn in Brazil, where writers such as Mario de Andrade (1893–1945) and Oswald de Andrade (1890–1954) sought to create a new nation by assimilating the eclectic influences of its history, including indigenous and African cultures, in a new tapestry of national identity. Avant-garde movements in Nicaragua, Mexico, and Cuba also incorporated indigenous and African-based popular cultures.

The modernist movement, and Darío in particular, prepared the way for such poets as Pablo NERUDA and Octavio PAZ. It is important to note, however, that modernists had not yet completely accepted the idea of a world without absolute values and meanings as their 20th-century descendants would. Their poetry was rigorously structured in imitation of their conception of reality. It remained logical and was essentially neoclassical in its ambitions. Unlike their descendants, modernists reacted to the uncertainty of the world by trying to create an art form that reassured them that a moral order could exist. As the 20th century progressed this idea became more and more untenable.

Chinese Modernism

Modernism in China had a more progressive meaning than in Europe and Latin America. Its beginnings can be dated to 1899, when Liang Qichao (Liang Ch'i-ch'ao) (1873–1929), a leading intellectual, called for a "revolution in poetry" and the overthrow of traditional literature, which was written in a formal literary language. He advocated the use of both old and new vernacular mixed with literary Chinese. Other writers, such as Huang Zunxian (Huang Tsun-hsien) (1848–1905), advocated further reforms, such as the addition of colloquial vocabulary and references to modern life in poetry. These reforms were augmented by an increased number of translations of foreign works that had a modernity all their own.

By 1916, despite China's political chaos, writers found unprecedented freedom to experiment and modernize. The decade saw the birth of many literary journals. One of the most influential was Chen Duxiu's New Youth, which he founded in 1915 and which served as a focal point in the modernist movement. Chen Duxiu blamed the Confucian classics, which formed the foundation of Chinese literary tradition, for China's inability to modernize.

1917 marks a milestone in the development of China's literary modernism: In January, Chen Duxiu published HU SHIH's "Some Tentative Suggestions for the Reform of Chinese Literature.” Its suggestions were indeed modest, but the article was held up as a modernist manifesto. Hu Shih advised against the use of clichés and advocated timeliness in topics, but the most important innovation he urged was to write in the Chinese vernacular language, known as baihua, that is, to use the national language to create a national literature. Hu Shih insisted that the use of a “dead” language produced a “dead” literature.

Hu Shih’s article took the literary world by storm. By the time that the second beginning of modernism rolled around on May 4, 1919, experiments in baihua literature were already underway. Hu Shih published several baihua poems in January 1918, and in May, LU Xun published what is regarded as the first Chinese modernist short story, “Diary of a Madman.” A vicious satire that attacks the old Chinese morality, the story is about a paranoid man who suspects all of conspiring to kill and eat him.

The political climate in China urged further change in its literature. After World War I, the 1919 Treaty of Versailles awarded parts of China in concession to Japan. This outraged the Chinese people, and many began to turn their attention to China’s weaknesses in the new world and to mobilize in protest. A demonstration on May 4, 1919, drew thousands, including many students and scholars. The task of rectifying China’s humiliation instilled literary modernism with a sense of political urgency; writers committed to writing with a cause—that of national pride.

Some of the main themes of modernism were to write in an accessible and truthful language (baihua), to think and write critically as a means for change in society and government, to celebrate individualism, and to experiment with new forms. The short story rose to prominence as a vehicle for modernism. The May Fourth era had begun, and it was a time of great productivity, openness to foreign literature and ideas, and a deep commitment to social change. Writers such as DING LING used modernism to explore modern ideas, such as feminist independence.

Eventually, the May Fourth era gave way to the ascendancy of SOCIALIST REALISM under the Communist regime. Modernism experienced a revival after the easing of restrictions in the 1970s and 1980s, and it is still currently as much the subject of examination and debate in China as is POST-MODERNISM, as Chinese writers reexamine history through literary innovation. Since the Cultural Revolution, modernism has focused on form, such as SYMBOLISM in poetry (as in the writing of BEI DAO) and the avant-garde in theater (as in the plays of Nobel laureate GAO Xingjian). Also, a number of writers have turned to explorations of MAGIC REALISM, satire, and stream-of-consciousness writing. Much of the writing that is done in China and in exile by Chinese writers continues the modernist experiment.

Works about Modernism

- Ellison, David Richard. Ethics and Aesthetics in Modernist Literature: From the Sublime to the Uncanny. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2001.
- Fekkema, Douwe, and Elrud Ibsch. Modernist Conjectures: A Mainstream in European Literature, 1910–1940. New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1988.
- Goldman, Merle, ed. Modern Chinese Literature in the May Fourth Era. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1985.
- Gross, John, ed. The Modern Movement: A TLS Companion. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1993.
- Larson, Wendy, and Anne Wedell-Wedellsborg. Inside Out: Modernism and Post-Modernism in Chinese Literary Culture. Aarhus, Denmark: Aarhus University Press, 1993.
- Lee, Leo Ou-fan. “Beyond Realism: Thoughts on Modernist Experiments in Contemporary Chinese Writing.” In Howard Goldblatt, ed., Worlds Apart: Recent Chinese Writing and its Audiences. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1990.
- Login Jade, Cathy. Rubén Darío and the Romantic Search for Unity: The Modernist Recourse to Esoteric Tradition. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1983.

Montale, Eugenio (1896–1981) poet

Winner of the 1975 Nobel Prize in literature, Eugenio Montale was born in Genoa, Italy. The youngest of five children born to Domenico Montale, an import businessman, Montale's formal education was cut short by poor health, but summers spent observing the harsh landscape surrounding his family's villa on the Ligurian Riviera soon affected the tone and vision of his poetry. He had originally aspired to a career as an opera singer, but a brief tour as an infantry officer during World War I caused him to set his plans aside.

Montale continued to read fervently, devouring the works of philosophers such as Benedetto Croce and Henri Bergson but also delighting in the classics of both Italian and French fiction. Returning from the war, he again began to sing, but the death of his voice teacher in 1923 caused him to abandon his desire to pursue an operatic career and to look instead toward a literary career.

In 1927, Montale moved to Florence where he secured employment with a publishing house before moving on, in 1928, to accept the position as director of the Gabinetto Viessesux research library. He worked primarily as a critic and is best known in this field for assisting James Joyce in promoting Italo SVEVO as an emerging Italian voice. At the same time, Montale also began to establish his own literary voice as a poet; he published his first collection of poems, Bones of the Cuttlefish (1925), in which he focused on the scenery of his childhood summers in Liguria. Subsequent collections, such as The Occasions (1939), became increasingly introspective and focused on personal emotions set against a background of current events.

In 1938, Montale, who had always vocally opposed fascism, was dismissed from his cultural position because of his refusal to join the Fascist Party. He withdrew from public circles and ceased to write, working instead on translations of other writers. In particular, he became very much affected by T. S. ELIOT's poem The Waste Land. Montale believed that this work expressed succinctly the confusion and pessimism felt by people living in the time between World War I and World War II. Eliot, in turn, knew of Montale's works and translated his poem Arsenio into English at the same time that Montale was working on Eliot's piece. The two writers, separated by vast cultural and geographic distances, seemed to share a similar view of the world. Much of Montale's poetry, like Eliot's, focuses on the dilemma of everyday life and explores modern history, philosophy, and the nature and effect of love on the human condition.

Montale's third collection, The Storm and Other Poems (1956), engaged similar themes. His fourth collection, however, took on a slightly more autobiographical tone, containing elements drawn directly from the author's life. This work, Satura (1962; translated 1971), also experimented with dialogue and nontraditional form. Some of the poems are satirical in nature, particularly in their look at the empty promises made by certain proponents of ideologies.

In 1967, Montale was made a member for life in the Italian Senate. Shortly thereafter, in 1975, he was awarded the Nobel Prize. His two final works were both diaries written in verse. Diario del '71 e del '72 (1973) and Diario di Quattro Annini (1977) both express aspects of Montale's own life as an artist and as a human being. He died in Milan on September 12, four years after his final publication.

Another Work by Eugenio Montale

Collected Poems: 1920–1954. Translated by Jonathan Galassi. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1998.

A Work about Eugenio Montale

Ó Ceallacháin, Éanna. Eugenio Montale: The Poetry of Later Years. Oxford: Legenda, 2001.

Morante, Elsa (1918–1985) novelist

Elsa Morante, best known for her critically acclaimed novel La Storia (1974), was born in Rome. She left home at the age of 18 to live with an older man, her education incomplete. A year later, however, she met the writer Alberto MORAVIA, whom she married after a brief affair with a younger man. Moravia recognized Morante's natural gift as a writer and introduced her to many of the leading Italian writers and intellectuals of the time.

Morante's first published work, Il Gioco Segreto (1941), was a collection of short stories, several of which she had already published in magazines and journals. She followed this with a children's book, Le bellissime avventure di Cateri dalla trecciolina (1942). Although both works were well received, they received little critical attention. She spent the latter half of World War II hiding from fascist authorities in the countryside. This rural environment later played a great role in her fiction.

Late in the 1940s, William Weaver, an American translator, befriended both Morante and Moravia and introduced their works to an American audience. Simultaneously, Morante began to translate the works of writer Katherine Mansfield. Influenced by Mansfield's style, Morante wrote Menzogna e Sortilegio (1948; translated 1951) which, with the help of Weaver, was translated into English as House of Liars. The work presented what would come to be Morante's common themes of memory, dreams, and obsessions, and the novel gained immediate critical success.

Morante was never a prolific writer and was critical of her own work, much of which she destroyed. Her major work, La Storia (1974), translated into English as History, was set in Rome during and after World War II and dealt with the impact of historical events on the individual human beings who lived them. Each of the work's eight sections begins with an omniscient narrator who relates the events of the war as they are happening and then describes how these events affect the lives of individuals, both physically and psychologically. The novel was awarded the Viareggio Prize and was adapted to film in 1985.

Morante's final novel, Aracoeli (1982), a sensitive treatment of homosexuality, was also highly acclaimed. She continued to write, publishing essays and short stories, until her death in Rome.

Another Work by Elsa Morante

Arturo's Island: A Novel. Translated by Isabel Quigley. South Royalton, Vt.: Steerforth Press, 2002.

Moravia, Alberto (Alberto Pincherle)
(1907–1990) novelist, short-story writer, essayist, playwright

Alberto Moravia was born in Rome to Carlo Pincherle Moravia, an architect and painter, and Teresa DeMarsanich, a countess. At age 9, Moravia's health deteriorated when he became ill with coxitis, tuberculosis of the bone. After several months in bed, he recovered somewhat and was taken to Viareggio on vacation. In Life of Moravia (1990), a book he wrote with Alain Elkann, Moravia said, "In Viareggio, many things happened: I found out what sex was. More or less the basic experience I narrated in Agostino, though the situations and characters there are the fruit of invention."

Moravia published his first novel, The Time of Indifference, in 1929, which gained him recognition. This existentialist (see EXISTENTIALISM) novel is the story of siblings who explore the themes of alienation and a society that they perceive as shallow and false. Moravia won more praise for his two novels Agostino (1944) and Luca (1948). He fused the two works and published them in English under the title Two Adolescents. The story of Agostino, depicting themes of a teen's sexual exploration, loss of innocence, and disillusionment with the world, melds into the story of Luca, a 15-year-old boy, chronicling the angst and rebellion of the teen. It follows him through his sexual initiation, a grave illness, and ultimate redemption.

Another important theme in Moravia's novels is the condemnation of society's values. His works, such as The Wheel of Fortune (1935) and Two Women (1958), were censored and ultimately banned by the fascist government for their allegorical representation of capitalism and fascism as destroyers of innocence.

Moravia told an interviewer for The Guardian, "A writer has few themes if he is faithful to himself. He should not have much to say, but what he has to say he should give depth to and say in different ways." One recurring theme in Moravia's novels is the relationship between perception and reality, between one's internal thoughts and the outside world. Of his own reality, in terms of his writing, Moravia says, in Life of Moravia, “My books never satisfy me completely. I’ve always had the impression I could improve them, make them better.”

Although Moravia may not have been satisfied with his writing, his list of prestigious honors confirms his talent. Agostino was awarded the Corriere Lombardo Prize in 1945. In 1952, he won the Chevalier de la Légion d’Honneur and the Strega Prize.

Another Work by Alberto Moravia

The Voyeur: A Novel. Translated by Tim Parks. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1987.

A Work about Alberto Moravia

Peterson, Thomas E. Alberto Moravia. Boston: Twayne, 1996.

Mori Ōgai (Rintarō Mori) (1862–1922)

novelist, short-story writer, poet, essayist

Mori Ōgai was born in the remote town of Tsuwano to a physician during the last years of Japan’s feudal system. A gifted student, he was studying the Chinese classics by the age of five, and at 19, he graduated from Tokyo Imperial University with a medical degree and joined the army. The government sent Mori in 1884 to study medical hygiene at German universities. While there, he also read widely in Western literature. Shortly after his return, he served as a medical officer during the Sino-Japanese War (1894–95) and the Russo-Japanese War (1904–05). In 1907, he became surgeon-general. Mori retired from the army in 1916 to become director of the Imperial Household Museum and head of the Imperial Art Academy.

On his return from Germany, Mori wrote several novellas, including The Dancing Girl (1890), a story about an affair between a Japanese student and a German woman in Berlin. Although his early stories were romantic, Mori became increasingly interested in history as a medium for storytelling. The Wild Geese (1911–13), a romantic story of unrequited love, is relayed as an “old tale.” Then, four days after the ritualistic suicide of Gen. Maresuke Nogi, who loyally followed Emperor Meiji into death in 1912, Mori wrote “The Last Testament of Okitsu Yagoemon,” which examines the Confucian ideal of blind loyalty to one’s master. This short story created a new Japanese literary genre called rekishi shōsetsu (historical fiction), which Mori used to explore ideals and character in the rapidly changing society of early 20th-century Japan.

Mori’s renown stems from his medical accomplishments, complex prose style, and creation of a new genre, adopted by such writers as AKUTAGAWA Ryūnosuke and Yasushi Inoue. Mori also contributed to the modernization of Japanese theater by translating more than 50 European plays. For these accomplishments, he is regarded, along with NATSUME Sōseki, as one of the greatest influences on modern Japanese literature.

Other Works by Mori Ōgai

Dilworth, David, and J. Thomas Rimer, eds. Saiki Kōi and Other Stories. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1977.

Rimer, J. Thomas. Youth and Other Stories. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1994.

Works about Mori Ōgai

Marcus, Marvin. Paragons of the Ordinary: The Biographical Literature of Mori Ōgai. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1993.

Rimer, John Thomas. Mori Ōgai. Boston: Twayne, 1975.

Mrozek, Slawomir (1930–) playwright, short-story writer

Slawomir Mrozek was born in Borzecin, near Kraków, Poland. The son of a postal carrier, Mrozek first began his career as a journalist and cartoonist, writing satirical short articles that used wordplay and grotesque situations as a backdrop for their humor.

While writing for a Kraków newspaper, Mrozek began to write satirical short stories. The first collection of his works, Slon (1957; translated The Elephant, 1967) satirized various aspects of Polish communism in the 1960s. It was immediately successful both critically and publicly. The title story pokes fun at a small-town zoo which, when it is allocated government money to acquire an elephant, decides to save the government the money by inflating a large elephant-shaped balloon. They tell visitors that the elephant is very sluggish and that is why it hardly ever moves. Their scheme works until a gust of wind blows the elephant away. Other stories in the collection include a tale in which a lion refuses to take part in the eating of Christians because it knows that one day the Christians will rise to power and remember its actions. Another story focuses on an uncle who cannot tell his nephew what a giraffe looks like because he only reads books on marxism. When he looks through all of his Marxist books, he discovers they say nothing about giraffes, and the nephew, therefore, concludes that giraffes do not exist.

In the late 1950s, Mrozek left journalism to write plays. His first drama was The Police (1958). As a playwright, he is most noted for his subtle parody and his use of stylized language. His dramas present simple situations and human behaviors that are taken to the absurd. Mrozek's works belong to the style of theater known as the THEATRE OF THE ABSURD, which creates dramatic effect through distortion and parody.

In 1963, Mrozek emigrated to France and then to Mexico. His first full-length drama, Tango (1964; translated 1968), was first staged in 1964 and was eventually performed throughout Europe. The play presents a satirical psychological observation of totalitarianism.

In the 1990s, Mrozek focused his attention on war, the disintegration of morality, and a political system based on genocide. Love in Crimea (1994) focuses on the fall of the Russian empire; The Beautiful Sight examines the Balkan War from the point of view of two European tourists vacationing at the seaside in the former Yugoslavia who become annoyed by the interruption of the war; and The Reverends looks at religious hypocrisy.

Mrozek continues to write and to express his views about the tragedy still facing much of Eastern Europe in the 21st century. His works are influential both from their political standpoint and in their accurate representation of history in the making.

Another Work by Slawomir Mrozek

Striptease; Tango; Vatzlav: Three Plays by Slawomir Mrozek. New York: Grove, 1981.

A Work about Slawomir Mrozek

Stephan, Halina. Translating the Absurd: Drama and Prose of Slawomir Mrozek. Amsterdam: Rodopi, 1997.

Müller, Heiner (1929–1995) dramatist

Heiner Müller was born in Eppendorf, Saxony, into a working-class family. His father, a socialist, was beaten, arrested, and lost his job during the Nazi regime. Müller too became a socialist and was a civil servant in East Germany and later worked as a journalist and technical writer for the East German Writers' Union. He honed his skills as a dramatist working at the Maxim Gorki Theater in East Berlin in the late 1950s.

Müller wrote three plays with his wife, Inge Müller. The pair won the Heinrich MANN Prize in 1959. Their collaborative work Der Lohndrucker (The Wage Shark, 1957) was a critique of working conditions in East Germany. Because the Müllers refused to whitewash negative aspects of the socialist state, their own government disapproved of their plays, but their works were more successful in the West. After the government forced Müller to abandon contemporary subjects, he began to write adaptations of classical works in the 1960s; however, he added his own interpretations to the plays of Sophocles, Shakespeare, and the Soviet dramatist Mikhail SHOLOKHOV. These adaptations finally brought Müller fame in East Germany: He won the prestigious BÜCHNER Prize in 1985.

Müller's writing reflects a strong influence from Bertolt BRECHT. Although his dialectical dramas elicited official disapproval in East Germany, Müller's work with classic dramas earned him widespread acclaim. His biographer Jonathon Kalb notes in The Theater of Heiner Müller (1984) that Müller saw "that overvaluation of originality, the bourgeois-era cult of the absolutely new, was a factor in the devaluation of history (in the West and East), and responded with a string of texts that refused to treat originality with proper capitalistic seriousness." He is also known for combining lyrical prose with poetry to create language in his plays. Müller frequently depicted the individual's struggle with society, and his works address the causes of late 20th-century German angst.

Another Work by Heiner Müller

A Heiner Müller Reader: Plays, Poetry, Prose. Edited and translated by Carl Weber. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2001.

A Work about Heiner Müller

Kalb, Jonathon. The Theater of Heiner Müller. Munich: C. H. Beck, 1984.

Munonye, John (1929–) novelist

John Munonye was born in Akokwa, Imo State, Nigeria. He was the fourth of seven children. Munonye's father, a farmer, worked hard to send him to Christian schools. He first completed his undergraduate education at the University of Ibadan before leaving for London to obtain his masters in education at the University of London's Institute of Education. Munonye returned to Nigeria in 1954 and worked as a teacher for three years. He was promoted to the positions of administrator and school inspector in 1958, and he became principal of the Advanced Teachers College in 1970.

Munonye's writings reflect the cultural and psychological conflict he experienced balancing traditional Igbo values and Western ideology. His themes consist of the predicament of the common person's struggle in a rapidly modernizing world, colonial experience, cultural conflict, family friction, and love. In The Oil Man of Obange (1971), for example, Munonye tells the tragic tale of a palm-oil seller's sacrifice for his children in colonial Nigeria. Jeri, the main protagonist, literally works himself to death to give his children a Western education. In The Only Son (1966), Munonye begins a trilogy that examines issues of religious differences and the generation gap between old and young people in Nigerian society.

Munonye's literary achievements tend to be overshadowed by the popularity of fellow Nigerian Chinua ACHEBE, whom he used as a model for his writings. Unlike Achebe, however, Munonye incorporates humor into his reflections of the somber realities of life in colonial Nigeria. Munonye is a member of the first generation of Nigerian writers to write about their pasts in the initial stages of Nigeria's independence. His writing represents a voice among many, which bespeaks a clear optimism tainted by apprehension.

Works about John Munonye

Lindfors, Bernth. Dem-Say: Interviews with Eight Nigerian Authors. Austin, Tex: African and Afro-American Studies and Research Center, 1974.

Nnolim, Charles E. "Structure and Theme in Munonye's The Oil Man of Obange." African Literature Today 12 (1982): 163–73.

Munro, Alice (1931–) novelist, short-story writer

Alice Munro was born Alice Laidlaw in Wingham, Ontario, to Robert Laidlaw and Ann Chamney. During the Depression, her father bred silver foxes. Munro began college at the University of Western Ontario but left in 1951 to marry James Munro. During the 1950s and 1960s, she privately wrote short stories. Her first collection, Dance of the Happy Shades, was published in 1968 and drew on her own experiences; for example, the story "Boys and Girls" begins, "My father was a fox farmer. That is, he raised silver foxes, in pens; and in the fall and early winter. . . ."

After the success of her first work, Munro continued publishing stories and novels. She writes “regional” fiction, realistic, domestic stories about ordinary people grounded in a particular region, Western Ontario; she was inspired by southern U.S. writers such as Eudora Welty. Her second work, Lives of Girls and Women (1971), is an episodic novel set in Jubilee, Ontario, and explores the emotional and imaginative development of the protagonist Del Jordan. Geoffrey Wolff of Time magazine noted the homespun realism of the work: “The book is a fiction for people who like to read brittle, yellow clips from newspapers published in towns where they never lived, who like to look through the snapshot albums of imperfect strangers.”

Who Do You Think You Are? (1978), considered Munro’s best work, is a collection of interrelated stories that follow the life of a character named Rose through childhood, college, marriage, and back to her childhood home. It explores the dark secrets underneath the surface of small-town life, such as incest and abuse: “He shakes her and hits her against the wall, he kicks her legs. She is incoherent, insane, shrieking. Forgive me! Oh please, forgive me!” One of Munro’s hallmarks is the coherence of her short story collections, as critic Ildiko de Papp Carrington notes: “Although eight of the ten stories in Who Do You Think You Are? were originally published separately, the collection constitutes an organic whole.” The collection was short listed for the BOOKER PRIZE. Munro’s latest collection of short stories, Hateship, Friendship, Courtship, Loveship, Marriage, continues her exploration of life in rural Ontario. Critic Beverly Rasperich contends that “the fictional world that Munro creates is an expanding, visionary location but at the same time always recognizably hers.”

Another work by Alice Munro

Selected Stories. New York: Knopf, 1996.

A Work about Alice Munro

Howells, Coral Ann. Alice Munro. New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1998.

Murakami Haruki (1949–) novelist, short-story writer

Murakami Haruki was born in Kyoto, Japan, to Murakami Chiaki and Miyuki, both teachers, who often discussed classical poetry and medieval war tales at home. Thus instilled with a love of literature, Murakami entered the drama program at Waseda University with the intention of becoming a scriptwriter. After graduating, Murakami, with his wife, Yōko, opened a prosperous jazz club called Peter Cat in Tokyo. Then in 1986, Murakami moved to Europe, where he lived for most of a decade.

Reputedly inspired by a baseball game he attended in 1978, Murakami began to write novels, publishing his first a year later. Hear the Wind Sing (1979) is a retrospective story based on bar conversations between the unnamed protagonist, boku (I), and his friend “the Rat.” The book won Gunzō magazine’s New Novelist Prize.

His next novels further developed the character of boku, an everyman who represents the inner workings of the mind. In 1985, Hard-Boiled Wonderland and the End of the World split the world of boku in two: the real and the fantastic. Murakami then spent two years at Princeton University where he researched his next two books, South of the Border, West of the Sun (1998) and The Wind-up Bird Chronicle (1997). Since the 1995 sarin gas attack on a Tokyo subway, Murakami has published two volumes of interviews with both the victims and the members of the religious sect that took responsibility for the attack.

Murakami is regarded as one of the first Japanese authors at ease with the Westernization of Japan, largely due to his incorporation of foreign words into his prose and his open portrayal of postwar Japan. He has won the Tanizaki Jun’ichirō Prize and the Yomiuri Literary Award.

Other Works by Murakami Haruki

The Elephant Vanishes. Translated by Alfred Birnbaum and Jay Rubin. New York: Vintage International, 1993.

A Wild Sheep Chase. Translated by Alfred Birnbaum. Tokyo: Kodansha International, 1989.

Works about Murakami Haruki

Aoki Tamotsu. "Murakami Haruki and Contemporary Japan." Translated by Matthew Strecher. In John W. Treat, ed., Contemporary Japan and Popular Culture. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1996.

Rubin, Jay. "Murakami Haruki's Two Poor Aunts Tell Everything They Know About Sheep, Wells, Unicorns, Proust, and Elephants." In Stephen Snyder and Philip Gabriel, eds., Ôe and Beyond: Fiction in Contemporary Japan. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1999.

Musil, Robert von Edler (1880–1942) novelist, playwright

Robert Musil was born in Klagenfurt, Austria, to Alfred Musil, a professor of engineering at the Technical University of Brunn and an arms manufacturer, and Hermine Musil. Robert Musil's childhood was difficult: His father was devoted to his career, and his mother was involved in an affair with Robert Musil's private tutor for many years. In elementary school, Musil had a nervous breakdown as a result of frequent family dramas at home. At the age of 12, he was sent away to a military academy by his father and, between 1898 and 1901, attended the Technical University of Brunn. Forced to study engineering by his domineering father, Musil finally revolted, left for Germany, and decided to study philosophy instead. In 1908, he received a doctorate in philosophy from the University of Berlin.

Musil began his writing career as a student at the University of Berlin. In 1906, he published his first novel, Young Torless, which was based on his experiences in the military academy. Although Musil's work was somewhat popular, he could not support himself by writing; from 1911 to 1914, he worked as a librarian in Vienna. He served in the Austrian army during World War I and, after being wounded, edited the army newspaper. After the war, Musil worked in various administrative capacities for the ministry of defense, but he lost his position and became a full-time writer and journalist in the 1920s.

After producing a number of short plays and satires, Musil concentrated on writing his major work, The Man Without Qualities (1930–43). This monumental novel describes the social, cultural, and political life during the last days of the Habsburg empire. In a style often compared to Marcel PROUST's, Musil focused on the emotional and intellectual development of the individual and concentrated on such themes as sexuality and survival. The attention that Musil devoted to this work led to the financial ruin of the family. Ulrich, the protagonist of the novel, a highly educated but psychologically immature man, desires to find his place in modern life. He undergoes a deep emotional transformation, marked by an almost psychologically incestuous relationship with his sister Agathe.

Married to a Jewish woman, Musil feared persecution by the Nazis and fled Austria for Switzerland in 1938. In Switzerland, he published a number of short essays; however, he remained an obscure writer. Robert Musil died in poverty and without due recognition. Most of his works have been rediscovered and published since his death. Today, Musil is considered one of the great writers of Austria. His works have been translated into more than 20 different languages.

Other Works by Robert Musil

Diaries, 1899–1941. Translated by Philip Payne. New York: Basic Books, 2000.

Five Women. Translated by Eithne Wilkins. New York: David R. Gordon, 1999.

Precision and Soul: Essays and Addresses. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1995.

A Work about Robert Musil

Jonsson, Stephen. Subject Without a Nation: Robert Musil and the History of Modern Identity. Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 2001.

Musset, Alfred de (1810–1857) poet, playwright

Best known for his poetry, Alfred de Musset was inspired by Shakespeare and a love affair with George SAND. He can also be credited as having written the first modern French dramas. Born in Paris to a distinguished family, Musset graduated with honors from Collège Henri IV and briefly pursued a career in medicine before a dislike of blood prompted him to first try painting and then, ultimately, writing.

He published his first work, the ballad A Dream, in 1828, which was followed a year later with his first collection of poetry, Contes d'Espagne et d'Italie (1830). The collection gained him the favor of Victor HUGO and earned his acceptance into the circle of ROMANTIC poets. In 1830, Musset was asked to write for the stage, but his first play, La Nuit vénitienne (A Venetian Night, 1830), was not successful.

In 1833, Musset met and began a passionate affair with poet George Sand. His autobiographical piece, La Confession d'un enfant du siècle (Confession of a Child of the Century, 1835), details their relationship. She abandoned him, however, after falling in love with another man during a trip to Venice. Returning to France alone and in despair, Musset used his feelings to produce some of his greatest theatrical works, including Lorenzaccio (1834) and No Trifling With Love (1834). He has been praised for his multidimensional female characters and his in-depth understanding of love. His works are commonly compared, in terms of popularity in France, to those of RACINE and MOLIÈRE.

Poor health began to haunt Musset in the 1840s in the form of a heart ailment that came to be referred to by scientists as Musset's symptom. Aggravated by excessive drinking and the depression caused by several failed affairs, his health caused a decline in his literary output. He spent the last two years of his life confined to his apartment and died on May 2.

Another Work by Alfred de Musset

Fantasio and Other Plays. Translated by Michael Feingold. New York: Theatre Communications Group, 1993.

A Work about Alfred de Musset

Bishop, Lloyd. The Poetry of Alfred Musset: Styles and Genres. New York: Lang, 1997.

N

Nabokov, Vladimir (1899–1977) novelist, dramatist, literary critic, translator, poet

Vladimir Vladimirovich Nabokov was born in St. Petersburg, Russia, into a wealthy, aristocratic family. His father, Vladimir Dmitrievich Nabokov, was a prominent liberal politician; his mother, Elena Ivanovna Nabokova, was a descendant of a wealthy, noble family. Nabokov learned French and English from various tutors and learned to read and write English before his native Russian. He described himself as “a perfectly normal trilingual child in a family with a large library.” Nabokov’s father served in the first Duma (the parliamentary body of Russia) and later held a post in the Provisional Government. After the Communists took control of the government, Nabokov’s family left Russia in 1919 and temporarily settled in England. Nabokov’s mother sold her jewels to finance his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, which he attended from 1919 to 1922. Nabokov graduated with honors from Cambridge, receiving a degree in Russian and French. The Nabokov family then moved to Berlin, Germany, when Nabokov’s father accepted a position as the editor of the Russian newspaper. Nabokov’s father was assassinated by right-wing monarchists in 1922.

Between 1922 and 1923, Nabokov published two collections of poetry and, in 1924, produced his first play, The Tragedy of Mr. Morn. In 1925, he married Vera Slonim. Although he worked in several genres of literature, Nabokov particularly excelled in fiction. In 1926, Mary, his first novel, was published in Berlin; two years later, he published his second novel King, Queen, Knave. Between 1929 and 1938, Nabokov published four novels and a collection of short stories.

The year 1938 was crucial for Nabokov’s literary career. After moving to France, Nabokov decided he would try to write a novel in English; his first such work was The Real Life of Sebastian Knight (1914), a “biography” of a fictional writer, narrated by his brother.

In 1940, Nabokov emigrated to the United States, narrowly escaping the advancing Nazi troops. Between 1941 and 1959, Nabokov taught creative writing, literature, and Russian at Wellesley College, Stanford, Harvard, and Cornell. During the 1940s, he published short stories in The New Yorker and a scholarly work on Nikolai GOGOL. During these years, Nabokov’s output of fiction was relatively small, partly because he was still adjusting to writing in English. In 1951, he published a memoir, Conclusive Evidence.

Nabokov's most famous novel, Lolita, was written during the early 1950s and published in France in 1955. The novel explores the psychological ramifications of a man's love affair with his 12-year-old stepdaughter. Although a number of critics immediately recognized the artistic virtues of the novel, it was banned in France in 1956 for its subject matter. When Lolita was finally published in the United States, it remained on The New York Times best-seller list for six months. The novel was adapted into film by Stanley Kubrick in 1962 and again by Adrian Lyne in 1997. Lolita remains one of the most powerful novels of 20th-century American literature. As critic Charles Rolo said in The Atlantic Monthly in 1958, Lolita is "an assertion of the power of the comic spirit to wrest delight and truth from the most outlandish materials."

In 1961, Nabokov moved to Montreux, Switzerland, where he remained until his death in 1977. During the 1960s and 1970s, he continued to write novels and translated his earlier works from Russian to English. One of the main criticisms of his work was its seeming lack of concern for social issues. Nabokov did not refute such criticism: "I have never been interested in what is called the literature of social comment." Indeed, his work comments on the experience of the individual, often exploring the character's psychological dimensions. "The true conflict is not between the characters in the novel, but between author and reader," he maintained. By the time of his death, Nabokov had established a worldwide reputation as a great writer and scholar.

Other Works by Vladimir Nabokov

Ada. New York: Vintage Press, 1990.

Despair. New York: Vintage Press, 1989.

Pale Fire. New York: Vintage Press, 1989.

Speak, Memory: An Autobiography Revisited. New York: Vintage Press, 1989.

A Work about Vladimir Nabokov

Cornwell, Neil. Vladimir Nabokov. Plymouth, U.K.: Northcote House Publishers, 1999.

Naidu, Sarojini (1879–1949) poet

Sarojini Naidu was born in Hyderabad, India, into an extremely Westernized family, which gave her the opportunity to pursue a lifestyle and education uncommon to most women of her time. Naidu wrote only in English and started writing poetry as a young girl. She went to England in 1895 to study at King's College, London, and returned to India in 1898.

Naidu's poetry was originally very well received in England because it portrayed an India with which Victorian England was familiar. Her poems were romantic portrayals of an aesthetically appealing, nonpolitical India that was friendly to its colonizers, the British, especially when Britain's rule was threatened.

As Naidu developed as a poet and became more involved in the political activities of the Indian National Congress Party, her poetry also changed. The Golden Threshold (1905), for example, presents a collage of poems about Indian life as seen through the native eye. The poems focus strongly on the social conditions of the nation under colonial rule. Because these poems were such a departure from Naidu's earlier works, which showed the influence of great Western poets such as Wordsworth and Keats, Naidu was called "the nightingale of India," an epithet given her by Mohandas GANDHI.

By her third and final collection of lyric verse, Naidu was already beginning to spend less time writing poetry and more time being actively involved in politics. She was a close friend of Gandhi and was often the only woman who would accompany him on his many political marches and rallies. Such involvement on her part also made her a powerful figure for women's causes. One of her contributions was working to abolish pardah, a social rule that forced women to seclude themselves inside homes and wear clothing that completely covered their bodies.

Naidu dedicated her last volume, The Broken Wing (1915–16), to India's patriotic freedom fighters. This work completed her transformation from a poetess of remarkable Western education and romantic sensitivity to one whose only concern was to encourage the patriotic zealotry of her time. She was the first Indian woman to become the president of the Indian National Congress in 1925, and in 1947, she was made governor of the state of Uttar Pradesh.

Other Works by Sarojini Naidu

The Bird of Time; Songs of Life, Death and the Spring.

New York: J. Lane Company, 1916.

The Sceptred Flute: Songs of India. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co., 1923.

A Work about Sarojini Naidu

Naravane, Vishwanath S. Sarojini Naidu: An Introduction to Her Life, Work, and Poetry. New Delhi: Orient Longman Ltd., 1996.

Naipaul, V(idiadharr) S(urajprasadd)

(1932–) novelist, travel writer, essayist

Born in Chaguanas, Trinidad, V. S. Naipaul is descended from Hindu Indians. His grandfather worked in a sugarcane plantation, and his father, Seepersad, was a journalist and short-story writer. As a child, Naipaul spent most of his time in the matriarchal Tiwari clan house in Chaguanas or in the streets of Port of Spain. He attended Queen's Royal College, Trinidad, and University College, Oxford, where he studied English literature.

After graduation, Naipaul stayed in England and worked for the BBC and the New Statesman, a literary journal. Inspired by his father, Naipaul began to write about his childhood experiences. Multiple publications followed, and selections of his published reviews and articles appear in The Overcrowded Barracoon (1972) and The Return of Eva Peron with The Killings in Trinidad (1980).

Western critics positively reviewed Naipaul's first novels, but others, especially those from the Caribbean and developing countries, vehemently criticized the treatment of colonial people in his writings. His first three novels—The Mystic Masseur (1957), The Suffrage of Elvira (1958), and Miguel Street (1957) which Naipaul wrote first but published last—ironically and satirically portray the absurdities of Trinidadian life while exploring the lives of East Indian community members.

Critical Analysis

A House for Mr. Biswas (1961), Naipaul's fourth work, earned substantially more recognition than his earlier novels. It focuses on Biswas, a sensitive man who is loosely modeled after Naipaul's father, who struggles with displacement, disorder, and alienation to establish his own identity. The hierarchical relations in Biswas's house symbolize and comment on colonial relationships. Many of Naipaul's subsequent novels also explore themes of alienation as his characters strive to integrate cultural tensions, especially those between native and Western-colonial traditions and influences.

The same year Naipaul published A House for Mr. Biswas, he received a grant from the Trinidad government to travel in the Caribbean. Extensive travel followed in the 1960s and early 1970s. His excursions to countries including Uganda, Argentina, Iran, Pakistan, Malaysia, and the United States informed his writing. Mr. Stone and the Knight's Companion (1963), which takes place in England, was Naipaul's first novel set outside the West Indian context.

More serious place-specific cultural studies replaced the more comedic aspects of Naipaul's earlier novels. The three short stories in In a Free State (1971), which won the Booker Prize in 1971, take place in different countries. Naipaul uses a novella as well as travel-diary excerpts in these three stories to explore individual and universal freedom. The novel Guerrillas (1975) follows an uprising in the Caribbean, and A Bend in the River (1979), which has been compared to Joseph Conrad's Heart of Darkness, examines the future of a newly independent state in Central Africa. The introspective The Enigma of Arrival (1979) juxtaposes autobiography and fiction to construct an almost anthropological exploration of the life of a writer of Caribbean origin living in rural England.

Although some praised Naipaul's complex and sometimes scathing cultural analyses of his journeys as honest and visionary, others criticized them as pessimistic portrayals of the developing world, as seen in two of his travel books on India: An Area of Darkness (1964) and India: A Wounded Civilisation (1977). Other nonfiction works include the more widely accepted India: A Million Mutinies Now (1990), The Middle Passage: Impressions of Five Societies—British, French, and Dutch—in the West Indies (1963), and Among the Believers: An Islamic Journey (1989), which critically assesses Muslim fundamentalists in non-Arab countries.

The Mimic Men, published in 1967, is considered by critics to be Naipaul's best novel. It traces the life of Ralph Singh, a politician in early retirement who explains his own position: "The career of the colonial politician is short and ends brutally. We lack order. Above all, we lack power, and we do not understand that we lack power." Set in the Caribbean island of Isabella and in England, the novel has generated many questions concerning authenticity, politics, and psychology.

After the publication of The Loss of El Dorado (1970), which describes Trinidad's colonial history, Naipaul returned to Trinidad. Dissatisfied, he went to England and began to blur fictional boundaries. As he wrote, "Fiction, which had once liberated me and enlightened me, now seemed to be pushing me toward being simpler than I really was." He explained this concept further in Reading and Writing: a Personal Account (2000): "So, as my world widened, beyond the immediate personal circumstances that bred fiction, and as my comprehension widened, the literary forms I practiced flowed together and supported one another; and I couldn't say that one form was higher than another." A Way in the World (1994), for instance, which contains nine thematically linked but segmented narratives, draws on the genres of fiction, history and memoirs, and documentary to address personal and sociopolitical issues.

Naipaul's distinctive incorporation of multiple genres in literary works has earned him the reputation of formal innovator. Themes of alienation, mistrust, and self-deception run through many of his works, but his latter works tend to embrace more than criticize.

In 1990, Naipaul, who has British citizenship, was knighted by Queen Elizabeth. After being a perennial nominee for the Nobel Prize in literature, Naipaul received the award in 2001. To quote Timothy F. Weiss, Naipaul, through an autobiographical art, has tapped experiences that have come to define aspects of people's lives in the colonial and postcolonial world. Spanning several decades, his works are about more than the problems of the developing world that are a deep concern running through every book; they are about a rapidly changing world order and a changing definition of home and belonging in that new order.

Other Works by V. S. Naipaul

Between Father and Son: Family Letters. New York: Vintage Books, 2001.

Half a Life. New York: Knopf, 2001.

"To a Young Writer." New Yorker (June 26–July 3 1995).

Works about V. S. Naipaul

Gupta, Suman. V. S. Naipaul. Plymouth, U.K.: Northcote House in Association with the British Council, 1999.

Khan, Md. Akhtar Jamal. V. S. Naipaul: a Critical Study. New Delhi: Creative Books, 1998.

King, Bruce. V. S. Naipaul. London: MacMillan, 1993.

Weiss, Timothy S. On the Margins: the Art of Exile in V. S. Naipaul. Amherst: University of Massachusetts Press, 1992.

Narayan, R(asipuram) K(ishnaswamy) (1906–2001) novelist, short-story writer

R. K. Narayan was born in Madras, India. His father was a teacher who was repositioned in various South Indian states, which meant that Narayan frequently changed schools. Though he was not a model student, education was an important part of growing up in the Narayan household. Narayan was the third of eight children; to relieve some of the burden of bringing up so many children, his father sent Narayan to live with his maternal grandmother in Madras.

Narayan has often claimed that listening to his grandmother's stories inspired his own love for storytelling. Because writing was not considered a worthwhile profession at the time, his family received his decision to become a writer with shock and dismay. The creative spirit is not exclusive to R. K. Narayan in his family: His brother, R. K. Laxman, is one of India's most famous and highly published cartoonists and has illustrated several of Narayan's books. Like Laxman, Narayan depicts India through the eyes of a character from an "older" world, one that is detached from the modern world and is constantly bewildered by its machinations.

Narayan proved to be resourceful through his writing from the very beginning. While working on his first book Swami and Friends (1935), he was able to support himself by contributing short stories to magazines. This book first introduces Narayan's Malgudi village and its inhabitants. This fictional world appears to be completely estranged from the outside world, and its isolation clearly brings out more clearly the emotional ties that keep this village community together.

When Narayan began to write, he was one of numerous writers who created a turning point in Indian literature. For the first time, Indian writers were writing only in English, and many of them were writing for a national and international audience. At a time when writing in English was considered politically incorrect and when Indian politics were the most appropriate theme, Narayan placed himself outside of these constraints. He chose to use both English (the only language in which he wrote) and India's rural settings to create a version of an Indian life that was relatively free from colonial politics. One of his most popular works, Malgudi Days (1942), for instance, borrows the Malgudi of Swami and Friends to explore the effects of Western influence through human relationships; it is also the name of a television series based on this collection of stories. The mythical village of Malgudi is set at the crossroads of an old India meeting a new one. These stories capture the image of the ordinary person amid simple surroundings to suggest an organic shift from a colonial India to an independent one. The central characters in The English Teacher (1945) and his story "Mithaiwalla" ("The Vendor of Sweets," 1967) are heroes set in this same transition.

The story "Mithaiwalla" focuses on the conflict that arises between a father and his son as they must learn how to understand their changing relationship without letting their differences create an emotional rift. In The English Teacher, a teacher's moral struggle against a decadent form of education is made more complicated by his growing responsibilities as a father. Also set in a small town, this novel explores the links between personal and social relationships. Being a good teacher, the protagonist learns, is contingent upon his maturity as a father and husband. The darker sides to Narayan's fiction are, however, always clothed in a humor that strives for frankness and compassion rather than judgment.

Narayan's novel The Guide (1958) won the Sahitya Akademi Award (India's highest literary award) and was made into a Hindi movie of the same name that has now become an Indian classic. It was the first Indian-English work to receive the award. In addition to writing fiction, Narayan interpreted and translated into English many of India's classic epics. His versions of The Mahabharata (1978) and The Ramayana (1972) made these texts available to new readers both in and outside India. Narayan is also known as the Grand Old Man of Indian English fiction.

Narayan won the Padma Bhushan (given in recognition of contributions to the nation) in 1964. In 1980, he was awarded the A. C. Benson Award by the Royal Society of Literature and made an Honorary Member of the American Academy Institute of Arts and Letters. In 1986, he joined Indian politics and became a member of Parliament; he was awarded this post for his contribution as an outstanding litterateur and held the position for six years.

Other Works by R. K. Narayan

The Financial Expert. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1995.

My Days: A Memoir. New York: HarperCollins, 1999.

A Work about R. K. Narayan

Kain, Geoffrey R., ed. R. K. Narayan: Contemporary Critical Perspectives. East Lansing: Michigan State University Press, 1993.

Natsume Kinosuke

See NATSUME SŌSEKI.

Natsume Sōseki (Natsume Kinosuke)

(1867–1916) novelist, short-story writer, essayist

Natsume Sōseki was born Natsume Kinosuke in Tokyo, Japan. He was adopted shortly after his birth but was returned to his family home at age nine. While still very young, he studied Chinese literature and haiku, venturing into English literature at Tokyo Imperial University. After graduation, he began to teach in public schools. A turning point came in 1900 when the government sent him to England to continue his study of English literature. When he returned, he became a lecturer at Tokyo Imperial University. However, he soon resigned his teaching position to take up writing full time for the Asahi Shimbun Newspaper in 1907. He died nine years later from a stomach ulcer.

Shortly after returning from England, Natsume began his career with the comic novel I Am a Cat (1905). The story portrays the antics of a cat that lives with a teacher, indirectly revealing the relationship of the teacher and his wife. Within the next two years, he produced a number of short stories and novels, including a perennial favorite of Japanese students called Botchan (1906). In this novel, Natsume created a lovably bumbling protagonist who faces a series of awkward situations.

Toward the end of his life, Natsume wrote what has become one of the most recognized novels of Japanese literature, Kokoro (1914). This psychological novel took up the issue of individualism in a country in the throes of modernization.

Natsume is considered, along with Ogai MORI, to be the father of MODERNISM in Japanese literature, largely because of his effective portrayal of intellectuals at the turn of the century. Natsume's early writing was by and large satirical, but as he began to address issues such as alienation and morality, he adopted a more serious and often pessimistic tone.

Other Works by Natsume Sōseki

Botchan. Translated by Alan Turney. Tokyo: Kodansha International, 1992.

Grass on the Wayside. Translated by Edwin McClellan. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, 1969.

The Miner. Translated by Jay Rubin. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1988.

The Wayfarer. Translated by Beongcheon Yu. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1967.

Works about Natsume Sōseki

Doi, Takeo. The Psychological World of Natsume Sōseki. Translated by William Jefferson Tyler. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1976.

Iijima, Takehisa, and James M. Vardaman Jr., eds. The World of Natsume Sōseki. Tokyo: Kinseido Ltd., 1987.

naturalism (1860–1900)

Naturalism is perhaps best described as a literary movement in which writers attempted to be true to reality, accurate in their representation of life, and methodical and nonjudgmental in their observations of the various phenomena of life. The French writer Émile ZOLA first used the term naturalism to explain the application of elements of the scientific method to the examination of all aspects of life. In his essay Le Roman expérimental (1880), Zola wrote that the novelist should approach the craft of writing in the same manner as the scientist approaches the study of nature.

Proponents of naturalism believe that both hereditary and environmental influences combine to determine human behavior. For a writer to depict life as it really is, the ultimate goal of naturalist literature, he or she must present characters whose motivations can be clearly understood based on the surrounding causes. In other words, Zola and those who followed him replaced the classical idea of fate as the major factor behind human circumstances with the more scientific concept of determinism in which human beings are responsible for their own actions. Thus, some, if not all, human values can be seen to proceed in direct relationship to situational needs such as food, water, and shelter, placed in combination with environmental, sociological and psychological factors. The literature of the naturalist school, therefore, dealt more commonly with the observation of reality as it actually presents itself than with the construction of elaborate fantasies.

Naturalism in literature developed as a direct response to ROMANTICISM. Dissatisfaction with the representations of social conditions in literature led to a desire on the part of certain writers to create a body of work that stood in more direct correlation to actual life. Romanticism focused on high lyricism and was concerned with the beauty of language and self-expression, human emotions and personal values. Naturalism, on the other hand, was more concerned with cause-and-effect relationships and logical outcomes to given circumstances. This trend was not entirely new; Realism had anticipated some of these concerns. However, naturalism was also a reaction to REALISM. The naturalists believed that realist literature, while it sought to portray life accurately, was not a true representation of the harsh realities faced by the lower social classes. Whereas the realists displayed a tendency within their work to aestheticize societal problems, making them more palatable to the bourgeois readership, naturalists developed more accurate portrayals of reality, making no attempt to pass judgment or to suggest a solution. They abandoned religion and philosophy, believing neither discipline capable of effecting change on society. Instead, they believed that literature had the power to create change simply by making the reader aware of the extent of the problem.

Common, therefore, among naturalist works is the emphasis on characters who are poor, undereducated, and trapped in lives filled with filth and corruption. These are the people whose lives are most controlled by social and cultural influences and whose decisions are most affected by the fulfillment of basic needs. As a result, much naturalist literature is a dreary representation of the harsh realities of life. Although similar to realism in many ways, naturalism goes beyond realism in its belief that social and biological factors take the place of free will entirely, as can be witnessed in the trappings of lower-class existence.

In addition to Zola, other noted French naturalists include the GONCOURT brothers, J. K. HUYSMANS, and Guy de MAUPASSANT. The Goncourts' works, such as Soeur Philomène (1861) and Renée Mauperin (1864; translated 1887) were based largely on notes from their travels and presented an accurate vision of life as they observed it. Prior to his absorption in DECADENCE, Huysmans's early works, such as Marthe (1876), can also be classified as naturalist pieces.

In the theater, the naturalist movement is most closely associated with the Théâtre Libre movement of the late 19th century. Again, the goal of drama, like that of literature, became the desire to represent life as accurately as possible. By placing a greater degree of emphasis on scenic design, which was realistically detailed, and costume design, which reflected the style and quality of the characters, as well as the development and encouragement of more natural acting methods, the movement was an attempt to break free from the conventions of artificial theatricality prevalent in the past.

The naturalist movement in France did not confine itself to one art form but existed in theatrical performances and the visual arts as well. Neither was the movement restricted to France. Similar movements occurred in the latter part of the 19th century throughout Europe and in America.

Works about Naturalism

Baguley, David. Naturalist Fiction: The Entropic Vision. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1990.

Bronson, Catharine Savage, ed. Nineteenth Century French Fiction Writers: Naturalism and Beyond, 1860–1900. Detroit: Bruccoli Clark Layman, 1992.

Nelson, Brian, ed. Naturalism in the European Novel: New Critical Perspectives. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1992.

Pagano, Tullio. Experimental Fictions: From Émile Zola's Naturalism to Giovanni Verga's Verism. Madison, Wisc.: Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1999.

Naubert, Benedikte (1756–1819) novelist, writer of fairy tales

Born into an academic family in Leipzig, Germany, Benedikte Naubert received an education unusual for a woman of her time. She was one of the most prolific and widely read authors of her age: Her publications—family novels, historical novels, and fairy tales—extend to 80 titles. Because of prejudice against women writers, she chose to publish anonymously. She influenced the historical novels of Sir Walter Scott and was appreciated by the romantics. The stories in Naubert's Neue Volksmarchen der Deutschen (1789–92), based on folktales, were original in combining the fantastic with the everyday and giving a voice to female narrators and protagonists. The brothers GRIMM were indebted to her, but their tales told a very different story about the ideal rise of women in the emerging bourgeois family. A few of her novels were translated into English during her lifetime, and one of her most interesting stories, Der Kurze Mantel, has more recently been translated as “The Cloak” in Bitter Healing: German Women Writers: 1700–1830 (Blackwell and Zantop, eds., 1990).

Ndebele, Njabulo (1948–) novelist

Njabulo Ndebele was born in Western Native Township near Johannesburg, South Africa. His father, a Zulu, was a schoolteacher who later became an inspector of schools, and his mother, a Swazi, was a nurse. Ndebele's mixed parentage has an important influence on his perception of what it means to be African, which is revealed in his works. Ndebele moved with his family to a small mining town in Charterston Location in 1954 where he completed his primary-school education. Because Ndebele's parents did not think the apartheid South African government would allow Ndebele to exploit his intellect, they sent him to black-ruled Swaziland to attend high school. He went to Cambridge University for two years for his master's degree and taught briefly at the University of Lesotho before going on to the University of Denver for his Ph.D. In 1983, Ndebele returned to Africa where he filled several administrative and teaching positions before finally settling as vice chancellor of the University of Cape Town in September 2000.

Ndebele's most significant contribution to world literature is his desire to bring African literature out of its protest mood. In a series of articles, he questioned the conventional African approach to writing, which challenged white colonials' domination by appealing to their guilt. The most influential of these articles was “New South-African Literature or the Rediscovery of the Ordinary,” published in South African Literature and Culture: Rediscovery of the Ordinary (1991). Ndebele believes that African writers should write for their fellow African readers, appealing to an African collective consciousness and heritage. African literature should not merely attack apartheid or oppression but should find a common ground where all Africans can express their values.

Ndebele's stories depict his various attempts to search for African values and to promote them as the essence of African identity that transcends all differences. In the short story, “Uncle” (1983), for example, the character Lovington teaches his nephew to recognize a new “map” of South Africa, drawn using traditional South African values, not colonial European laws. Within this framework, Ndebele also celebrates Africa’s past by remembering heroic figures, such as King Moshoeshoe. In another short story, “The Music of the Violin” (1983), Ndebele presents music as a mock battleground where the indiscriminate adoption of Western culture is criticized by a child who sees the contradiction more clearly than his anglophile parents.

Ndebele’s attempts to address the multidimensional aspects of colonialism on South Africa represent a refreshing approach to the different facets of colonialism that have been presented by past African writers as one dimensional. Perhaps the most remarkable contribution Ndebele makes to the literary world is his poignant and vivid description of the daily lives of ordinary Africans. By concentrating on daily struggles of ordinary people for survival rather than the sensational power struggles developing at the higher levels, Ndebele is able to show that little defeats and victories take place in spite of the larger nationalistic struggle. The true hero in Ndebele’s mind is the ordinary person who, through diligence and resourcefulness, continues to survive.

Ndebele has won various writing awards including the Noma Award for Publishing in Africa, the SANLAM First Prize for outstanding fiction, and the Pringle and Mofolo–Plomer Awards. He published a novel, The Cry of Winnie Mandela, in 2003.

Other Works by Njabulo Ndebele

Bonolo and the Peach Tree. New York: Manchester University Press, 1992.

Death of a Son. Johannesburg: Viva, 1996.

Fools and Other Stories. London: Reader’s International, 1986.

Rediscovery of the Ordinary: Essays on South African Literature and Culture. Johannesburg: Congress of South African Writers, 1991.

Sarah, Rings and I. Johannesburg: Viva, 1993.

Works about Njabulo Ndebele

Shava, Piniel. A People’s Voice: Black South African Writing in the Twentieth Century. London: Zed Books, 1989.

Trump, Martin. Rendering Things Visible: Essays on South African Literary Culture. Athens: Ohio University Press, 1990.

Necker, Anna Louise Germaine

See STAËL, GERMAINE DE.

négritude

In the early 1930s, French-speaking African and Caribbean writers living in Paris started the literary and ideological négritude movement with the leadership of poet Aimé CÉSAIRE from Martinique, poet Léon-Gontran Damas from French Guiana, and poet and later president of Senegal (1960–80) Léopold Sédar SENGHOR. Inspired by Harlem Renaissance writers in the United States, such as W. E. B. DuBois and Langston Hughes, and West Indian thinkers and poets, such as Jacques Roumain, René Maran, and Jean Price-Mars, black intellectuals began to examine critically Western values to reassess black cultural value and identity.

The publication of Légitime Défense (Legitimate Defense) in the early 1930s, a journal with a strong Marxist and anticolonial bent, prompted Senghor, Damas, and Césaire to print L’Étudiant noir (The black student) in 1934 “for all black students, regardless of origin, African, Antillean or American.” According to Damas, the word négritude first appeared in an editorial by Césaire in L’Étudiant noir. For Césaire in his long poem, Cahier d’un retour au pays natal (Return to My Native Land, 1939), négritude originated in “Haiti, where Négritude first stood up and swore by its humanity.” The term gained popularity after appearing in Césaire’s poem, but some say the spirit of négritude was first expressed poetically by Damas in Pigments (1937).

After World War II, the group founded Présence Africaine, a publishing house and journal edited by Alioune Diop. One year later, Senghor’s Anthologie de la nouvelle poésie nègre et malgache de langue française (Anthology of new Negro and Malagasy poetry in French, 1948) appeared. It included existentialist philosopher Jean-Paul SARTRE's well-known essay, "Orphée noir" ("Black Orpheus"), which describes négritude from a Marxist perspective.

Initially, the négritude movement primarily influenced French-speaking colonial writers, but it gradually became more global. The core group expanded to include a number of African and West Indian poets, including Jacques Rabémananjara, a poet and playwright from Madagascar who met Senghor and Césaire in Paris in the 1950s, and Guy Tirolien, a West Indian poet who met Senghor in a German prison camp during the war. Many involved in the négritude movement critically examined assimilation, world wars, and the suffering of black people in their writing. They also promoted political and intellectual freedom, as well as the value of African life and traditions.

Senghor published his systematic statements on négritude in Liberté I: Négritude et Humanisme (1964), a collection of essays. On négritude, Senghor wrote, "To establish an effective revolution, our own revolution, we first had to cast off our borrowed clothes—the clothes of assimilation—and to assert our négritude." Césaire took an even more revolutionary interpretation of négritude than Senghor, as can be seen in his Discours sur le colonialisme (Discourse on Colonialism), (1950) which displays his Marxist allegiances.

The spread of the négritude movement to black student writers in France, Africa, and the Caribbean during the 1930s, 1940s, and 1950s receded in the 1960s when fewer and fewer négritude themes appeared in writers' works. More recently, however, such writers as Abiole Irele, Biodun Jeyifu, and Omafume Onoge have been returning to the literary and ideological issues of négritude. Some have criticized the movement's reliance on NATIVISM and ahistoricism, as well as its representation of women and its failure to achieve revolutionary change. Many, however, still recognize négritude's significance as an empowering, historically grounded, and pertinent literary movement.

Works about Négritude

- Ahluwalia, Pal. "Négritude and Nativism": In Search of Identity." Africa Quarterly 39, no. 2 (1999).
- Arnold, James A. "Négritude Then and Now." In James A. Arnold, ed., A History of Literature in the Caribbean: Vol. I, Hispanic and Francophone Regions. Philadelphia: Benjamins, 1994.
- Asante-Darko, Kwaku. "The Co-Centrality of Racial Conciliation in Négritude Literature." Research in African Literatures 31, no. 2 (2000).
- Claxton, Hadiya. "Colonialism, Négritude, and Experiences of Suffering." JAISA: The Journal of the Association for the Interdisciplinary Study of the Arts 5, no. 1 (Fall 1999).
- Jack, Belinda E., and Sada Niang. "Literature and the Arts—Négritude and Literary Criticism: The History and Theory of 'Negro-African' Literature in French." African Studies Review 41, no. 2 (1998).
- Jeyifo, Biodun. "Greatness and Cruelty: 'Wonders of the African World' and the Reconfiguration of Senghorian Négritude." The Black Scholar 30, no. 1 (Spring 2000).

Neruda, Pablo (Neftali Ricardo Reyes Basoalto) (1904–1973) poet

Pablo Neruda was born in Parral, Chile. His father, Jose del Carmen Reyes, was a railroad engineer. His mother, Rosa Basoalto, died of tuberculosis a few days after Neruda was born. In 1920, at age 16, Neruda moved to Santiago to study French literature at the Instituto Pedagógico; however, after three years of study he left school without graduating. It was at this time that Neruda adopted his pseudonym, taking the last name of Czech short-story writer Jan Neruda (1834–91).

In 1924, Neruda published Twenty Love Poems and a Song of Despair, which remains one of the most popular poetry collections in the Spanish-speaking world. Neruda's approach to love poetry is visceral and original; his emotions are vibrant and his sorrows poignant but without the least sentimentality. Twenty Love Poems and A Song of Despair combines rich and musical diction, striking images, and a strong sense of connection with the natural in human love.

As Neruda's literary reputation grew, he also began a political career. He was appointed as the Chilean consul in Rangoon, the capital of Burma, in 1927. He pursued his political career quite seriously throughout his life, serving as a senator and even running for president of Chile. He was a communist and worked to forward his ideals through both government service and poetry.

The collection Residence on Earth (1931, 1935, 1947) marked a significant change in style from his earlier books. It is written in the style for which Neruda is best known and that, during his life, was called Nerudaism—it is filled with irrational leaps of thought, eccentric uses of language, and powerful images presented without explanation. However, unlike the absurdist poetry of such French Surrealists as André BRETON, Residence on Earth is extremely emotional and expressive. Neruda's style of surrealism is not intended to shock or to make his reader laugh; rather, he uses the absurd to represent the complexity of the human mind and modern life.

Canto General (1950) represented another radical change in Neruda's poetry. Abandoning the obscurity of his earlier work, he attempted to create an epic poem about the grandeur of South America. Canto General is a free-verse poem written in a biblical cadence. It is a poetic catalogue of both the human and natural aspects of South American reality. In the poem, Neruda was trying to do for the Latin-American world what Walt Whitman had done for the United States in Leaves of Grass: to create an epic of democracy, not centered on a single elite hero but celebrating the majesty of every citizen.

In 1971, Neruda won the Nobel Prize in literature. Along with Jorge Luis BORGES, Neruda was one of the first Latin-American writers to become a major presence in international literary circles. Radically transforming his literary style again and again throughout his life, and working tirelessly for his political beliefs, his achievement is truly astounding. Neruda, who fought against oppression his entire life, died in Santiago, 12 days after a coup d'état deposed the liberal government of President Allende and brought fascism to Chile.

Other Works by Pablo Neruda

Elementary Odes of Pablo Neruda. Translated by Carlos Lozano. New York: G. Massa, 1961.

Late and Posthumous Poems, 1968–1974. Edited and translated by Ben Belitt. New York: Grove Press, 1988.

Memoirs. Translated from the Spanish by Hardie St. Martin. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1977.

Works about Pablo Neruda

De Costa, Rene. The Poetry of Pablo Neruda. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1982.

Nolan, James. Poet-Chief: The Native American Poetics of Walt Whitman and Pablo Neruda. Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press, 1994.

Nerval, Gérard de (Gérard Labrunie) (1808–1855) poet

Considered to be among the early French romantic poets, as well as an early Bohemian, Gérard de Nerval was born in Paris. The death of his mother when he was only two years old greatly affected the tone of his works, which are characterized by a fascination with dreams, visions, and fantasies, particularly those related to death, as well as the madness that these can produce. Throughout his life, he suffered from manic depression and an artistic vision that was destined to destroy him.

Nerval was greatly influenced by the German Romantic poets. He translated the works of GOETHE and also was interested in the occult and the poetry of the French Renaissance. The mystic world fascinated him, particularly esoteric, gnostic, and oriental philosophy.

Living in a heightened state of reverie, he began to suffer periods of madness. After an extreme manic episode in 1841, Nerval was hospitalized. During this time, he wrote Christ on the Mount of Olives (1841), which forms part of his final collection, and assumed the name Nerval, taken from an imaginary genealogy that he had created to replace his own family history. He fantasized that he was descended from Nerva, a Roman emperor, by way of Napoleon. It is this voice, a collected wisdom of the ages, through which he speaks in his poems.

His final poetic work, a collection of sonnets called, collectively, The Chimeras (1854), emphasizes themes of death and despair. The work is comprised of three parts. In the first section, six poems deal with the concept of a lost love who appears as bride, priestess, sorceress, queen, muse, and ultimately death. This latter vision ties directly to the death of Nerval's mother. The second section, "Christ on the Mount of Olives," details Christ's betrayal by both humankind and God. The final part, "The Golden Verses," reaffirms life after a deep depression.

Written while Nerval was undergoing a period of deep depression, The Chimeras was published only one year before the poet committed suicide.

His last great work, the short-story collection Les filles du feu (The Daughters of Fire, 1854), celebrates lost love and mythical aspects of women. The manuscript of Aurélia, an autobiographical and almost surrealist story of breakdown and vision, was found in his pocket when he hanged himself at dawn on January 26.

Another Work by Gérard de Nerval

Selected Writings. Translated by Richard Sieburth. Harmondsworth, U.K.: Penguin Books, 1999.

A Work about Gérard de Nerval

Lokke, Kari. Gérard de Nerval: The Poet as Social Visionary. Lexington: French Forum, 1987.

Neto, António Agostinho (1922–1979)

poet

António Agostinho Neto was born in Kaxikane, a Kimbundu village in the Icolo e Bengo region of Angola. His political awareness began at an early age: He became involved in cultural and political activities following his high-school graduation in 1944 when he was working in the Health Service in Luanda. In Lisbon, where Neto was attending university, he became very involved in the pro-independence political activities of the overseas African students. He was arrested and imprisoned twice, in 1951 and 1955. By the time of his second imprisonment, he had become such a well-known figure that French intellectuals such as Jean-Paul SARTRE and Simone de BEAUVOIR pressured the Portuguese government to release him. After his release, Neto returned to Angola in 1959 and became the leader of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA). He spent most of his political career in and out of exile and prison until November 1975, when he declared Angola's independence. He was sworn in as Angola's first president, a position that he held until his death.

Neto's poetry clearly resonates with themes that most concern him, such as the nationalist struggle, his African roots, and assimilation. His writings also reveal his attempt to reconcile ideas of individual freedom and colonial domination. In "Nausea" (1974), for example, he examines the anguish of the colonized character João, whose anger intermixed with helplessness results in a physical state of unease. Neto's rejection of assimilation is best expressed in his poems "Marketwoman" (1974) and "Friend Mussunda" (1974), in which the characters, common people, celebrate the collective idea of "Africanness" and renounce colonial attempts to assimilate them.

Neto remains one of the most influential, founding poets of Angolan literature, and his poetry bespeaks the common African themes inherent in the relationship between the colonized and the colonizer.

Other Works by António Agostinho Neto

Ainda o Meu Sonho. Luanda: Uniao dos Escritores Angolanos, 1980.

Cikectabea de Poemas. Lisbon: Casa dos Estudantes do Imperio, 1961.

Sacred Hope. Dar es Salamm: Tanzania Publishing House, 1974.

Works about António Agostinho Neto

Burness, Donald. Fire: Six Writers from Angola, Mozambique and Cape Verde. Washington, D.C.: Three Continents, 1977.

Enekwe, Ossie O. "The Legacy of António Agostinho Neto." Okike, 18 (June 1981).

Martinho, Fernando. "The Poetry of Agostinho Neto." World Literature Today, 53 (Winter 1979).

New Novel

The New Novel, or Nouveau Roman, emerged in France in the 1950s. Representative authors include Claude SIMON, Nathalie SARRAUTE, Alain ROBBE-GRILLET, Marguerite DURAS, and Michel Butor. The term was introduced by critic Roland Barthes and theorized by Robbe-Grillet in his For a New Novel (1963). The main concept of the movement was to create fiction that opposed the constraints of conventional fiction and broke the rules that defined what a novel was.

To break realistic molds of storytelling, the new novelists abandoned the idea of continuity and standard chronological order, such as in Sarraute's 1951 work Portrait of a Man Unknown. They borrowed freely from poetry and the visual arts to produce works that were linguistic collages, as in Simon's The Wind (1959). The importance of memory and free association of ideas were often stressed as well.

The new novelists represented a vast and divergent array of stylistic and ideological perspectives. They had different aims and goals with regard to their works and, for the most part, were often opposed to being grouped together even in theoretical terms. The movement, in essence, suggested a move away from tradition and realized an attempt to experiment with new literary forms.

See also OBJECTIVISMO.

A Work about the New Novel

Babcock, Arthur E. The New Novel in France: Theory and Practice of the Nouveau Roman. Boston: Twayne, 1997.

Ngugi Wa Thiong'o (James Ngugi)

(1938–) novelist, essayist, playwright

Ngugi Wa Thiong'o was born in Kamiriithu in the Kiambu district of central Kenya, a district in which a large number of white people lived. Living where the two worlds of the black African and the white Christian met clearly had its impact on Ngugi's works. Although his parents were Gikuyu, the largest ethnic group in Kenya, they did not practice traditional religion, nor were they Christians. In 1948, Ngugi was exposed to the Gikuyu religion and values when he began school, which taught him about European subjects, traditional Gikuyu values, and Gikuyu history. Ngugi became especially interested in Gikuyu traditions after undergoing the Gikuyu rite of passage ceremony. He also developed a strong interest in reading European classics, especially adventure stories.

Ngugi's eloquent prose resonates with the emotions and conflicts of his personal life and the life of his country. It is not surprising, therefore, that his themes include alienation, love, loss, and struggle. His first novel, Weep Not, Child (1964), was the first English language novel to be published by an East African. The main protagonist, Njoroge, lost his opportunity to further his studies after having to face the dilemma of choosing between his idealistic dreams and opposing the harsh reality of colonial domination.

The colonial government's mission to destroy the independent guerrilla army of the Mau Mau peasant rebellions in the 1950s greatly affected Ngugi and his family. Ngugi's brother joined the Mau Mau, his stepbrother was shot, and his mother was arrested, interrogated, and tortured. Ngugi faced the dilemma of advancing his education (something very few black Africans had accomplished and which the colonial government made possible) and dealing with the government's persecution of his family. He depicts this conflict within himself and his community in, and uses the rebellions as a backdrop for, his novel The River Between (1965), which is about an unhappy love affair in a rural community whose Christian converts and non-Christian natives are at odds.

In 1977, Ngugi's active involvement in his village's communal theater led to his arrest and imprisonment. He was accused of promoting his strong political views via his play I Will Marry When I Want (1977). In addition, his novel Petals of Blood (1978), strongly depicts the exploitation and corruption of the colonial government in Kenya at that time. Ngugi was released from prison a few years later, and though he was a devout Christian, he rejected Christianity and changed his name to Wa Thiong'o in honor of his Gikuyu heritage. He also began to write his novels in Gikuyu, publishing the first modern novel written in that language, Devil on the Cross (1980). Ngugi argued that African literature written in a colonial language was not African literature.

Ngugi left Kenya in 1982 to live in self-imposed exile in London. He continues to write about Gikuyu culture. In his later and strongly influential work, Matigari (1987), for example, Ngugi narrates a satirical tale of a guerrilla fighter who seeks to find true liberation through the use of arms. The story is based on a famous Gikuyu folktale. Ngugi also encourages fellow African writers to continue to write in their native languages. He now teaches at the University of California, Irvine, where he has taught since 2002.

Other Works by Ngugi Wa Thiong'o

Decolonizing the Mind: The Politics of Language in African Literature. Westport, Conn.: Heinemann, 1986.

Petals of Blood. New York: E. P. Dutton, 1991.

A Work about Ngugi Wa Thiong'o

Cantalupo, Charles, ed. Ngugi wa Thiong'o: Texts and Contexts. Lawrence, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1995.

Nguyen Du (1765–1820) poet

Nguyen Du was born in Thing Long, Ha Tinh province, central Vietnam. The first 35 years of Nguyen Du's life were spent trying to survive the chaos of the Tay Son rebellion that began in 1771. Nguyen Du, a member of the northern scholar classes, was a loyal supporter of the then defunct Le dynasty and was extremely critical of the Tay Son rebellion, denouncing the rampant corruption and immoral behavior of the Tay Sons in his poetry. The Tay Son rebellion ended in 1802 with the ascension of the Nguyen emperor, Gia Long, to the Vietnamese throne in Hue. This southern-based dynasty (Ly), however, did not win Nguyen Du's support, despite his serving the dynasty for 20 years. Nguyen Du saw the Ly dynasty as an illegitimate successor to the Le dynasty, and his unwillingness to serve can be observed in his writings. He uses metaphors such as the bitterness of remarrying to illustrate his reluctance to serve a new master while he still felt loyal to the old. Nguyen Du served as an envoy in the 1813 mission to China, and he was to depart on another mission to China in 1820 when he died unexpectedly.

Nguyen Du's poetry deals with timeless issues that characterized Confucian Vietnamese society, such as personal morality and political obligations. His poems, such as the epic Truyen Kieu (The Tale of Kieu) bespeak his constant concern with morality and his respect for individual fortitude. The publication date of the poem is unknown. The poem relates the life of Kieu, whose determination in the face of misfortune and suffering earn her happiness in the end. Nguyen Du's poetry celebrates the high ideal of morality above love and selfish desire. Poems such as The Tale of Kieu and The Guitar Player of Long Thanh reflect his Buddhist ideology that places sacrifice, sorrow, and suffering as necessary obstacles to overcome before happiness can be obtained. Nguyen Du's poetry remains today a valuable repository of information and insight into late 18th- and early 19th-century perceptions of morality.

Other Works by Nguyen Du

"Calling the Wandering Souls." In Jacqui Chagnon and Don Luce, eds., Quiet Courage: Poems from

Viet Nam. Washington, D.C.: Indochina Mobil Education Project, 1974.

The Tale of Kieu: A Bilingual Edition. Translated by Huynh Sanh Thong. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1987.

A Work about Nguyen Du

Woodside, Alexander. Introduction to The Tale of Kieu: A Bilingual Edition. Translated by Huynh Sanh Thong. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1987.

Nichol, b[arrie] p[hilip] (1944–1988) poet bpNichol, as he styles his name, was born in Vancouver, British Columbia, and grew up in three locations—Vancouver, British Columbia; Winnipeg, Manitoba; and Port Arthur, Ontario. While working toward a certificate from the University of British Columbia in elementary education (which he received in 1963), Nichol audited creative-writing courses. After teaching elementary school in British Columbia, he moved to Toronto in 1967.

Nichol's first published poem, "Translating Apollinaire," appeared in 1964. He soon gained notoriety for his concrete poetry. (Concrete poetry is written so that the words form a definite shape. George Herbert's "Easter Wings," in which the lines of poetry are arranged to form angel's wings, is a famous example. Another predecessor is Guillaume APOLLINAIRE with his Calligrammes.) One of Nichol's concrete poems is "Blues," in which the word love is set six times, vertically, horizontally, and backwards, with a diagonal row of e's across the center suggesting a cry of pain or perhaps astonishment. (The poem may be seen online at <http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/bpnichol/kyebp01.htm>.)

Nichol did not gain wide recognition, however, until the publication of The Martyrology (1972), a long narrative poem in five volumes that abandoned the concrete form of Nichol's previous work. (Subsequent books of The Martyrology were published in 1976, 1982, 1987, and 1992.) Nichol also published prose works, visual books, and miscellanies, usually through small presses. He liked to revisit themes and to work in series, as he did in the three volumes, Love: A Book of Remembrances (1972), Zygal: A Book of Mysteries and Translations (1985), and Truth: A Book of Fictions (1990). Truth, like the last volume of The Martyrology, was published posthumously; Nichol had just finished assembling the manuscript when he died.

In all of his work, Nichol explores the possibilities for meaning to be created by the structural and textual characteristics of words on the page—that is, their formal arrangement and layout. Concrete poetry marks an extreme form of this possibility, as can be seen in Nichol's poems.

In 1970, Nichol won the Governor General's Award for poetry. In addition to his many volumes of poetry, he also wrote 10 episodes of the children's program Fraggle Rock. His concrete poetry is the subject of a 1969 documentary film by Michael ONDAATJE, Sons of Captain Poetry.

Other Works by bpNichol

An H in the Heart: A Reader. Edited by George Bowering and Michael Ondaatje. Toronto: McClelland & Stewart, 1994.

bpnicholcomics. Vancouver: Talonbooks, 2002.

A Work about bpNichol

Barbour, Douglas. bp. Nichol and His Work. Toronto: ECW Press, 1992.

Nietzsche, Friedrich (1844–1900)

philosopher

Friedrich Nietzsche was born in Rocken, Germany, to Karl Ludwig Nietzsche, a Protestant pastor, and Franziska Nietzsche. Karl Ludwig died when his son was only five. The family moved to Naumburg, where Nietzsche attended Domgymnasium, a private preparatory school connected with a cathedral. At Domgymnasium, Nietzsche demonstrated great potential as a scholar and was consequently offered a scholarship to Schulpforta, the most famous high school in all of Germany. Nietzsche attended Schulpforta for six years; he was considered to be one of the best students in his class. Although he apparently failed a mathematics class in his final year of studies and jeopardized his graduation, in Robert Holub's 1995 biography, a teacher is quoted in defense of Nietzsche: "Do you wish perhaps that we allow the most gifted student that the school had since I have been here to fail?"

After graduating from Schulpforta in 1864, Nietzsche studied classical philology at the University of Bonn and the University of Leipzig. While studying at both universities, Nietzsche was influenced by the German philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer. The philosophical works that Nietzsche wrote later in his life were in many ways a response to Schopenhauer's philosophical ideas. In 1867, Nietzsche interrupted his studies for compulsory military service, but was declared unfit for duty in 1868 after falling off a horse. While recovering from the injury, he was befriended by the famous composer Richard Wagner and his wife, who became his mentors.

In 1869, at age 24, Nietzsche was appointed as a professor of classical philology at the University of Basel, Switzerland, where he remained for the next 10 years. The appointment was quite unusual because he never completed his dissertation. To accept this position, he had to renounce his Prussian citizenship and, because he never became a citizen of Switzerland, he remained a person without a country for the rest of his life. In 1870, at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War, he enlisted in the Germany army as a medical orderly, but he contracted diphtheria and had to resign the post.

Critical Analysis

During the 1870s, Nietzsche became progressively dissatisfied with his work as a philologist. Although he remained at the University of Basel until 1879, he contributed very little to classical philology. In 1872, he published A Birth of Tragedy, which Robert Holub calls "an odd mixture of classical philology, half-baked enthusiasm for Schopenhauer, and Wagner veneration." Using little philological evidence, Nietzsche attempted to connect the rise of tragedy with a coupling of Dionysian and Apollonian principles, to hinge the downfall of tragedy to rational thinking, and to present Richard Wagner as the renovator of German tragic art. His colleagues greeted The Birth of Tragedy with disparagement and perplexity, finding little relevance to philology in the work.

Nietzsche, suffering from numerous health problems and, utterly disappointed with his career as a philologist, retired from the university in 1879. With much more success, he turned his energy to cultural criticism, particularly focusing on the role of Christianity in the formation of Western ideas about psychology and social behavior. Human, All Too Human (1878–80) is the first published work in which he defends his famed perspectivism, the view that truths and all interpretations are formulated from particular perspectives. He claimed that, contrary to the claims of moralist theory, morality is not inherent in or determined by reality; it is, in fact, the invention of human beings. Moreover, Nietzsche sets morality against historical background, describing how the view of morality changed over time. The work explicitly contrasts Christian and Greek moral thought, typically claiming that Greek thought had been vastly superior.

Nietzsche further elaborates his critique of Christian morality in Daybreak (1881). In this work, he claims that Christianity somehow reshapes our notion of morality by implicating psychological guilt and constantly seeking spiritual reassurances—both acts that are destructive to the psychological and social health of society. In his famous work The Gay Science (1882), Nietzsche makes his perhaps most famous statement, proclaiming the death of God. Nietzsche once again renounces the Christian doctrine of afterlife and proposes an alternative system in which an individual should appreciate this life in its aesthetic terms. He suggests that ideal is the full experience of one's life, with all the turns of fate and flaws. Furthermore, he proposes the doctrine of eternal recurrence in this work: a concept that describes time as circular rather than linear, in which cyclical events recur over and over again.

Needless to say, Nietzsche's profound atheism was viewed as disturbing by his contemporaries. Yet, Nietzsche secured a small following, especially among the young members of the intelligentsia, with the publication of his major work Thus Spake Zarathustra (1883–94). The work, a combination of poetry, prose, and epigrams, describes the journey of Zarathustra who comes down from a mountain after years of meditation to offer his thoughts to the world. The work, structured as a parody of the Bible, praises all things denounced by Christian teachings, such as vanity, war, cruelty, and pure aestheticism. The work, often described as a culmination of Nietzsche's philosophical career but which breaks with conventional philosophical discourse, is his most widely read and appreciated work. Although Thus Spake Zarathustra was not widely appreciated during Nietzsche's lifetime, it influenced generations of philosophers and artists after his death.

Late in his life, Nietzsche remained a prolific writer. He lived in seclusion in Italy and Switzerland, maintaining very few contacts. In 1889, he suffered a complete nervous breakdown after witnessing a brutal beating of a horse on a street in Turin. He was transferred from clinic to clinic for the next 10 years, but, unable to work or recover his health, he finally died just as his popularity began to spread all over the world.

Today, Nietzsche is remembered as one of the most influential philosophers and writers of the 19th century. His works were translated into virtually every major language around the world. Nietzsche questioned the accepted notions of morality and values in the context of Christianity to emphasize the importance of the material, aesthetic world. It is not surprising that many artists found his message attractive and powerful. Many of his works are still read, discussed, and debated in universities all over the world.

Other Works by Friedrich Nietzsche

The Anti-Christ. Translated by H. L. Mencken. London: Sharp Press, 1999.

Twilight of the Idols or How to Philosophize with a Hammer. Translated by Duncan Large. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998.

The Will to Power. Translated by Walter Kaufmann. New York: Random House, 1987.

Works about Friedrich Nietzsche

Holub, Robert. Friedrich Nietzsche. Boston: Twayne, 1995.

Kauffman, Walter. Basic Writings of Nietzsche. New York: Random House, 1968.

Safransky, Rudiger. Nietzsche: A Philosophical Biography. New York: Norton, 2001.

Nkosi, Lewis (1936–) novelist, literary critic

Lewis Nkosi was born in Durban, South Africa. Before he turned eight, his parents died. He lived with his maternal grandmother, who worked as a washerwoman to support Nkosi's early education. During this time, Nkosi developed a love for literature, especially the works of 19th-century French novelists. Between 1952 and 1954, he was enrolled in a boarding school run by missionaries, and his Zulu language teacher gave him a thorough background in Zulu culture and history. After graduating, he worked briefly at a Zulu newspaper before being invited, in 1956, to join The Drum, an influential newspaper actively involved in the antiapartheid movement. Nkosi's acceptance of a Nieman Fellowship at Harvard University led to his exile from his homeland in 1961.

At Harvard, Nkosi wrote a play, The Rhythm of Violence (1964), as an entry for a drama competition. The play relates the violence and racism surrounding and following the first bombing in Johannesburg by African National Congress and Pan-Africanist Congress members. After Harvard, Nkosi worked as a literary editor of The New African in London from 1965 to 1968. Between 1970 and 1974, he took a four-year course in English literature at the University of London, spent several years in Europe and accepted a professorship in English at the University of Wyoming.

White supremacy and racial tension are recurring themes in Nkosi's writings. In his most acclaimed work, Mating Birds (1986), he satirizes the hypocrisy of the white court that condemned Sibiya, the main protagonist, to death mainly because he was black. In the novel, Sibiya narrates the series of events leading to his conviction of the rape of a white woman and his impending execution. By appropriating the plight of Sibiya, Nkosi contests the legitimacy of white justice and values in South Africa, which he portrays as being driven by self-interest. Another novel, The Underground People, about the personal and the political in the lives of antiapartheid activists, followed in 1993.

In 1965, Nkosi published a collection of essays, Home and Exile, which won a prize at the Dakar World Festival of Negro Arts in 1966. The essays in this collection deal with a variety of issues and themes, ranging from Nkosi's experience in exile to his views on African theater, black American poetry, and other African writers' works. He continues to publish criticism regularly.

Nkosi's main contributions lie in his ability to communicate the complexity and subtle aspects of racial politics and relationships in South Africa to a general reading public.

Other Works by Lewis Nkosi

The Black Psychiatrist. Lusaka: Lusaka Theatre Playhouse, 1983. Available online at <http://weberstudies.weber.edu/archive/Vol.%2011.2/11.2Nkoski.htm>.

Malcolm. London: ICA and Bush Theatres, 1972.

Tasks and Masks: Themes and Styles of African Literature. Harlow, U.K.: Longman, 1981.

The Transplanted Heart: Essays on South Africa. Benin City, Nigeria: Ethiope Publishing, 1975.

Works about Lewis Nkosi

Jacobs, Johan. "Lewis Nkosi: Mating Birds." Critical Arts, 5:2 (1990).

Masuwa, Kristina Rungano. "South African Writing: Lewis Nkosi." Wasafiri, 19 (1994).

Watts, Jane. Black Writers from South Africa: Towards a Discourse of Liberation. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1989.

Nobre, António (1867–1900) poet

Born in Oporto, Portugal, to middle-class parents, Nobre suffered from ill health and died of tuberculosis at an early age. His illness changed his life and poetry. As a youngster, he spent many summers in northern Portugal. In 1898, he studied law in Coimbra, Portugal, but failed his courses and went on to Paris to attend the Sorbonne, where he received his degree in political science in 1895. Nobre traveled widely, always seeking better health. His finest poems were written while he was living in Paris's Latin Quarter.

Only one volume of poetry was published during Nobre's lifetime: Só (1892). It consists mainly of verse written in Portugal and Paris between 1884 and 1892. These poems express the loneliness and poverty the poet experiences on the death of his father. Two more volumes, containing a mixture of narcissism, folklore, realism, whimsy, and pessimism, appeared after the poet's death.

Another Work by António Nobre

Primeiros Versos e Cartas Inéditas. Lisboa: Editorial Notícias, 1983.

Noonuccal, Oodgeroo (Kath Walker)

(1920–1993) poet, writer, political activist

Oodgeroo Noonuccal was born in the land of Minjerribah on the coast of Brisbane, in Australia, to the Aboriginal couple Edward and Lucy Ruska. Kath Walker was her English name, but she returned later in her life to her traditional name Oodgeroo Noonuccal to identify with the Aboriginal people of Noonuccal, with whom she grew up. (Oodgeroo is the Aboriginal name for the paperbark tree.) Noonuccal attended the Dunwich State School on North Stradbroke Island. Her formal education ended when she turned 13, and she became a domestic servant as did most Aboriginal girls. In 1939, Noonuccal joined the Australian Women's Army Service (AWAS) and became a corporal.

The struggles of the Aboriginal people inspired Noonuccal to write when she was very young. Judith WRIGHT, an Australian poet, read Noonuccal's poems and introduced her to the Jacaranda Press in Brisbane. Noonuccal's first volume of poems, We Are Going (1964), was the first published work by an Aborigine. She writes of the oppression of the Aboriginal people and their sense of pride, using a free-verse style identified as "protest verse." In the poem "We Are Going," for example, the members of an Aboriginal tribe are given voice: "We are as strangers here now, We belong here." Noonuccal's second book, The Dawn Is at Hand (1966), is filled with rich imagery describing the tortures of the Aboriginal people.

Noonuccal's themes include the wrongs committed against the Aborigines, world peace, and a new life for her people. Noonuccal was one of Australia's best-known poets and was also known internationally as a political activist. She was a member of the realist writers' group (see REALISM) and wrote against social injustice. Noonuccal also wrote folk tales for children on the life and beliefs of the Aboriginal people. Father Sky and Mother Earth (1981) describes the bond of the Aboriginal people with nature. Fellow Australian poet Judith Wright wrote of Noonuccal's poems, "They were memorable, they were memorized and they will be remembered" (1994).

A Work about Oodgeroo Noonuccal

Collins, John, ed. Noonuccal and Her People: Perspectives on Her Life's Work. St. Lucia: University of Queensland Press, 1996.

Nortje, Arthur (1942–1970) poet

Arthur Nortje was born in the town of Oudtshoorn, Cape Province, South Africa. His mother was unmarried, and Nortje never knew who his father was. He attended school on scholarship and showed an early interest and propensity for writing poetry. In 1961, he moved to Cape Town, where he attended the University College of the Western Cape. The sharp class and racial distinctions that existed in the university led Nortje to resent the arbitrary nature of social segregation. He belonged to the "colored" group, the offspring of parents with mixed racial backgrounds, and his distaste for the opulent upper class is clear in his poetry, such as in "Thumbing a Lift" (1962), which won a Mbari Poetry Prize from Ibadan University.

Nortje briefly taught high school in Port Elizabeth before going to Oxford University in 1965, again on scholarship, one sponsored by the politically radical National Union of South African Students. After earning his B.A., he moved to British Columbia in Canada in 1967 to teach and then returned to London in 1970 to embark on his post-graduate study. He died on December 8.

Loneliness is perhaps the most acute emotion that surfaces in all Nortje's poems, which also speak of desolation and loss. His sense of estrangement from his homeland, following his self-imposed exile from South Africa, and his unfortunate encounter with love resonate through his characters and their experiences. Nortje's unfulfilled love for a young woman who separated from him to migrate to Canada, left him in despair. Discrimination intensified his anguish, loneliness, and alienation, which he depicts in political poems that condemn apartheid and its inherent hypocrisy. For example, in Dead Roots (1973), Nortje's first collection, a number of poems, such as "Continuation," relate his deterioration into depression and his dependency on drugs. In another poem, "The Long Silence," Nortje poignantly contrasts the forlorn resignation of the oppressed Africans with the "success" of the apartheid government. Though Nortje's literary career was brief, he successfully brought to the world a voice and a vision that, while pained and pessimistic, were very realistic.

Other Works by Arthur Nortje

The Collected Poems of Arthur Nortje. Edited by Dirk Klopper. Pretoria: University of South Africa Press, 2000.

Deep Roots. London: Heinemann, 1973.

Works about Arthur Nortje

Berthoud, Jacques. "Poetry and Exile: The Case of Arthur Nortje." English in Africa, 11:1 (1984).

Bunn, David. "'Some Alien Native Land': Arthur Nortje, Literary History, and the Body in Exile." World Literature Today, 70 (Winter 1996).

Dameron, Charles. "Arthur Nortje, Craftsman for his Muse." In Christopher Heywood, ed., Aspects of South African Literature. London: Heinemann, 1976.

Leitch, Raymond. "Nortje: Poet At Work." African Literature Today, 10 (1979).

Nwapa, Flora (1931–1993) novelist

Flora Nwapa was born in Oguta, East Central State, Nigeria. Her parents were both teachers, and Nwapa grew up in a popular and wealthy family. She graduated from the University of Ibadan in 1957 and received her postgraduate diploma in education from the University of Edinburgh the following year. Nwapa returned to Nigeria and worked as an education officer in Calabar for a short time before assuming the position of geography and English teacher at Queen's School in Enugu from 1959 to 1962. She remained in Lagos until the Nigerian civil war—the attempt by the Igbo people of Nigeria's eastern area to establish a separate country called Biafra—broke out in 1967. Like many members of the Igbo elite, Nwapa and her family were forced to return to the eastern region. Three years after the war ended, she became the minister of Health and Social Welfare of the east central state from 1970 to 1971 and then the minister of Lands, Survey and Urban Development from 1971 to 1974.

Nwapa was the first African woman writer to publish her works in English. She is also the first African woman to use the Igbo as the basis of her stories. She established Tana Press in 1976, which became the first indigenous publishing house to be owned by a black African woman in West Africa. The company published mainly adult fiction, but Nwapa soon set up another publishing house, Flora Nwapa and Co., that specialized in children's fiction. Nwapa took her role as an educator seriously: She continued to teach at colleges and universities throughout her life and published works dealing with moral and ethical issues. She taught at various institutions in the United States, including New York University, Trinity College, and University of Michigan. Nwapa died at age 62 in Enugu, Nigeria. At the time of her death, she had just completed her final manuscript of The Lake Goddess (1995) about the goddess Mammy Water, who was a source of inspiration for Nwapa's fiction.

Nwapa is best known for her recreation of Igbo life and traditions from a woman's point of view. In many ways, she could be considered one of Nigeria's and Africa's first feminist writers. She conveyed the positive optimism of her female protagonists and their strength and freedom to choose their own paths. For instance, in Idu (1970), Idu's quest for personal fulfillment leads her to take her own life in defiance of her community's belief that motherhood is the sole purpose of a woman's existence. Idu, however, prizes her qualitative life with her husband above all else, including her child's welfare. Her suicide is a commentary on a woman's love.

Critical Analysis

Nwapa's debut novel, Efuru (1960), retells an Ibo folktale about Efuru, a woman whose life mirrors that of the lake goddess she worships. Efuru has beauty and wealth but few children like the goddess. Efuru, however, has to struggle to find her place in the society in which she lives. The novel is indicative of Nwapa's portrayal of strong female characters who are adventurous, independent, materially comfortable, and also have the freedom to make their own decisions. These portrayals of women in Ibo society, however, go against conventional views as presented in traditional Ibo texts, which tend to show Ibo women as weak, promiscuous, and fickle minded. Nwapa challenged these traditional views and set the foundation for later women writers to challenge and question the depiction of Ibo women in literature.

Nwapa also wrote short stories, poetry, and children's books. Her stories were not restricted to themes that dealt only with women's rights or a woman's place in society; she also drew on experiences from the Nigerian civil war, folktales, and other political conflicts that occurred during her lifetime. In Never Again (1975), which is set in the Nigerian civil war, her main character starts off as a fervent supporter of the Biafran cause but ends up trying to piece her life together and questioning her actions. In her children's stories, Nwapa drew on her rich reservoir of legends and folktales to emphasize the morals of the stories. Her major contribution to world literature rests in her characterization of the heroine as independent and strong and in her descriptions of the continual subjugation of women in Africa.

Other Works by Flora Nwapa

Efuru. London: Heinemann, 1966.

Never Again. Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1992.

One Is Enough. Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1992.

This Is Lagos and Other Stories. Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1992.

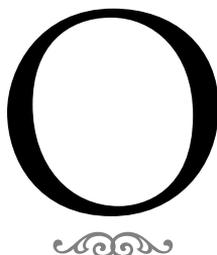

Wives at War and Other Stories. Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1992.

Women Are Different. Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1992.

Works about Flora Nwapa

Brown, Lloyd W. Women Writers in Black Africa. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1981.

Emenyonu, Ernest. "Portrait of Flora Nwapa as a Dramatist." In Marie Umeh, ed., Emerging Perspectives on Flora Nwapa. Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1998.

Ōba Minako (Shiina Minako) (1930–)
novelist, short-story writer, essayist, poet, playwright

Ōba Minako was born in Tokyo to Shiina Saburō and Mutsuko. From a very young age, Ōba nurtured an interest in reading. Her love of books was so intense that, even as she fled World War II air raids, she always grabbed a book to pass the time. Ōba witnessed the mushroom cloud of the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima and tended radiation sickness victims as they escaped the city. After the war, she studied American literature at Tsuda Women's College, where she met Ōba Toshio, whom she later married. The turning point in Ōba's life came when her husband was stationed in Alaska for 11 years. Removed from the restrictions placed on women in Japan, Ōba had the freedom to travel and to pursue a graduate-level education, although she never earned a degree.

Ōba completed her first short story, "A Picture with No Composition," in 1963 while she was attending a graduate art program at the University of Wisconsin. Four years later, she wrote "The Rainbow and the Floating Bridge" while attending a graduate art program at the University of Washington in Seattle and then "The Three Crabs" once she returned home to Alaska. In 1969, Ōba wrote "Fireweed," notable for its Alaskan setting and her depiction of an untraditionally ferocious nature. Her major works include The Junk Museum (1975), Urashima Grass (1977), Without a Shape (1982), and Birds Singing (1985), none of which have yet been translated into English.

Like the novelists ŌE Kenzaburō and Gabriel GARCÍA MÁRQUEZ, Ōba is noted for reusing characters and events from earlier stories. She frequently portrays strong female protagonists who challenge social mores, particularly with regard to women's roles. She has won numerous awards for her fiction, including the Gunzō New Writer's Prize, the Akutagawa Prize, and the Tanizaki Jun'ichirō Prize.

Other Works by Ōba Minako

"The Pale Fox." In Roberta Rubinstein and Charles R. Larson, eds., Worlds of Fiction. New York: Macmillan, 1993.

"The Smile of a Mountain Witch." In Stories by Contemporary Japanese Women Writers. Translated by Noriko Mizuta Lippit and Kyoko Irye Selden. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1982.

A Work about Ōba Minako

Wilson, Michiko Niikuni. Gender Is Fair Game: (Re)Thinking The (Fe)Male in the Works of Ōba Minako. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1999.

objectivismo

In the later half of the 20th century, objectivismo was a movement in Spain that was closely related to the French NEW NOVEL and particularly to the writings of Alain ROBBE-GRILLET and José Camilo CELA. Objectivismo, or objectivism, refers to the attempt to write novels that were completely free of subjective material and, therefore, closer to material reality. This involved the rejection of all conventional modes of narrative literature such as plot, chronological progression, and metaphorical description. The novels of objectivismo would, for example, feature extravagant, long descriptions of a piece of furniture or a geographic location and then repeat the same descriptions periodically throughout the book. Cela's La Colmena (The Hive, 1951) is a prime example.

Strongly influenced by existential philosophy of Heidegger, the main point of objectivismo is that reality, before human interpretation, is just there. Before any of the narrative meaning that human beings give to it, the most important feature of reality is its simple presence.

By refusing to concentrate on action or meaning, objectivismo texts have a sort of physical presence, in the philosophical sense of the word physical. More important, the texts imply that the author and human personality are essentially illusions. By an aesthetic act of will, the author may overcome these illusions and present a text free of his presence. The novels of Rafael Sánchez Ferlosio (1924–), such as El Jarama (1956; translated as The One Day of the Week, 1962), and the early work of Juan Marsé, are examples.

Literary critic Roland Barthes was a major influence on both the New Novel and objectivismo. He believed that too much importance had been given to the author's intentions in interpreting literature. He argued that, in fact, meaning, specifically the intentional meaning of the author, was an impermanent and changing thing based more on cultural context than anything else. Objectivismo is a literary style that supports and is supported by this idea.

The novels of objectivismo are texts that push the reader to supply interpretations. They are presented with compressed and repetitive events that are explained only in glimmers so that any meaning the reader gleans will not be definitive.

A Work about Objectivismo

Robbe-Grillet, Alain. For a New Novel: Essays on Fiction. Translated by Richard Howard. New York: Grove Press, 1966.

Ōe Kenzaburō (1935–) novelist

Ōe Kenzaburō was born in a small village in Ehime Prefecture on the island of Shikoku. By the time he entered school, Japan was at war, so he underwent strict moral training intended to instill unquestioning loyalty to the emperor. Before the end of the war, his father died, leaving him in the care of his mother. Under her guidance, Ōe developed an interest in literature, including Western novels. In 1954, he formalized that interest, entering the French literature department of Tokyo University.

While at Tokyo University, Ōe began to write plays for a student drama group. In 1957, he converted one of his plays into a short story, "A Peculiar Occupation," about a student who takes on a part-time job of exterminating dogs used for experiments. That story brought him to the attention of established writers, and he quickly found acceptance in the literary world. During the next two years, he published a number of stories, including Nip the Buds, Shoot the Kids, about a group of abandoned boys, which won the Akutagawa Prize, ensuring Ōe's place among the literati.

Ōe increasingly became politically active, notably opposing nuclear proliferation and the Japan–United States Mutual Security Treaty. His political concerns carried over into his writing and, in 1961, parodying a 17-year-old extremist who had assassinated a leader of a Socialist faction, he wrote the short story "Seventeen."

Ōe's literary career took a radical turn in 1963. Three years after his marriage to Itami Yukari, the sister of renowned film director Itami Jūzō, his son Hikari was born with a birth defect that damaged his brain. From this point, Ōe turned to more personal reflection in his writing.

Critical Analysis

In 1964, Ōe published one story and one novel that dealt specifically with the birth of his son. “Agwhee the Sky Monster” is the short story of a composer wrestling with a decision he made to let his son, diagnosed with a potentially fatal birth defect, die. The story is told from the perspective of a young college student who has been hired to watch over the composer. Ōe’s novel A Personal Matter is widely regarded as his greatest work. In this novel, rather than killing the child, the protagonist, Bird, decides to save his son’s life. The story trails the twists and turns of Bird’s dilemma until he finally makes the decision to keep his child.

In his next major novel, The Silent Cry (1967), Ōe explores simultaneous story lines. The first involves a sibling rivalry in which one brother attempts to destroy a powerful supermarket chain and sleeps with both his brother’s wife and his younger sister. The second story is set 100 years earlier. In it, their great-grandfather’s younger brother foments an uprising against feudal authorities and has an affair with his brother’s wife.

Although The Silent Cry received attention for its originality, critics regard his 1979 A Game of Contemporaneity as the pinnacle of this style of juxtaposing timeframes. The story is told in a series of letters from the narrator, Tsuyuki, to his sister, Tsuyumi. Tsuyuki is to develop a record of the history and myths of their village and, in doing so, relays a number of stories in fragmented form to his sister.

A Game of Contemporaneity also represented another significant development in Ōe’s writing—myth making. Most of his recent works reflect this style, particularly The Burning Green Tree (1993–95), a trilogy that focuses on the story of a man named Gii. Having lived abroad in his youth, Gii moves to a village in Shikoku. Soon thereafter, a local medicine woman dies, and the villagers believe that Gii has inherited her healing powers.

In 1994, Ōe received the Nobel Prize in literature. During his Nobel speech, he called himself the last of the postwar writers—those who had witnessed the hardship of war but still retained hope for the future. He concluded his lecture, “As one with a peripheral, marginal and off-center existence in the world I would like to seek how—with what I hope is a modest, decent and humanist contribution—I can be of some use in a cure and reconciliation of mankind.”

Other Works by Ōe Kenzaburō

Teach Us to Outgrow Our Madness: Four Short Novels.

Translated by John Nathan. New York: Grove Press, 1977.

The Catch and Other War Stories. Selected by Shoichi Saeki. New York: Kodansha International, 1981.

Works about Ōe Kenzaburō

Napier, Susan. Escape from the Wasteland: Romanticism and Realism in the Fiction of Mishima Yukio and Ōe Kenzaburō. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1991.

Wilson, Machiko N. The Marginal World of Ōe Kenzaburō: A Study in Themes and Techniques. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1986.

Ogot, Grace (1930–) novelist

Grace Ogot was born in Butere near Kisumu, district Central Nyanza, Kenya. She attended several girls’ schools before training at the Nursing Training Hospital at Mengo, Uganda, from 1949 to 1953. From 1958 to 1959, she was a midwifery tutor and nursing sister at Makerere Hospital. She married Bethwell Ogot, history lecturer at Makerere University, in 1959. Two years later, Ogot became the principal of the Women’s Training Center in Kisumu. In 1963, she returned to Makerere Hospital as nursing officer. She was also actively involved in activities that supported the women’s movement. She was a member of the Maendeleo ya Wanawake Organization of Women and the Executive Committee of the Kenya Council of Women.

Ogot’s writings reflect not only her feminist leanings but also her belief in the importance of perpetuating tradition and history in the face of technological progress and modernization. Her novel The Promised Land (1959) describes the Luo (an ethnic group in Kenya) migration from Uganda to the eastern shore of Lake Victoria during the colonial period. Migration, which is a dominant motif in this novel, highlights the sense of alienation and displacement experienced similarly by those who are victims of colonial exploitation and male domination. Ogot uses strong female characters, such as Nyapol, to comment on the hypocrisy of male domination by discrediting the male personalities in her novels and short stories. Nyapol's husband Ochola's mental deterioration in the new settlement is contrasted with Nyapol's strength and perseverance, and this challenges the misrepresentation of African females as meek and passive.

Ogot's volume of short stories, Land Without Thunder (1968), which was more successful and popular than The Promised Land, reinforces her attempts to undermine patriarchal authority by challenging ideas of male dominance. By developing the reversal of roles in her fiction, Ogot creates a platform for the female voice and discloses the male biases inherent in traditional African literature. In "The Old White Witch," for example, the white matron's shock at discovering that her female charges are more defiant and vociferous in their resistance to her domination than the men challenges the stereotypical view that men form the foundation of the African resistance movement.

Ogot's greatest contribution to African and world literature lies in her criticism of a male-dominated Africa and in her accurate and insightful depiction of many marginalized indigenous groups, such as the Luo, in Kenya.

Other Works by Grace Ogot

- The Graduate*. Nairobi: Uzima Press, 1980.
The Island of Tears. Nairobi: Uzima Press, 1980.
Miaha. Nairobi: Heinemann, 1983.
The Other Woman: Selected Short Stories. Nairobi: Transafrica Publishers, 1976.
The Strange Bride. Translated by Okoth Okombo. Nairobi: Heinemann, 1989.

Works about Grace Ogot

- Conde, Maryse. "Three Female Writers in Modern Africa: Flora Nwapa, Ama Ata Aidoo and Grace Ogot." Présence Africaine 82 (1972).
 Lindfors, Bernth. "Interview with Grace Ogot." World Literature Written in English, 18:1 (1979).

Okara, Gabriel (1921–) novelist, poet

Gabriel Okara was born at Bumoundi in the Ijo country of the Niger Delta in Nigeria. His parents were both members of the Ekpetinma clan. Okara received his early education at St. Peter's and Proctor's Memorial School and later attended the Government College of Umuahia. His education was temporarily interrupted by the outbreak of the World War II, but he resumed his studies during the war at Yaba Higher College. Under the guidance of renowned sculptor Ben Enwonwu, Okara became a painter; then later he turned to bookbinding, journalism, and creative writing. His first poems were published in the Ibadan-based journal Black Orpheus in the 1950s. He has been a part-time lecturer at the University of Nigeria, a government official, general manager of the Rivers State Broadcasting Corporation, and a founding member of the Association of Nigerian Authors.

Though Okara had no formal training in writing, his works effectively blend intense expression with masterful diction. Okara has written only one novel, The Voice (1964), which was critically acclaimed for its experimental and unorthodox style. This satire contains a strange narrative of events detailing a romantic hero's search for righteousness in a corrupted world. An eccentric writer, Okara amuses and inspires through his creative rendering of themes—colonialism, racism, and the fear of losing one's heritage—that consume most African writers of his time. He has also written two children's books: Juju Island and Little Snake and Little Frog (both 1982).

Folktales and myths are a strong source for Okara's poems, which attempt to revitalize the enchantment of Nigerian folklore through their representation of primordial acts of bravery and wisdom. Okara uses an unusual blend of ambiguous symbols and powerful imagery to relate these acts. The poem "You Laughed and Laughed and Laughed," for example (anthologized in Biddle), juxtaposes the cold laughter of the civilized world against the ancestral strength of Africa:

Then I danced my magic dance to the rhythm of talking drums pleading, but you shut your eyes and laughed and laughed and laughed . . .

The poem relates how that cold laughter is ultimately thawed (“Now it is my turn to laugh”):

... you whispered;
 ‘Why so?’
 And I answered:
 ‘Because my fathers and I are owned by the living warmth of the earth through our naked feet.’

His poems, which are written in a simple lyrical form, are also characterized by energy and vibrancy paralleled by a constant underlying protest against social injustice. “The Fisherman’s Invocation,” for instance, highlights Okara’s concerns with the tribulations of nation building during the Nigerian civil war.

Okara received first prize in the British Council’s 1952 short-story competition for his piece, “Iconoclast.” In 1953, his poem, “The Call of the River Nun,” won the best entry prize at the Nigerian Festival of Arts, and he won the Commonwealth Poetry Prize for “The Fisherman’s Invocation” in 1979. Okara was also awarded an honorary doctorate by the University of Port Harcourt in Rivers State in 1982 in recognition for his efforts to involve Nigerians in their cultural and literary heritage.

Other Works by Gabriel Okara

Biddle, Arthur, ed. Global Voices: Contemporary Literature from the Non-Western World. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1995.

The Fisherman’s Invocation. London: Heinemann Educational Books, 1978.

The Voice. New York: Holmes and Meier, 1987.

Works about Gabriel Okara

Anozie, S. O. “The Theme of Alienation and Commitment in Okara’s The Voice.” Bulletin of the Association for African Literature in English 3 (1965).

Egudu, R. N. “A Study of Five of Gabriel Okara’s Poems.” Okike 13 (1979).

Shiarella, J. “Gabriel Okara’s The Voice: A Study in the Poetic Novel.” Black Orpheus 2:5–6 (1970).

Ondaatje, Michael (1943–) poet, novelist

Born in Colombo, Ceylon (now Sri Lanka), of Dutch, English, Sinhalese, and Tamil descent, Philip Michael Ondaatje is the youngest child of Mervyn Ondaatje, a tea-and-rubber-plantation superintendent, and Enid Doris, who ran a dance and theater school. In 1962, Ondaatje emigrated to Canada, where he studied English and history at Bishop’s University in Quebec; he has baccalaureate and master’s degrees.

Ondaatje is one of a few Canadian writers who also is published in the United States and Britain and is known internationally. His early poems appeared in New Wave Canada: The New Explosion in Canadian Poetry (1967). His poetry collection Secular Love (1984) explores the pain of the failure of his first marriage and celebrates his second.

In his first foray into fiction, The Collected Works of Billy the Kid (1970), Ondaatje retells the story of the outlaw William H. Bonney through a mixture of poetry, prose, photographs, and other illustrations. In Coming through Slaughter (1976), too, he interweaves biography, history, and fiction to relate the story of jazz cornetist Buddy Bolden, who went insane. In the Skin of the Lion retells the story of the building of Toronto’s Prince Edward Viaduct. In 1978, after a 24-year absence, Ondaatje returned to his homeland, now Sri Lanka. In journals, he recorded family anecdotes and stories that developed into his “fictional memoir” Running in the Family (1982), which is composed of vivid, rhapsodic reminiscences.

In many of his novels, Ondaatje uses his central characters to explore a violent reality, mixing the ordinary and the fantastic to create a surreal montage, as can be seen in The English Patient (1993). Here a quartet of characters—Hana Lewis, a Canadian nurse; the “English patient,” burned beyond recognition, who is in fact a Hungarian count; thief and double agent David Caravaggio; and sapper Kip Singh, who has been sent to clear the area of enemy mines—shelter in a dilapidated Italian villa during the last days of World War II. Douglas Barbour remarks, “As the complexly ordered fragments of the novel accumulate, their pasts, their presents, and their possible futures intertwine in an intricate collage,” creating in the process, as Lorna Sage observes, “an improbable civilization of their own, a zone of fragile intimacy and understanding. . . .”

Fascinated by history, documentation, and biography, Ondaatje reinvents history through imagination. The dominant features of his style are a dynamic beauty and a scarcely contained violence. He has won many awards, including the Governor General’s Award three times, the Booker Prize, and the Toronto Book Award.

A Work about Michael Ondaatje

Barbour, Douglas. Michael Ondaatje. Boston: Twayne, 1993.

Onetti, Juan Carlos (1909–1994) novelist, short-story writer

Juan Carlos Onetti, the son of Carlos Onetti and Honoria Borges, was born in Montevideo, Uruguay. Considering that he would go on to become a major novelist, the most remarkable thing about Onetti’s childhood was that he never finished high school. He dropped out in his early teens and spent the next 20 years working at odd jobs and living the life of a bohemian. However, he continued to read constantly and educated himself in modern politics and literature.

Onetti was particularly fond of the novels of the Norwegian writer Knut HAMSUN. His first novel, El Pozo (The Pit, 1939), resembles Hamsun’s novel Hunger (1890). Both works follow an alienated protagonist (similar to protagonists found in works by Jean-Paul SARTRE and Albert CAMUS) through an unfriendly city, concentrating on the main character’s thoughts and his disconnection from everyone around him. Present in Hunger but far more pronounced in El Pozo is the introduction of elements of fantasy in what is mainly a realistic narrative. El Pozo was completely unsuccessful when it was first published; now, it is recognized as a precursor to the MAGIC REALISM movement and as perhaps the first truly modern Latin-American novel.

In La Vida Breve (A Brief Life, 1950), Onetti again focuses on a main character, Juan María

Brausen, who is alienated from society and completely absorbed by his own thoughts. Brausen is himself a writer, and the reader watches him create narratives within the narrative. The novel takes place in the fictitious town of Santa María and combines REALISM with philosophical asides and elements of fantasy. Onetti would go on to write about Santa María again and again in his fiction. In this way, he resembles and is a precursor to GARCÍA MÁRQUEZ. Both authors worked at not only telling distinct stories but also creating an imaginary world. Unlike the mythic grandeur of García Márquez’s Macondo, Onetti’s imaginary world is restrained, tinged with the melancholy of philosophical dilemmas.

In 1974, Onetti was imprisoned by the Uruguayan government for selecting a controversial short story as the winner in a contest sponsored by the magazine Marcha. He was held for three months and finally released due to the outrage of the international community. He moved to Spain the next year and became a Spanish citizen.

Late in his life Onetti’s pessimism increased. In Dejemos hablar al viento (Let The Wind Speak, 1979), he once again revisited Santa María, this time narrating its destruction by fire and a cleansing wind. This act of symbolically uncreating the imaginary world he had been building all his life resonates with both sorrow and purification. It is a final abandonment of nostalgia and a preparation for death.

In 1980, Onetti was awarded the Cervantes prize, the most prestigious award given in the Spanish-speaking world. He was the first Latin-American novelist to hit on the particular mixture of fantasy, reality, and formal experimentation, which such writers as Carlos FUENTES, García Márquez, and VARGAS LLOSA later developed into their own styles of magic realism. He is a writer of subtle humor and great philosophical insight.

Other Works by Juan Carlos Onetti

Goodbye and Stories. Translated by Daniel Balderston. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1990.

Past Caring? Translated by Peter Bush. London: Quartet Books, 1995.

The Shipyard. Translated by Nick Caistor. London: Serpent's Tail, 1992.

Works about Juan Carlos Onetti

Adams, Ian M. Three Authors of Alienation: Bombal, Onetti, Carpentier. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1975.

San Roman, Gustavo. Onetti and Others: Comparative Essays on a Major Figure in Latin American Literature. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1999.

Ortega y Gasset, José (1883–1955) philosopher

José Ortega y Gasset was born in Madrid, Spain. Both his mother's and his father's families were powerful and successful publishers. Ortega y Gasset was trained to be a journalist, as well as to take over his family's publishing empire. However, when he graduated from the University of Madrid, despite an innate talent, he found the prospect of a career in journalism unsatisfying. Instead, he chose to study philosophy in Germany.

In 1914, at the outbreak of World War I, he published his first book Meditations on Quixote. The book is a collection of essays on topics ranging from the purely literary to features of life in modern-day Europe. All of the essays mix cultural commentary with the philosophical underpinnings that Ortega y Gasset had absorbed through his study of German philosophy, particularly that of Kant.

During the next 40 years, until his death, Ortega y Gasset was extremely prolific. His complete works, published in 1983, are 12 volumes of more than 500 pages each. He was also an important political figure in Spain, working tirelessly for moderate liberal reform until his impatience with extremism led him to retire in 1933.

Two of Ortega y Gasset's works stand out from the rest as having had a very large influence on later 20th-century thought. The first of these is The Dehumanization of Art (1925), in which he examines a unique modern phenomenon, the unheard-of unpopularity of modern art, and its rejection by the masses. Why, he asks, does the art that is generally acknowledged by critics and intellectuals as deserving of aesthetic merit receive such a negative reaction from common society? He finds that, unlike the highest forms of visual art from the past, modern art emphasizes the fictional aspect of the art medium and deemphasizes the "human concerns" of art's subject matter. Although this brings increased pleasure to knowing viewers who are educated to appreciate "pure" aesthetics, it alienates the uneducated viewers who want to find in art something to relate to their own lives.

In The Revolt of The Masses (1929), Ortega y Gasset examines another 20th-century phenomenon, the modern practice of sightseeing. Why, he asks, do countless people wish to go to sights, such as palaces or the Vatican, that formerly were accessible only to the privileged few? In former times, these places were used for specific functions. However, the masses go not to use the places as they were intended but simply to assert their own presence. Though somewhat elitist by today's standards, The Revolt of The Masses can be best understood as an indictment of the fascist tendencies of many European countries, including Spain, between the world wars. Ortega y Gasset feared, often correctly, that unfettered rule by the populace would end in brutality and fascism.

Ortega y Gasset is one of the most important Spanish philosophers of the 20th century. His efforts brought modern philosophical thought into Spanish culture. His influence has been worldwide, and his thought has influenced literature, philosophy, and art history.

Other Works by José Ortega y Gasset

History as a System, and Other Essays Toward a Philosophy of History. With an afterward by John William Miller. New York: Norton, 1961.

Man and Crisis. Translated by Mildred Adams. New York: Norton, 1962.

Meditations on Hunting. Translated by H. B. Westcott. New York: Scribner, 1986.

The Mission of the University. Translated by Howard Lee Nostrand. Piscataway, N.J.: Transaction Publishers, 2001.

The Origin of Philosophy. Translated by Toby Talbot. Champaign: University of Illinois Press, 2000.

Velasquez, Goya, and the Dehumanization of Art. New York: Norton, 1972.

A Work about José Ortega y Gasset

Díaz, Janet Winecoff. The Major Themes of Existentialism in the Work of José Ortega y Gasset. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1970.

Osceola

See DINESEN, ISAK.

Ostrovsky, Nikolai (1904–1936) novelist

Nikolai Alexeevich Ostrovsky was born in the small village of Viliya, Russia. His father worked as a seasonal laborer, and the family was very poor. In 1914, his family resettled in the town of Sheptovka, where Ostrovsky briefly attended elementary school. As a young teenager, he worked at various laborer jobs and ran errands for the Bolshevik underground. He joined the Red Army in 1918 and fought for the Bolshevik cause. In 1920, he was seriously wounded in battle and subsequently contracted typhus.

Ostrovsky was officially declared an invalid in 1922. Bedridden by his physical breakdown, he dedicated his time to completing a correspondence course with Sverdlov University in Moscow, but a month after completing his course, he lost his vision and became partially paralyzed. He then began to write articles for newspapers and journals, to speak on the radio, and to begin his only full-length novel.

Ostrovsky completed How the Steel was Tempered in 1930. The novel, published in 1934, is firmly grounded in SOCIALIST REALISM and depicts the struggles of workers and soldiers in forging the Soviet Union, and its artistic aim of the novel is reflected in the simple, utilitarian language of the writer. Immediately hailed as a masterpiece of socialist art, the novel garnered him the Order of Lenin in 1935. His second novel Born of the Storm, about the civil war in the Ukraine, was incomplete when he died at the age of 32.

Ostrovsky achieved immense literary success with only one published novel. Although he was not prolific in his contribution to Russian literature, he did influence a new generation of fiction writers who attempted to glorify the building of a communist state.

Oz, Amos (Amos Klausner) (1939–)

novelist, short-story writer, essayist

Amos Oz was born in a poor neighborhood of Jerusalem to conservative Zionist parents who both emigrated from Europe and met in Jerusalem. A sabra, or native Israeli, Oz grew up speaking and writing modern Hebrew. Oz's mother died when he was a teenager, and he left home at the age of 15 to join Kibbutz Hulda, one of Israel's oldest communes. There, striking out on his own, he changed his name from Klausner to Oz, a Hebrew word meaning "courage" or "strength."

At the commune, Oz was allowed to write just one day a week. Later, as his success grew, he was allowed to increase his writing time. He described life on a kibbutz in his first novel, Elsewhere, Perhaps (1973), and in A Perfect Peace (1982), set in a kibbutz in the 1960s. These and other of Oz's works explore the conflicts and tensions in modern Israeli society, examining human nature, its frailty, and its variety. Many of his stories take place either on a kibbutz or in Jerusalem, where he creates microcosms of Israeli society.

Oz is a full Professor at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev and was awarded the prestigious Israel Prize for Literature in 1998, the 50th anniversary year of Israel's independence.

Other Works by Amos Oz

Fima. Translated by Nicholas de Lang. New York: Harvest Books, 1994.

My Michael. Translated by Nicholas de Lang. New York: Vintage Books, 1992.

To Know a Woman. Translated by Nicholas de Lang. California: Harcourt Brace, 1992.

A Work about Amos Oz

Cohen, Joseph. Voices of Israel: Essays on and Interviews With Yehuda Amichai, A. B. Yehoshua, T. Carmi, Aharon Applefeld, and Amos Oz. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1990.

P

Pa Chin

See BA JIN.

Pagis, Dan (1930–1986) poet

Dan Pagis was born in Bukovina, once a part of Austria, Romania, and the Soviet Union. Today, Bukovina is part of Ukraine and Romania. Pagis spent his early years in the home of his grandparents. He had few friends but was a very enthusiastic reader from the age of six, spending much of his time in his grandparents' apartment library. At the age of 11, Pagis was deported to a Nazi camp, where he spent three years. He emigrated to Palestine in 1946 and, after only four years in Israel, began to write in his new language of Hebrew.

Said to be one of the most vibrant voices in modern Israeli poetry, Pagis is also internationally recognized as a major poet of his generation. He has been called a poet of the unspeakable because many of his poems are infused with the horror of the Holocaust. Much of Pagis's subject matter is grim, containing images of genocide, but Pagis also explores other horizons, evoking biblical texts, centuries-old mysticism, and the medieval Iberian peninsula. Writers of his generation were known as the emigré writers, consisting of those born in the Diaspora (Jewish communities outside Palestine).

Along with other Israeli writers of his generation, Pagis helped to bring a more natural colloquial style to Hebrew poetry. His many volumes of poetry have been described as “a poetry of allusion” in which he uses irony and plays on words to mask sorrow. Yet, his poems also celebrate the human spirit and contain compassion for his persecutors. His work remains popular and is celebrated not only in his home in Israel but also around the world.

Other Works by Dan Pagis

Points of Departure. Translated by Stephen Mitchell. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1981.

The Selected Poetry of Dan Pagis. Translated by Stephen Mitchell. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1996.

Variable Directions: Selected Poetry. Translated by Stephen Mitchell. San Francisco: North Point Press, 1989.

Works about Dan Pagis

Alter, Robert. “Dan Pagis and the Poetry of Displacement.” In Judaism: A Quarterly Journal of Jewish Life and Thought 180, 45:4 (Fall 1996).

Jacobson, David C. “The Holocaust Survivor in Israeli Poetry: Dan Pagis.” Paper delivered at academic conference: Symposium on Trends in Contemporary Israeli Literature, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan, 1977.

Pak Mogwol (Park Yong-jong)

(1916–1978) poet, essayist, translator

Park Yong-jong was born in Kyongju in Korea's Kyongsangnam province on January 6 and was educated through middle school. He is best known for his lyrical and nostalgic poems, which were popular with the Korean masses. His early pastoral poems of rural beauty, such as "Green Deer" and "The Mountain Peach Blossoms," were sentimental and evocative of his own childhood. Many were homages to his hometown and were infused with patriotic sentiments. He derived his rhythms from folk life and was deeply interested in folk culture.

Pak Mogwol moved from the countryside to the bustling metropolis of Seoul after Korea's liberation from Japanese colonialism in 1945. With his move, he made a similar shift in his poetry by moving toward REALISM, depicting city life, and pitting ordinary human beings against urban desolation. In "Sketch," for example, he tenderly describes a cast of haggard urban dwellers. In later years, Pak Mogwol's style and focus shifted once more—this time toward spiritualism and an acceptance of death—in poems such as "An Ordinary Day," in which the narrator marks his own grave.

In 1962, Pak Mogwol accepted a position teaching Korean literature at Hanyang University. He continued to write, producing essays, poems for children, translations, and the lyrical Korean poetry of which he is considered by many to be the modern master. He also edited the monthly journal, The Image. Pak Mogwol was honored with many awards, including the Free Literature Prize in 1955 and the Republic of Korea Literary Arts Prize in 1968. He died on March 24.

Another Work by Pak Mogwol

Selected Poems of Pak Mogwol. Translated by Kim Uchang. Fremont, Calif.: Asian Humanities Press, 1990.

Pamuk, Orhan (1952–) novelist

Orhan Pamuk was born in Istanbul, Turkey, and except for three years in New York, he spent his entire life there. Pamuk studied architecture at the Istanbul Technical University for three years but ultimately finished formal studies at the Institute of Journalism at Istanbul University. He began writing regularly in 1974 and published Cevdet Bey and His Sons in 1982, marking the beginning of his career. The novel was a family saga written in the REALIST style.

Pamuk's novels are very popular and at the same time highly controversial. His novel Kara Kitap (The Black Book, 1995), about a week in the life of the lawyer Galip whose wife Ruya has left him, became both a best-seller and an object of condemnation. Its postmodern style and ambiguous politics angered leftists and fundamentalists alike.

Pamuk's works have been translated into more than 20 languages. He is the recipient of major Turkish and international literary awards, including the 1984 Madarali Novel Prize for his second novel, Sessiz Ev (The Silent House, 1983); here, Pamuk shifted from the realist style of his first novel to a more in-depth psychosociological style. Pamuk won the 1991 Prix de la Découverte Européenne for the French translation of Sessiz Ev. His most notable subjects are Istanbul, Turkey's culture and politics, and human rights, and his novels, when taken as a whole, show a mixture of modern and traditional styles. In "Orhan Pamuk," Andrew Finkel states that "The point [of Pamuk's novels] seems to be that a person does not have to abandon the past in order to be part of the future."

Another Work by Orhan Pamuk

The White Castle. Translated by V. Holbrook. New York: George Braziller, 1991.

Pardo Bazán, Emilia de (1851–1921)

short-story writer, novelist

Pardo Bazán was born in La Coruña, Galicia. Her parents encouraged her studies, and her father's library supplied her with a great variety of reading material. She was fascinated by books about the French Revolution and loved Don Quijote, the Bible, and Homer's Iliad. She began to write poetry as a young child. Taught by private tutors, she refused to take music classes or to play the piano, as was traditional for young women; instead, she spent time reading and writing. Married at age 17, she moved to Madrid, where she became part of the social scene. Later, she went to France and traveled through Europe, learning French and German. She was influenced by French literature. In 1876, she gave birth to the first of three children and dedicated her only book of poems to this child. Her first novel, Pascual López (1879), was written on the birth of her second child. In 1880, she contracted hepatitis and went to Vichy to recuperate. There, she met the French poet and novelist Victor HUGO.

La Cuestión Palpitante (1883), a collection of articles explaining NATURALISM, (the theory that human behavior is controlled by instinct, emotion, and social and economic determinism), created a scandal, and her husband asked her to stop writing and to retract several statements. Two years later, in 1884, she left him and published La Ama Joven about matrimonial crises. La Tribuna, (1882), her third novel, is considered to be her first naturalist work. It is a study of the environment and workers in the cigar factories in La Coruña, similar to works by Benito PÉREZ GALDÓS (1843–1920). The two authors had a romantic relationship lasting some 20 years.

In 1890, she established the magazine El nuevo teatro crítico. At this time, denouncing educational differences between the sexes, she began a lifelong campaign for female emancipation. In 1906, she won a major battle in this area, becoming the first woman to preside over the literary section of the Ateneo of Madrid (a pioneer cultural institution) and the first female professor of literature at the Central University of Madrid. Only one student attended her class.

Pardo Bazán was given the title of condesa (countess) for her literary achievements.

Other Works by Emilia Pardo Bazán

The House of Ulloa. Translated by Lucia Graves. New York: Penguin USA, 1991.

The Tribune of the People. Translated by Walter Borenstein. Cranbury, N.J.: Bucknell University Press, 1999.

The White Horse and Other Stories. Translated by Robert M. Fedorchek. Cranbury, N.J.: Bucknell University Press, 1993.

Torn Lace and Other Stories. Translated by Maria Cristina Urruela. New York: Modern Language Association of America, 1997.

Works about Emilia Pardo Bazán

Gonzalez-Arias, Francisca. Portrait of a Woman As Artist: Emilia Pardo Bazán and the Modern Novel in France and Spain. New York: Garland, 1992.

Hemingway, Maurice. Emilia Pardo Bazán: The Making of a Novelist. Cambridge, U.K.: Cambridge University Press, 1983.

Tolliver, Joyce. Cigar Smoke and Violet Water: Gendered Discourse in the Stories of Emilia Pardo Bazán. Cranbury, N.J.: Bucknell University Press, 1999.

Park Yong-jong

See PAK MOGWOL.

Pasolini, Pier Paolo (1922–1975) director, writer, poet, novelist, critic

Pier Paolo Pasolini was born in Bologna, Italy, to Carlo Alberto Pasolini, an Italian army officer, and Susanna Colussi, a grade-school teacher. He attended the University of Bologna as an art history major before he switched to literature. He wrote his thesis on the poet Giovanni Pascoli. Pasolini was drafted into the Italian army in 1943 in the middle of his studies but served only a week. When his army unit was captured by the Germans, Pasolini escaped into the Italian countryside, after which he began to write poetry. During this time, he discovered he was homosexual.

Pasolini began to write novels in the 1950s. His early novels included The Ragazzi (1955), about poor young people in the slums of Rome, and A Violent Life (1959), which expresses his radical political beliefs. The former, a portrayal of the underside of Roman life, was considered so graphic and controversial that it led to charges of pornography.

In the 1960s, Pasolini turned to writing for film. He preferred the medium of film to paper, having once said, "Since Chaplin's Modern Times, movies have anticipated literature. . . . The movie has much more freedom." One of his key films is The Gospel According to St. Matthew (1964), which features his mother in the role of the older Virgin Mary. His final film was One Hundred and Twenty Days of Sodom (1975), which uses sex as a metaphor for the class struggle; this film stirred up controversy for its portrayal of Italian hedonistic society.

Pasolini was brutally murdered under ambiguous circumstances. Some believe a teenage prostitute bludgeoned Pasolini to death and then ran over him with Pasolini's car. Others believe he was assassinated, perhaps for his political beliefs. A provocative and controversial artist, writer, and filmmaker, Pasolini gained popularity after his death. Several of his works were released posthumously.

Other Works by Pier Paolo Pasolini

Petrolio. Translated by Ann Goldstein. New York: Pantheon, 1997.

Pier Paolo Pasolini: Poems. Translated by Norman MacAfee. New York: Noonday Press, 1996.

Roman Poems. Translated by Lawrence Ferlinghetti and Francesca Valente. San Francisco: City Lights Books, 1986.

Works about Pier Paolo Pasolini

Friedrich, Pia. Pier Paolo Pasolini. Boston: Twayne, 1982.

Rohdie, Sam. The Passion of Pier Paolo Pasolini. London: British Film Institute, 1996.

Pasternak, Boris (1890–1960) novelist, poet, translator, short-story writer

Boris Leonidovich Pasternak was born in Moscow to Leonid Pasternak, a celebrated painter, and Rosa Kaufman, a concert pianist. The family was established in the intellectual and cultural circles of Moscow. Indeed, Leo TOLSTOY was a family friend and played a role in the formation of Pasternak's literary style. An excellent student, Pasternak received the Russian equivalent of valedictorian rank and in 1908 began to study law at Moscow University. While there, he became very interested in philosophy and decided to pursue his studies at the University of Marburg in Germany in 1912.

Pasternak successfully completed his studies and in 1914 published his first volume of poetry, The Twin in the Clouds. Two subsequent collections, Over the Barriers (1916) and My Sister, Life (1917), established his reputation as a major Russian poet. His poetic works combined the elements of SYMBOLISM and FUTURISM, with verse that is lyrical and emotional, and contains some of the most profound images and metaphors found in Russian poetry.

At first, Pasternak supported the Bolshevik revolution, but he soon was disenchanted with the failed promises of the communist regime. During the 1920s, he began his prolific career as a fiction writer. In The Childhood of Lovers (1924), Pasternak explores the psychological makeup and emotions of a young girl. He published a short autobiographical work, Safe Conduct (1931), and a brilliant collection of poetry, Second Birth (1932). Because of his interest in exploring ethical themes and his political disillusionment, he came under repeated attacks from the government during the 1930s and was forbidden to publish. He supported himself by translating English and German poets into Russian. During these years, Pasternak gained the respect of Russian intellectual circles.

Pasternak received the Nobel Prize in literature in 1958 as a result of his most celebrated work, Doctor Zhivago (1957). The epic novel recounts the experiences of a young doctor, Yuri Zhivago, during the upheavals of the early 20th century. The novel's insights into the Communist regime quickly brought about government criticism and censure. It was first printed in Italy in 1957, followed by an English translation in 1958 and its publication in 1959 in the United States. Forced by the Soviet government to refuse the Nobel Prize, Pasternak was expelled from the Soviet Writers' Union and exiled to an artists' community outside Moscow. He died virtually abandoned by everyone except close friends. Critical acclaim for his work did not come in Russia until years after his death.

Pasternak is now recognized as one of the greatest writers of the 20th century. He left a legacy of courage and genius that is still admired today. He sacrificed his life for his work, to which his own countrymen were denied access until the 1970s.

A Work about Boris Pasternak

Barnes, Christopher. Boris Pasternak: A Literary Biography. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1998.

Paton, Alan (1903–1988) poet

Alan Paton was born in Pietermaritzburg, Natal, South Africa. His father was James Paton, a Scot who had migrated to South Africa in 1895, and his mother was a descendant of English immigrants. His parents were not highly educated, but they were staunchly religious, and Paton grew up reading the Bible. His strict father often beat his sons when they were young, and the trauma of Paton's childhood deeply affected his views about authority and corporal punishment. His father's influence is not altogether negative, however; he encouraged Paton to love books and nature. Paton was an avid reader of literature, such as the works of Charles Dickens, Walter Scott, and Rupert Brooke. He attended high school at the Maritzburg College from 1914 to 1918 and completed his college education at Natal University College in 1924. Paton worked as a teacher at the Ixopo High School for White Students, where he met his first wife. In 1935, Paton was appointed principal of the Diepkloof Reformatory for young offenders. This experience formed the basis of his political consciousness. Paton resigned from his job and, in 1953, formed the South African Liberal Party (disbanded in 1968).

Paton's most famous novel is Cry, the Beloved Country, which was published in 1948. By the time of Paton's death, the book had sold more than 15 million copies worldwide. It was also adapted into two films. Kumalo's journey in the book reflects Paton's concern with major themes that influenced his life, such as authority, racial discrimination, and religion. Paton's empathetic portrayal of Kumalo, a black Anglican priest, led many white South Africans to criticize his work for being too sentimental. At the peak of apartheid in South Africa, his disdain of racial discrimination and his idealized vision of eventual reconciliation of the two racial groups were deemed too revolutionary. Paton was a sort of liminal figure because he stood on the line that borders the two worlds of white and black South Africans. Most of the white Afrikaners rejected him for his sympathy for the black Africans, and some of the latter viewed his writing with suspicion, evidently shown in the mixed reactions to his portrayal of characters and interracial relationships in Cry, the Beloved Country. Paton's next international success, Too Late the Phalarope (1953), further explores the themes of racial and political inflexibility.

Paton's work against apartheid won him the annual Freedom Award in 1960. His other works include autobiographies and biographies of famous political figures such as Jan Hofmeyer, the cabinet minister. Paton's main contribution to African literature lies in his balanced perspective and optimism, untainted by the bitterness that often accompanies other African writings.

Other Works by Alan Paton

Journey Continued: An Autobiography. New York: Scribner, 1988.

Save the Beloved Country. New York: Scribner, 1989.

Towards the Mountains. New York: Scribner, 1980.

Works about Alan Paton

Alexander, Peter F. Alan Paton: A Biography. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1994.

Chapman, Michael. South African Literatures. London: Longman, 1996.

Pavese, Cesare (1908–1950) novelist, poet, translator

Cesare Pavese was born in Santo Stefano Belbo, Italy, to Eugenio Pavese, a clerk at a law court in Turin, and Consolina Mesturini. His rural Italian roots are a big part of his identity, and his poetry and fiction are infused with images connected to his poor beginnings. As a young boy, he spent summers in the country and the rest of the year in Turin. When Pavese was six, however, his father died of a brain tumor. His mother, determined to give him a good education, enrolled him in the Liceo Massimo D’Azeglio school. Augusto Monti, his Italian and Latin teacher there, became an influential mentor in his life. Monti encouraged his bright pupil to read the works of Vittorio Alfieri, an 18th-century Italian dramatist whose works explored themes of political freedom and the dangers of tyranny. Monti introduced Pavese to politics, specifically the need for civic awareness, and helped instill in him a disdain for totalitarianism. In 1927, Pavese enrolled in the Faculty of Letters at the University of Turin. He wrote his thesis on U.S. poet Walt Whitman and graduated with a degree in literature in 1930. Other writers played a key role in Pavese’s career as he translated many works of famous writers, beginning in 1931 with his translation of Sinclair Lewis’s Our Mr. Wrenn. Other notable translations include Herman Melville’s Moby Dick (1932), Daniel Defoe’s Moll Flanders (1938), and Charles Dickens’s David Copperfield (1939).

Pavese did not, however, limit himself to translating. Hard Labor, his collection of verse, was published in 1936. In her biography Cesare Pavese, Aine O’Healy says the collection is “one of Pavese’s most challenging and ambitious works, and it contains the nucleus of all the thematic preoccupations of his subsequent writing,” such as rural versus urban life, parenthood, and work.

Heavily influenced by Whitman and other poets, Pavese set out to create serious narrative poetry. His poem “South Seas,” for example, is a recounting of a walk in the countryside with his cousin; yet, it takes on epic proportions.

Pavese’s entry into novel writing took place toward the end of his life. His first novel, The Beautiful Summer (written in 1940), is a coming-of-age story about a working-class girl in Turin. Among Single Women, a novel that studied the “false tragic world of the upper class,” followed in 1949. Pavese returns to the coming-of-age story in The Devil in the Hills (1948), but this time uses three young men as his characters and human freedom and limitation as his themes. These collective works earned Pavese the Strega Prize for fiction in 1950.

Pavese’s contributions in the areas of poetry and fiction are noteworthy. His novels, translated into many languages, helped establish Italian neorealism, a movement in art, literature, and film characterized by its preoccupation with everyday, working-class life and leftist politics. In addition, his translations helped American classical literature reach a wider Italian audience. When he committed suicide in 1950, Pavese left this diary entry: “I have done my public share—as much as I could do. I have worked. I have given people poetry. I have shared the sufferings of many.”

Another Work by Cesare Pavese

The Selected Works of Cesare Pavese. Translated by R. W. Flint. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1968.

A Work about Cesare Pavese

Aine O’Healey. Cesare Pavese. Boston: Twayne, 1988.

Pavlova, Karolina Karlovna
(1807–1893) poet, novelist

Karolina Pavlova was born in Yaroslavl, Russia, but spent her childhood and most of her adulthood in Moscow with parents of German origin. Her father, Karl Yanish, was a professor of chemistry and physics, a physician, an amateur astronomer, and a scholar of literature and painting. Pavlova received a marvelous education as a child: She was an avid reader, was fluent in four languages by age 12, and often helped her father collect astronomical data.

Pavlova began her literary career in the late 1820s, translating Aleksandr PUSHKIN's poetry into German and French. When she began to compose poetry, she also did so in French and German. Her translations were quite popular in the fashionable salons of Moscow, and Pavlova was inspired to compose poetry in Russian.

In 1836, she married N. F. Pavlov, a mediocre writer who was in constant trouble with authorities because of his political activities. Pavlova's poetry was at its most popular in the 1840s, and in 1848 Pavlova successfully published a novel, A Double Life. She soon found herself bankrupt, as her husband gambled away her inheritance. Indignant, Karl Yanish wrote a letter to government officials, fully describing the antigovernment activities of Nikolay Pavlov, who was subsequently imprisoned and sentenced to exile. Public indignation forced Pavlova to leave Moscow in 1853. She briefly settled in St. Petersburg until she finally left Russia in 1861 and settled in Drezden, Germany.

Her poems were collectively published only once during her lifetime, in 1863, but were overlooked. In 1915, however, Valery BRYUSOV edited a collection of her poems, and Pavlova's work became popular and appreciated, especially in literary circles. A Double Life is the only work of Pavlova translated into English. In the West, Pavlova's work is not well known, although some scholars have begun to reexamine her poetry, particularly in the context of feminism.

A Work about Karolina Pavlova

Fusso, Susanne, ed. Essays on Karolina Pavlova. Chicago: Northwestern University Press, 2001.

Paz, Octavio (1914–1998) poet, essayist

Octavio Paz was born in Mexico City, Mexico. His father, Octavio Paz, Sr., a lawyer, diplomat, and journalist, had represented the Mexican revolutionary Emiliano Zapata when he was tried in the United States. His mother, Josefina Lozano, was a first-generation Mexican born to Spanish parents. Paz was educated in his early years in a French school. In addition, his aunt tutored him in French and recommended French books for him to read. As a boy, his favorite authors were Victor HUGO and Jean-Jacques Rousseau. This affinity with French culture stayed with Paz throughout his life and influenced both his poetic style and his thought.

In his 20s, Paz's poetry was noticed by Pablo NERUDA, and he was invited to Spain to attend the Second Antifascist Writers Congress. He traveled in Europe and befriended André BRETON, French surrealist writer from whom Paz absorbed the ideas and psychological and philosophical concepts of surrealism. Paz approached these ideas with classical sensibility and measured logic.

In Labyrinth of Solitude (1950), a collection of essays, Paz speculates on the sociology of the Mexican national character. He finds that Mexico is a nation yet to arrive at a final national identity. It is a culture fragmented by the conflicts between the old world and the new. Because the culture is fragmented, its citizens are unable to connect with each other, and they find themselves trapped by solitude. Paz proposes a solution, which he takes directly from surrealism: The only way to escape solitude is through romantic love as an act of the imagination. Paz goes on to say that, for escape to be possible, Mexican women must be allowed more freedom to develop their own identities. Labyrinth of Solitude, thus, has an international appeal.

Though Paz's essays have come to be appreciated as much as his poems, his first success and literary impact was as a poet. His poem Sun Stone (1957) is perhaps the apex of his poetic vision and his powers of formal design. Its structure is cyclical and is metaphorically based on the famous Aztec calendar stone, a cosmological object that represents the Aztecs' religious and physical conception of the universe. It also has a practical purpose in that it can be used to help a person calculate the seasons. Paz, in essence, tried to create a poem that would represent analogously the universe of modern consciousness in all its grandeur and, at the same time, be accessible to an individual on a very personal level.

In both his poetry and his essays, one of Paz's primary concerns is how individuals connect to their society. He applied his formidable critical powers to the art of literature in his collection of essays The Bow and the Lyre (1953). His analysis explores poetic language, the role of the writer, and the social importance of literature. The book is filled with learned detail that Paz uses as he strives to synthesize poetry's historical and universal aspects.

In 1990, Octavio Paz won the Nobel Prize in literature. He was considered a mentor to many Mexican authors in the generation that came after him, most importantly to Carlos FUENTES. The two Mexican authors shared the qualities of a powerful imagination and a deep concern for history.

Another Work by Octavio Paz

A Draft of Shadows, and Other Poems. Edited and translated by Eliot Weinberger, with translations by Elizabeth Bishop and Mark Strand. New York: New Directions, 1979.

Works about Octavio Paz

Grenier, Yvon. From Art to Politics: The Romantic Liberalism of Octavio Paz. Lanham, Md.: Rowman & Littlefield, 2001.

Ivask, Ivar. The Perpetual Present: The Poetry and Prose of Octavio Paz. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press, 1973.

Quiroga, Jose. Understanding Octavio Paz. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1999.

p'Bitek, Okot (1931–1982) poet

Okot p'Bitek was born in Gulu, northern Uganda. He attended Gulu High School and King's College in Budo before taking a two-year course at the Government Training College in Mbarara in 1952. He taught English and Religious Knowledge at Sir Samuel Baker's School near Gulu, where he was also the choirmaster. His interest in music began around this period and continued throughout his life. P'Bitek became increasingly interested in his African heritage and tradition. In 1962, he moved to Oxford University to pursue a degree in social anthropology and examine closely the richness of the African tradition. P'Bitek became active in politics, especially during the 1960s when a movement was established to gain independence for Uganda. He returned briefly to Uganda to change the agenda of the Ugandan Cultural Center in Kampala and then moved to Nairobi to teach at the university. He finally returned to Makerere University as a professor of creative writing in 1982 but died tragically five months later.

P'Bitek's poetry shows the rich influence of his interests in traditional African song, music, and oral tradition. He wrote his first poem, "The Lost Spear" (1952) while he was still a student in Mbarara. The poem retells the traditional Lwo folk story regarding the spear, the bead, and the bean.

P'Bitek's writings also express his concern with contemporary political issues and display his resourcefulness in blending these concerns with his musical talent. In Song of Lawino (1966), for example, p'Bitek employs strong imagery and lyrical rhythms to denounce Africans, especially politicians, who embrace Western ideology and discard their African heritage.

P'Bitek did not reject technological advancement and progress in Uganda, but he disagreed that these should come at the cost of losing Acoli cultural values. P'Bitek's contribution to world literature lies in his belief and efforts in bringing native language to the forefront of poetry writing in Africa, and his works express his concern that African nations be built on the basis of African beliefs, culture, and values, not on Western ones.

Other Works by Okot p'Bitek

African Religions in Western Scholarship. Kampala: East African Literature Bureau, 1970.

Hare and Hornbill. London: Heinemann, 1978.

The Horn of My Love. London: Heinemann, 1974.

Works about Okot p'Bitek

Heron, G. A. The Poetry of Okot p'Bitek. London: Heinemann, 1976.

Ofuani, Ogo. "The Poet as Self-Critic: The Stylistic Repercussions of Textual Revisions in Okot p'Bitek's Song of Ocol." Research in African Literatures 25, no. 4 (Winter 1994): 159–75.

Pederson, Knut

See HAMSUN, KNUT.

Perec, Georges (1936–1982) novelist

Georges Perec was born on March 7 in Paris, where he lived for most of his life. His father was killed in 1940 in World War II. Perec and other members of his family sought refuge in the country, but his mother disappeared from Paris in 1942, and it was later discovered that she died at Auschwitz. Perec was raised by his aunt and uncle, served in the army, married, and published his first works in magazines.

Perec's first novel, The Things (1965), was awarded the Prix Renaudot. He followed this achievement with 20 more books, no two of them having the same pattern. He joined a Paris-based writing group, OULIPO, the Workshop of Potential Literature, whose main goal was to expand literary possibilities by borrowing from the fields of mathematics and logic. Perec became intrigued by the palindrome, a sentence or word that reads the same both forward and backward. Perec wrote one palindrome consisting of more than 5,000 letters.

Perec's literary output includes novels, short stories, and word games. He also composed a 466-word text using a as the only vowel. This experiment led to his fascination with the lipogram, a text in which one or more letters may not appear. La Disparition (1969) is a novel lipogram in E, meaning that the letter e is never used. This made translating difficult, as the literal English title, The Disappearance, would contain the forbidden letter. It was translated in 1994 by Gilbert Adair as A Void.

Largely secretive with regard to his private life, Perec did publish W, or The Remembrance of Childhood (1975), an odd assortment of memoirs interspersed with sections about a dystopian island called W, where life revolves around sports. His masterpiece, however, is Life, A User's Manual (1978), which tells stories about the residents of an apartment building. Perec built the work based on a complex system detailing the number and the length of the chapters, as well as the appearance of certain random elements within each of the stories. Life, A User's Manual was awarded the Prix Medici.

Another Work by Georges Perec

53 Days. Translated by David Bellos. London: Harvill, 1992.

A Work about Georges Perec

Bellos, David. Georges Perec: A Life in Words. London: Harvill, 1993.

Peretz, Isaac Lieb (1852–1915) poet, novelist, playwright

Isaac Lieb Peretz was born in Zamosc, Poland. Considered one of the founders of modern Yiddish literature, he was largely self-educated, gaining much of his knowledge through extensive reading. A career as a successful lawyer left little time for Peretz to write until a false accusation forced him to seek new employment. He was hired as a cemetery official for the Jewish cemeteries in Warsaw, Poland.

Peretz's career change left him with ample time to pursue his writing. He published fiction, plays, and poems and inspired younger writers to pursue their goals. He became active in socialist spheres and was often accused of radicalism. Attracting negative attention from the authorities, he was imprisoned once for his socialist activities.

A voice for the Jewish Enlightenment in Poland, a movement that stressed understanding and embracing Jewish heritage and culture, Peretz wrote his early work in Hebrew and his later work in Yiddish. Much of his work makes the point that, although Jews in Poland were materially poor, their lives were spiritually rich. He glorified the worker and showed compassion for the poor. For example, Stories and Pictures (1900; translated 1906), considered his finest work, is a series of Hasidic sketches in which Peretz offers a sympathetic look at Jewish life. With a tone that is sometimes loving, sometimes critical, he describes situations common not only to the Polish Jews of his time but also to all of humanity.

Peretz's heroes are the oppressed and the suffering who exemplify virtue, faith, and unselfishness that are often lacking in humanity as a whole. The hero of the short story "Bontsche the Silent" (in Man's Search for Values [translated by A. S. Rapoport, 1987]), for instance, is a virtuous man who spends his entire life suffering in silence. He receives his reward in the afterworld, where he is told that he can have whatever he desires; however, all the man can think of requesting is a hot roll and fresh butter for breakfast every morning. In this way, Peretz also exemplifies the simple pleasures of life that are most often taken for granted.

Another Work by Isaac Lieb Peretz

Selected Stories. Translated by Eli Katz. New York: Zhitlowsky Foundation for Jewish Culture, 1991.

A Work about Isaac Lieb Peretz

Wisse, Ruth R. I. L. Peretz and the Making of Modern Jewish Culture. Seattle: University of Washington Press, 1991.

Pérez Galdós, Benito (1843–1920)

novelist, playwright, historian

Benito Pérez Galdós was born on Grand Canary Island. He was the youngest of 10 children, and his mother was determined that he would be a lawyer, thereby bringing middle-class respectability to the family. Though an intelligent child and very talented in both the literary and visual arts, he did not apply himself at school and had no interest in being a lawyer. Nevertheless, when he was 18, his mother sent him to the University of Madrid to study law. Madrid was a true awakening for the young writer. Though Pérez Galdós had spent most of his youth in the Canary Islands, it was Madrid that became the focus of his novels, and he eventually became the quintessential writer of that city in the 19th century.

In 1865, he abandoned law school and became a journalist for the newspaper The Nation. His years reporting on the news of Madrid served as a literary apprenticeship in that the skills he acquired later helped him to develop his incredible REALISM. After Madrid, Pérez Galdós spent some time in Paris, where he began his first novel, The Shadow (1871), an odd phantasmagoric novel of psychological investigation. Its use of fantasy was uncharacteristic for Pérez Galdós and the realist style he would develop.

In 1873 Pérez Galdós wrote the first of a series of five works entitled National Episodes, in which he dramatizes events from 19th-century Spanish history as a way to explore issues of morality. In his concern for the moral character and national identity of Spain, he can be seen as a precursor and influence on the writers of the GENERATION OF 1898.

Pérez Galdós's historical interest became the major direction of his later works. Almost all of this series 46 novels depict the reality of his time or the recent past while commenting on how the forces of history affect individual lives. The Disinherited Lady (1881) is a perfect example. On the surface it is a realistic account of a woman's life in late 19th-century Spain; however, it is also a symbolic meditation on how the Spanish tendencies of self-deception and dreaming have led to certain political tragedies.

Later in his career, such novels as Compassion (translated 1962) would turn to examine more closely issues of the spirit and faith. Pérez Galdós continued to write in the realist mode, of which he was an exceptional master, but now, instead of layering his realism with political and historical ideas, his books began to focus on the metaphysical forces behind life.

Pérez Galdós wrote to illuminate the relationships between the individual and the forces of society. Those forces variously took the forms of history or metaphysical questions in his novels; however, they always represented the vast interconnected web of forces that make up reality. He could be compared to the French novelist BALZAC. The two authors were exacting realists who used realism in an attempt to communicate their visionary insights.

Other Works by Benito Pérez Galdós

The Golden Fountain Café. Translated by Walter Rubin. Pittsburgh, Pa.: Latin American Literary Review Press, 1989.

Our Friend Manso. Translated from the Spanish by Robert Russell. New York: Columbia University Press, 1987.

A Work about Benito Pérez Galdós

Ribbans, Geoffrey. History and Fiction in Galdós's Narratives. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1997.

Perse, Saint-John (pseudonym of Marie-René-Auguste-Alexis Saint-Léger) (1887–1975) poet, diplomat

Saint-John Perse was born on the island of St. Léger des Feuilles near Point-à-Pitre, Guadeloupe. His father was a lawyer, and his mother's family owned plantations. In 1899, his family moved to France and settled in Pau. While studying law at Bordeaux, Perse befriended Paul CLAUDEL and other writers. He published his first collection of poems, Éloges (1911) shortly after graduating.

Perse wrote his epic poem Anabase (Anabasis, 1924) while he was working as a diplomat in China from 1916 to 1921. The title refers to the classical Greek writer Xenophon's account of an army's march through the ancient East. American-born English poet T. S. Eliot (1888–1965) thought so highly of this work that he translated it into English and wrote a preface in which he called it "a piece of writing of the same importance as the later work of James Joyce." Perse composed more poems from 1921 to 1932 while he was secretary to French statesman Aristide Briand. In 1940, the Nazi secret police seized and destroyed manuscripts in his Paris apartment, and the collaborationist Vichy regime revoked Perse's citizenship and dismissed him from office.

Perse first fled to England and then settled in the United States, where he worked as a consultant on French poetry at the Library of Congress. He published many works after moving to the United States, including Exil (Exile, 1942), a collection of four poems. His collection Amers (Seamarks, 1957) has been called one of the greatest works to emerge from World War II, and its section titled "Étroits sont les vaisseaux" ("Narrow are the vessels") is considered one of the great erotic sequences in French literature.

The New York Times Book Review (July 27, 1958) wrote that "If one reads through all" Perse's poems, "one is immediately aware that each is, as it were, an instrument of one great oeuvre." As B. Lindblad, president of the Royal Academy of Sciences, said before Perse's acceptance speech for the 1960 Nobel Prize in literature, "with sublime intuition" Perse knows "how to describe in brilliant metaphors the reaction of the soul of humanity."

Other Works by Saint-John Perse

Anabasis. Translated and with a preface by T. S. Eliot. Fort Washington, Pa.: Harvest Books, 1970.

Collected Poems. With translations by W. H. Auden et al. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1983.

Exile, and Other Poems. Translated by Dennis Devlin. New York: Pantheon Books, 1953.

Selected Poems. Edited by Mary Ann Caws. New York: New Directions, 1982.

Works about Saint-John Perse

Krause, Joseph. "The Two Axes of Saint-John Perse's Imagery." Studi Francesi 36, no. 1 (January–April 1992): 81–95.

Sterling, Richard L. The Prose Works of Saint-John Perse: Towards an Understanding of His Poetry. New York: Peter Lang, 1994.

Pessoa, Fernando (Alberto Caeiro, Ricardo Reis, Álvaro de Campos)
(1888–1935) poet

Born in Lisbon, Portugal, to a cultured family, Pessoa was educated in South Africa and spoke English fluently. At age 15, he composed English sonnets in the style of Shakespeare.

In 1905, he returned to Portugal, attended the University of Lisbon, and became a commercial translator, an occupation that he held his entire life. He was one of the founders of Orpheu and Presença, two highly influential literary journals. At the time of his death, his work was not known outside of Portugal.

Pessoa began to write poetry in 1912. His poems express a longing for Portugal's glorious past, and they reflect the influence of the classical tradition and French SYMBOLISM. His earlier poems are nostalgic for a mythic past, whereas his later works deal more with consciousness and sensation.

His two main themes are the inherent limitations of one's power to apprehend reality and the elusive nature of personal identity. He invented literary alter egos to explore these themes. Pessoa wrote under 73 different names, and each persona reflects an individual outlook and Pessoa's belief that there is no one integrated personality. It is interesting to note that there is a recurrence of masks in his poems. His family name comes from the Latin persona, which refers to the masks worn by actors and, by extension, to the role the actors play. Also interesting is the fact that, in Portuguese, his family name means both "person" and "nobody."

Among his poetry collections are Sonnets (1918), English Poems (1922), and Mensagem (1934).

Another Work by Fernando Pessoa

Fernando Pessoa. Translated by Jonathan Griffin. Oxford: Carcanet, 1971.

A Work about Fernando Pessoa

Montero, George, ed. The Man Who Never Was. Providence, R.I.: Gavea Brown, 1982.

Pincherle, Alberto

See MORAVIA, ALBERTO.

Ping Hsin

See BING XIN.

Pirandello, Luigi (1867–1936) playwright, novelist, short-story writer

Luigi Pirandello was born in Caos, Italy, to Stefano Ricci-Gramitto, a sulfur dealer, and his wife, Caterina. His father expected him to join the family business, but Pirandello pursued academics instead. In 1887, he studied at the University of Palermo, then the University of Rome, before receiving a Ph.D. in Roman philology in 1891 from the University of Bonn in Germany. His dissertation explored the Sicilian dialect of his native region. After his university training, Pirandello returned to Rome and translated Goethe's Roman Elegies. He also published his first original work, Joyful Ill (1889), a collection of romantic and sentimental poetry.

In 1894, he entered an arranged marriage with Antoinetta Portulano, the daughter of his father's business associate. His wife suffered a severe nervous breakdown and violent outbursts. In 1919, once Pirandello became financially solvent in his work, she was sent to a sanitarium. The turbulent union produced three children and fueled the sense of tragedy and despair found in Pirandello's work.

In 1908, Pirandello became a professor of Italian literature at the Girls' Normal School in Rome. In 1921, he had dual theatrical successes with his plays Six Characters in Search of an Author and Henry IV. Six Characters experiments with theatrical conventions. The story revolves around actors and a director rehearsing Pirandello's own play

The Rules of the Game. During the rehearsal, a group of six people arrive, looking for someone to dramatize their story. As the tale unfolds, themes of morality, incest, and death intermingle. According to Susan Bassnett-McGuire in her book Luigi Pirandello, this work is a “two-fold process [that] takes place first in the author’s mind and then on the stage when the actors and director take over.”

When the play Henry IV (known in the United States as The Living Mask) came out, it was considered the Italian Hamlet. It is the most frequently performed of all of Pirandello’s works in English. It centers on a costume party at which each guest is required to portray a famous historical character. One man chooses to be Henry IV. During the evening, he falls from a horse, hits his head, becomes deluded into believing he is actually the monarch, and is sequestered in a country villa set to resemble a medieval castle. His family, convinced that he is mad, plans to cure him of his insanity, but it is revealed that the man has been merely wearing the mask of insanity for a number of years and enjoying the ruse. In her introduction to Three Plays, Felicity Firth summarizes the theme in Henry IV: “[E]ach individual creates for himself a personal vision of the truth in order to make life bearable. . . .”

Luigi Pirandello is one of Italy’s most respected playwrights. His ability to capture his own multi-tiered vision of truth has entertained audiences for many years. While he encountered initial resistance for his self-consciousness and experimentalism, he won the Nobel Prize in literature in 1934 and has become one of the most influential 20th-century dramatists. In 1935, Pirandello wrote of his critics, “The world of international literary criticism has been crowded for a long time with numerous Pirandellos—lame, deformed, all head and no heart, gruff, insane and obscure—in whom, no matter how hard I try, I cannot recognize myself, not even in the slightest degree.”

Other Works by Luigi Pirandello

Firth, Felicity, ed. Three Plays: “Enrico IV,” “Sei Personaggi in Cerca d’Autore,” “La Giara.” New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1988.

Tales of Madness: A Selection from Luigi Pirandello’s Short Stories for a Year. Translated by Giovanni R. Bussino. Brookline Village, Mass.: Dante University of America Press, 1984.

Three Major Plays. Translated by Carl R. Mueller. Hanover, N.H.: Smith & Kraus, 2000.

Works about Luigi Pirandello

Bassanese, Fiora A. Understanding Luigi Pirandello. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1997.

DiGaetani, John Louis, ed. A Companion to Pirandello Studies. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood, 1991.

poetic realism

Poetic realism began in Germany, Scandinavia, and Central Europe, having its origins in the works of Poul Müller (1794–1838) and developing in the poetry and fiction of Theodor Storm (1817–88) and Theodor Fontane (1819–98), but its influence spread to Eastern European countries and to Russia as well. It developed as a result of dissatisfaction with the constraints and embellishments of ROMANTICISM, and in response to the often bleak social conditions of the late 19th century.

The major difference between poetic realism and other REALISM movements was the tendency for writers who associated with poetic realism to view the harsh realities of the world through a veil of artistic illusion, allowing some elements of the romantic movement to appear in their works. Higher poetic themes—such as love, aesthetics, death—were placed in the context of everyday life. Russian exponents of this principle notably include Aleksandr PUSHKIN.

As the age of realism progressed and war became more common among Central and Eastern European countries, as well as in America, poetic realism lost many of its ties to romanticism, moving away from a veil of illusion to a clear view of the human condition.

In the 1890s, poetic realism began to fade into the background and to be replaced throughout much of Central Europe by photographic realism, or NATURALISM. Reality was seen without the veil of illusion, and life was viewed impersonally, with no attempt to gloss over the unpleasant aspects of human existence. This change, however, arrived later in the Balkans and Russia, where poetic realism held sway until the middle of the 20th century. Even after the start of World War II, poetic realism explored the subjects of poverty and suffering and, at the same time, expressed hope within the bleakest of circumstances.

In the Balkans, poetic realism found an even greater expression in the visual arts, as represented by the works of Marko Celebonovic (1902–87), Nedjeljko Gvozdenovic (1902–88), Pedja Milosavljevic (1908–87), and Ivan Tabakovic (1898–1977). The tendency, however, in both the literature and art of this period was for artists to attempt to come to terms with reality, as opposed to escaping it.

Twentieth-century Russian poets who are considered poetic realists include Andrey Voznesensky (1933–), Yevgeny YEVTUSHENKO, and Joseph Brodsky (1940–96). In France, as well as in the Balkans, poetic realism continued to filter itself into the emerging field of film.

Works about Poetic Realism

Bernd, Clifford. Poetic Realism in Scandinavia and Central Europe. Columbia, S.C.: Camden House, 1995.

Pizer, John David. Ego-Alter Ego: Double And/As Other in the Age of German Poetic Realism. Durham: University of North Carolina Press, 1998.

Ponge, Francis (1899–1988) poet, essayist

French poet and essayist Francis Ponge was born in Montpellier, France, on March 27. He first studied law in Paris and then literature in Strasbourg. In the years between World War I and World War II, he worked as a journalist and newspaper editor. In 1937, Ponge became a member of the Communist Party. He was actively involved during World War II in the organization of a resistance movement among journalists. He left the party in 1947 and lived for two years in Algeria prior to returning to Paris to teach. He retired in 1965 to give lectures in several countries.

Ponge's poetry first gained attention in the late 1940s when it was praised in an article by Jean Paul SARTRE. Ponge's poems were meticulous observations rather than emotional works. He described his ideas in rational terms that still remained lyrical. His collections include The Voice of Things (1942; translated 1972) and La Rage de l'expression (1952). He often looked at common objects as a means of expressing larger concerns such as in "L'Orange," from his collection Le Parti pris des choses (1942), in which an ordinary orange becomes a metaphor for ways of dealing with oppression.

Ponge died in Paris on August 6, leaving behind a legacy to world literature of the deeper understanding of the inherent simplicity of life.

Other Works by Francis Ponge

Selected Poems. Translated by C. K. Williams. Winston-Salem, N.C.: Lake Forest University Press, 1994.

The Delights of the Door: A Poem. Translated by Robert Bly. New York: Bedouin Press, 1980.

A Work about Francis Ponge

Sorrell, Martin. Francis Ponge. Boston: Twayne, 1981.

Poot, Linke

See DÖBLIN, ALFRED.

Popa, Vasko (1922–1991) poet

Vasko Popa was born in Grebenats, Banat, in Serbia. Although little is written of his life, he is one of the most widely translated modern Serbian poets. His works often describe the tragic experiences of the modern urban man in a time of war, and they express the fears and insecurities of humans trapped in a world that is becoming less and less human.

Popa's poetry is best known for its classical elements as it brings to life the myth of Kosovo as it appeared in the traditional epic songs, by translating them into the language of modern Yugoslav poetry. In Earth Erect (translated 1973), for example, Popa describes his country outside of war as “A field like no other / Heaven above it / Heaven below.”

Classical images of Serbia’s national culture dominate Popa’s poetry, thus leading to its success not only in his own country but even more so abroad, where his works have been used as song lyrics for both children’s classical folk-song anthologies and contemporary Serbian “rock” music. From surrealist fable to traditional folktale, combining autobiography with myth, Popa’s poetry embodies the spirit of a country struggling to maintain its identity.

Other Works by Vasko Popa

Earth Erect. Translated by Anne Pennington. Iowa City: International Writing Program, University of Iowa, 1973.

Homage to the Lame Wolf: Selected Poems, 1956–1975. Translated with an introduction by Charles Simic. Oberlin, Ohio: Oberlin College, 1979.

The Golden Apple: A Round of Stories, Songs, Spells, Proverbs and Riddles. Translated by Andrew Harvey and Anne Pennington. London: Anvil Press Poetry, 1980.

Works about Vasko Popa

Alexander, Ronelle. The Structure of Vasko Popa’s Poetry (UCLA Slavic Studies, Vol. 14). Columbus, Ohio: Slavica Publishers, 1986.

Lekic, Anita. The Quest for Roots: The Poetry of Vasko Popa (Balkan Studies, Volume 2). New York: Peter Lang, 1993.

postcolonialism

Postcolonialism is a complex phenomenon that has generated many interpretations. From a historical perspective, it refers to literature and cultures that have redefined themselves following the experience of Western colonization. It most commonly applies to the cultures of South Asia, Africa, and the Caribbean that have gained their independence since the Second World War (1939–45). Postcolonialism in Latin America has a longer history, going back to the 19th century. It also refers to a body of theory written primarily by diasporic academics—from the Caribbean, the Middle East, South Asia, and Africa—who now reside in Europe and the United States. Edward Said’s seminal work Orientalism (1978) casts a postcolonial eye on the discourse of the “Orient” generated by colonialism. This work has inspired many revisions and reinterpretations of colonial discourse. Similarly groundbreaking are Hohmi Bahba’s Dislocations of Culture (1994), which looks at the ways in which writers formed under colonialism turn the language of the colonizer into new forms of identity and resistance; and Gayatri Spivak’s In Other Worlds (1987), which applies postmodern, poststructuralist, and feminist theories to the reading of postcolonial discourse and literature.

Although most colonized countries won their independence during the 20th century, Latin America has a unique postcolonial history. Colonized in the 16th century primarily by Spain and Portugal, it experienced postcolonial movements in the 19th century when many of its countries won their independence and sought to define their cultural specificity. This was achieved by, for example, incorporating elements that had been rejected or marginalized by the colonizers, such as indigenous and African cultures, or else by turning to northern Europe and North America, instead of Spain or Portugal, for cultural models and ideals. However, especially toward the end of the century, Latin America experienced forms of economic and cultural colonization that were imported from Great Britain, France, and the United States that posed new challenges to national definition and visions of independence. During the 20th century, many Latin-American liberation movements and many prominent writers and intellectuals were inspired by Communist responses, especially that of Cuba, to colonialism and its aftermath.

After the Second World War, the European empires that had dominated a large part of the world during the 19th century, exporting their cultures and their literary forms, began their retreat. Independence movements led not only to political and national redefinitions but to creative responses to Western influences and oppression. Since the independence of India in 1947, inspired by the writings of Mohandas K. GANDHI, South Asia has seen an extraordinary renaissance of writers from different religions and regions, exploring South Asian and diasporic identity. Many of these writers are internationally known. V. S. NAIPAUL, for example, was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 2002. Since independence, African literature has also found an international audience and includes Nobel Prize winners such as Nadine GORDIMER and Wole SOYINKA. Books by writers from many different parts of the world are being published at an ever-increasing speed; many different voices are being heard, including those of women and the politically disenfranchised.

The NÉGRITUDE movement in France of the 1940s and 1950s, led by Aimé CÉSAIRE and Léopold SENGHOR, valorized African identity and revitalized African and Caribbean poetry. When he became president of independent Senegal in 1960, Senghor used the concept of négritude as part of his political agenda, creating debate and controversy among other African and Caribbean writers about the meaning of being African.

In the 1950s and 1960s, the Civil Rights movement in the United States added impetus to the revival of African culture, long suppressed by slavery and its aftermath, and encouraged or inspired liberation movements throughout the world. In South Africa, often at the cost of imprisonment or death, black and white writers increasingly dared to oppose apartheid. Also, since the 1970s, liberation movements by indigenous peoples in Australasia and Latin America have transformed dying oral cultures, based on myth and ritual, and created new genres, such as the oral testimonial. I Rigoberta Menchu: An Indian Woman in Guatemala by Rigoberta MENCHÚ is one of many such testimonials that have brought to international attention the plight of indigenous cultures. Similarly, since the 1970s, the outcast Dalits of India have begun to reinvent their own culture and DALIT LITERATURE.

The question of language is crucial to postcolonial writers who were forced to learn the language of the colonizers, most often English, Spanish, or French. (In some cases, there are competing colonial languages, for example French and English in Canada, and Afrikaans and English in South Africa). After independence, for whom were these writers writing and in what language should they write? Some followed the example of the Martinican novelist Raphaël Confiant (1951–), who chose to write in his native Creole and then changed to French. For most writers, it was a question of finding a wider audience. Chinua ACHEBE, considered to be the first African novelist, chose to write in English to reach not only Western readers but also many African readers who speak hundreds of different languages but whose lingua franca is English. Addressing different constituencies, the Kenyan NGUGI WA THIONG'O writes in both English and Kikuyu.

Postcolonial writers have shown to what extent they have been able to use their colonial languages in new and liberating ways. Their styles vary according to their specific cultural and historical circumstances. Drawing on oral and spiritual traditions alien to the modern, secular West, some writers, such as the Colombian Gabriel GARCÍA MÁRQUEZ and the Indian-born Salman RUSHDIE have combined myth and modernity, the sacred and the profane to create what has been called MAGIC REALISM, a popular postcolonial genre. Magic realism acknowledges the overlapping of cultures and the often absurd and ironic juxtapositions of competing beliefs, economic systems, and voices in the fragmented discourse of the post-modern and postcolonial world.

Postcolonialism has produced a strong immigrant and diasporic literature. For economic and political reasons, South Asians, Indonesians, Africans, Turks, and Caribbeans have established themselves in the West and have produced a new definition of what constitutes, for example, English or French or German or Dutch literature. Writers cannot easily be pinned down to a national identity. Dual nationality is common. Salman Rushdie wanders from Bombay to London to New York, always redefining the urban ground beneath his feet through the prism of his changing cultural experiences, including an India long left behind. The Trinidadian-born V. S. Naipaul reimagines the India, Africa, and Caribbean of his parents' diasporic past and chooses to live in England. Michael ONDAATJE moves from Sri Lanka to England to Canada. Other Indian, African, and Caribbean writers situate themselves within a tradition that includes, but is not reduced to, the colonial experience. Some of them emulate Arundhati ROY, a recipient of the Booker Prize, who has resisted the path of literary celebrity in the Indian diaspora and has remained in India, using her influence to support oppressed minorities—including tribal women—in their local cultural and political struggles.

Beginning with the collapse of the Berlin Wall in 1989, the disintegration of the empire of the Soviet Union, established since the Second World War, has produced its own, European form of postcolonial experience and literature. The fall of the Soviet Union has meant the reconfiguration of social and national identities in Eastern and Central Europe. Economic disorder and political unrest, especially due to the war in the former Yugoslavia and neighboring states, have also changed forms of literary expression and have increased the immigration of writers to Western Europe and the United States.

Electronic communications, the expansion of capitalism after the fall of the Soviet Union, and the economic liberalization of China have globalized the economy. For some peoples of the former colonial world, especially those opposed to Western forms of modernization, globalization, often interpreted as Americanization, is perceived as a threat to local cultures, religions, and forms of expression. For others, globalized forms of communication and dissemination of ideas are sources of new kinds of agency and self-determination. Because of their colonial histories, postcolonial writers remain especially alert to the dangers as well as the possibilities of globalization.

Works about Postcolonialism

- Appiah, Kwame Anthony. In My Father's House: Africa in the Philosophy of Culture. New York: Oxford University Press, 1993.
- Ashcroft, Bill, Gareth Williams, and Helen Tiffin. The Empire Writes Back: Theory and Practice in Postcolonial Literatures. New York: Routledge, 2002.
- Fanon, Frantz. Black Skin, White Masks. Translated by Charles Markmann. New York: Grove Press, 1991.
- . The Wretched of the Earth. Translated by Constance Farrington. New York: Grove Press, 1996.
- Glissant, Edouard. Caribbean Discourse: Selected Essays. Translated by J. Michael Dash. Charlottesville, Va.: Caraf Books (University of Virginia Press), 1992.
- Gugelberger, Georg M., ed. The Real Thing: Testimonial Discourse and Latin America. Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 1997.
- King, Anthony D., ed. Culture, Globalization, and the World-System: Contemporary Conditions for the Representation of Identity. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1997.
- Lazarus, Neil. Resistance in Postcolonial African Fiction. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1990.
- Ngugi Wa Thiong'o. Decolonising the Mind: The Politics of Language in African Literature. Portsmouth, N.H.: Heinemann, 1986.
- Stratton, John. Writing Sites: A Genealogy of the Postcolonial World. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1990.
- Viswanathan, Gauri. Masks of Conquest: Literary Study and British Rule in India. New York: Oxford University Press, 1998.

postmodernism

Postmodernism emerged after World War II as a reaction against MODERNISM, which upheld the potentially restorative and integrating power of literature. Postmodernists do not attempt to correct or remedy the chaos and cacophony of language, but rather they imitate and often celebrate it. Many postmodernists, for example Samuel BECKETT and Peter HANDKE, emphasize the alienation of the individual in the modern social environment and seem highly aware of the domineering presence of technology—computers, telephones, faxes, weapons of mass destruction—in daily life. Although the intellectual beginnings of postmodernism are often identified with the French school of structuralist criticism, the aesthetic ideas of postmodern writers and artists can be found in contemporary works around the globe.

Postmodernist works often combine elements of diverse genres, such as television, cartoons, and music, that have a potential appeal to popular culture, and they often challenge the ideological assumptions of contemporary society. Opposing the notions of mimetic representation, postmodernists agree that language has its own singular reality.

The postmodern movement is identified with its own critical theories, namely deconstruction and cultural criticism. Cultural criticism questions the notions of “high” and “low” cultures and tends to treat all works of art, from comic books to statues, as equally legitimate cultural expressions. Deconstruction (often referred to as poststructuralism), the postmodern movement primarily based on the work of French philosopher Jacques Derrida (1930–), questions the notion of a single, unified meaning in a literary work. Through an act of close reading, the deconstructionists attempt to show that texts are self-contradictory and lack a single, unified center.

The postmodern movement is by no means limited to the arts. Our notions about the relationship between ideology and power underwent dramatic change based on the work of the French philosopher Michel Foucault (1926–84). Julia Kristeva (1941–), a psychoanalytic gender critic, changed our notions of femininity and its relationship to arts. Psychology also experienced dramatic changes, primarily in the field of psychoanalysis. Jacques Lacan (1901–81) refined Sigmund FREUD’s ideas about the relationship of language, gender, and psyche.

In certain ways, postmodern thinkers demonstrate that the line between science and arts is not as self-demarcating as some would like it to be. Many postmodern scientists question the notion of a single, unified reality. The artificial intelligence expert Marvin Minsky (1927–) insists that computers can think. Chaos theory, developed by the chemist Ilya Prigogine (1917–), disrupts our concept of a unified universe. Currently, many postmodern thinkers are examining the role of computers and hypertext in our understanding of epistemology. These ideas closely relate to our changing understanding about the structure of language and discourse.

Postmodernism has influenced virtually every genre of literature, theater, and film. Even of greater significance, postmodernism has confronted our epistemological conceptions about language, image, and signs.

Works about Postmodernism

- Appignanesi, Chris. Introducing Postmodernism. New York: Totem Books, 2001.
- Docherty, Thomas, ed. Postmodernism. New York: Columbia University Press, 2002.
- Eagleton, Terry. The Illusions of Postmodernism. Oxford: Blackwell, 1996.
- Grenz, Stanley. A Primer on Postmodernism. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm.B. Eerdmans Publishing Co., 1996.
- Heartney, Eleanor. Postmodernism. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2001.

Premchand, Munshi (Dhanpat Rai Srivastana) (1880–1936) novelist, short-story writer

Premchand was born outside the city of Benares, India. His family was very poor. The plight of the poor and the downtrodden is one of the prevalent themes in Premchand’s literature. He is perhaps the most famous Hindi–Urdu novelist of Indian literature and is considered to be the father of the Urdu short story. One of the strongest influences in Premchand's earlier work was Gandhian politics. His later novels are a blend of his own faith in marxism and his growing disillusionment with GANDHI's brand of grassroots activism.

In 1899, Premchand became a schoolteacher and continued this profession for 20 years. Copies of his first collection of short stories Passion for the Fatherland (1908), written in his first penname Navab Rai, were burned by British officials because of their strong patriotic (anti-British) message. After this event, he wrote by the penname, Premchand. In 1915, Premchand stopped writing in Urdu completely and switched to writing in Hindi. This further increased his popularity because the Hindi language is spoken by a larger population in India.

By the time he wrote Godān (Gift of the Cow, 1936), published the year he died, Premchand had broken from his earlier optimistic portrayals of village life. Instead, he saw more clearly the dismal economic situation of India's rural poor. Godān offers a stark look at the lack of social and economic reform in villages, while metropolitan India is busy with modernization. Hori, the main character, and the village setting are realistic portraits that reveal the growing chasm between urban and rural India.

Because Premchand had his own publishing house, he encountered little difficulty in publishing his more controversial works. These works, such as Nirmala (1928), address the social and psychological problems imposed on women by society's norms. In particular, Premchand challenges the standard treatment of widows and prostitutes; at the time, widows were forced into financially dependent relationships with their family members because they were not given employment and were not allowed to remarry.

While serving as editor of the literary magazine Hans in the 1930s, Premchand used his position to create a mutual ground for literature and progressive politics. In 1936, he briefly served as president of the All India Progressive Writers' Association (AIPWA). This group was one of India's first attempts to form a collective of leftist, socialist writers. Premchand's novels were also an international success. His novel Godān has been translated into almost every Western language.

Other Works by Munshi Premchand

Gaban: The Stolen Jewels. Translated by Christopher R. King. Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2000.

Nirmala. Translated by Alok Rai. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999.

A Work about Munshi Premchand

Rai, Amrit. Premchand: His Life and Times. New York: Oxford University Press, 2002.

Proust, Marcel (1871–1922) novelist

Best known for his stream-of-consciousness autobiographical novel À la recherche du temps perdu (In Search of Lost Time, 1912; first published in English as Remembrance of Things Past), Marcel Proust was born in Auteuil, just outside of Paris, on July 10. The son of a wealthy doctor and his wife, a Jewish woman from a highly cultured background, Proust received an excellent education at the Lycée Condorcet. In spite of severe asthma, which plagued him throughout his life, he served one year in the military before attending the Sorbonne, where he received a degree in law.

Proust's literary skills became evident while he was still in his early teens. After graduation from the Sorbonne, he began to frequent the aristocratic salons in the wealthy sections of Paris. He also began to write for several of the Symbolist (see SYMBOLISM) magazines. His first books, Portraits de peintres (1896) and Pleasures and Regrets (1896), came out in rapid succession and established him as an emerging literary voice.

Between 1895 and 1899, Proust worked steadily on an autobiographical novel, which he never completed and which was never published. He returned to this genre with greater success later in life. Proust supported himself with family money and with money that he earned translating the works of English art critic John Ruskin. He also worked briefly as a lawyer, becoming active with Émile ZOLA in the Dreyfus affair. One of the prime examples of anti-Semitism in late 19th-century France, this case dealt with a false accusation of treason against Jewish army captain Alfred Dreyfus.

Proust's asthma increased in severity as he grew into adulthood, and he often spent large periods of time under the devoted care of his mother, to whom he became almost neurotically attached. The death of his father in 1903, followed by the death of his mother two years later, combined with the loss of his lover caused Proust to withdraw from his high-profile society life almost to the point of his becoming a total recluse. He took up residence in a soundproof flat and, until 1919, lived there, devoting himself entirely to his writing. He rarely left his dwelling except during the summer months, when he would retreat to coastal Cabourg. Financially secure, he was finally able to begin work in earnest on his masterpiece.

Inspired by the autobiographical works of GOETHE and CHATEAUBRIAND, Proust began work on In Search of Lost Time. He spent the majority of his time during this period locked in his bedroom writing late into the night and sleeping by day. He produced the first of seven volumes of the work in 1912.

Critical Analysis

In Search of Lost Time has no clearly constructed plot line. It is told entirely in a stream-of-consciousness style by a nameless narrator who, while he is not exactly Proust, resembles the author in many ways. He begins his journey in the novel completely ignorant, only beginning to rediscover his childhood memories after he is given a Madeleine cake soaked in linden tea, similar to those his aunt had given to him when he was a young boy. Memory becomes the central focus of the work, which traces the lives of the narrator's family as well as two other families, one aristocratic, the other Jewish. The smallest details within the work often prove to be the most important, and the characters are richly detailed.

Aside from his novels, Proust is also noted for his elaborate and lengthy letters. Collected volumes of his correspondence reveal his varied interests and his primary belief that a writer must be constantly seeking new information. He is considered by many critics to be one of the leading pioneers of the modern novel, and his influence can be seen in the works of Virginia WOOLF, Samuel BECKETT, Claude SIMON, and others. His skills as a literary critic remained undiscovered in his lifetime; it was not until the posthumous publication of Contre Sainte-Beuve (1954) that his nonfiction works received any serious attention.

The publication of the second volume of Proust's autobiographical masterpiece was delayed due to the start of World War I. It did not become available until 1919. This volume and the ones that followed, however, earned him international acclaim. It is a massive work, totaling more than 3,000 pages. Proust dedicated the final decade of his life to its perfection. On his deathbed, he was still making corrections, leaving the final volumes without what he considered to be their finishing touches. Proust died in Paris on November 18.

Other Works by Marcel Proust

The Captive. Translated by Charles Kenneth Scott-Moncrieff. New York: A. & C. Boni, 1929.

The Complete Short Stories of Marcel Proust. Translated by Joachim Neugroschel. New York: Cooper Square Press, 2001.

Selected Letters: 1880–1903. Translated by Ralph Manheim. New York: Doubleday, 1983.

Selected Letters Volume 2: 1904–1909. Translated by Philip Kolb. London: Collins, 1989.

Works about Marcel Proust

Carter, William C. Marcel Proust: A Life. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2000.

Hindus, Milton. A Reader's Guide to Marcel Proust. New York: Syracuse University Press, 2001.

Shattuck, Roger. Proust's Way: A Field Guide to In Search of Lost Time. New York: W. W. Norton, 2000.

Pushkin, Aleksandr (1799–1837) poet, novelist, short-story writer

Aleksandr Sergeevich Pushkin was born in Mikhailovskoe, Russia, to aristocratic parents, Sergey Pushkin and Nadezhda Osipovna. On his mother's side, Pushkin descended from an African slave, given to Peter the Great as a state present from the Ottoman Empire. He had close relationships with his grandmother and his nurse, who brought him up on Russian folktales, and with the serfs on his family's estate. He was given a classical education from one of the best schools available in Russia, the Lyceum Tsarskoye Selo. It was there that he began to write poetry. He graduated with honors in 1817.

After graduation, Pushkin began to pursue a life of pleasure, freedom, and revolutionary thought in St. Petersburg. He published poetry that was considered scandalous at the time and brought the attention of the czar. In 1820, he published the long narrative poetic romance Ruslan and Ludmilla, which combined the traditional elements of a Russian fairy tale with the exquisite control of poetic language. The poem was immediately recognized as a masterpiece of Russian literature and brought fame to Pushkin.

That same year, Pushkin published Ode to Liberty, a poem that satirized famous figures of the czar's court and was viewed as politically and socially radical by the censors. Pushkin was exiled by the czar's police and forced to relocate in Ekaterinoslav in southern Russia. This banishment provided an opportunity for Pushkin to travel to the exotic Caucasus and Crimea and gave him inspiration for his short stories, "The Prisoner of the Caucasus" (1822) and "The Fountain of Bakhchisarai" (1824). Both stories center on the beautiful and inspiring mountainous landscape, and they reveal a strong influence of the poetry of the notorious Lord Byron. During his exile, Pushkin led a riotous lifestyle, and he was then ordered to return to his family's estate in Mikhailovskoe.

Far away from the court and stimulating society, in the solitude of Mikhailovskoe, Pushkin began to work without distractions. There he conceived his historical epic work, Boris Godunov (completed 1825; published 1831). The poem, broad in its scope, presents a tragic story of a downfall of a Russian czar. The poem was popularly received and was transformed into an opera by Modest Mussorgsky. Pushkin gave a public reading of the poem for which the government immediately reprimanded him. After the death of Alexander I in 1825, the new czar, Nicholas I, offered to be the personal censor of Pushkin; all future poems and stories were to be read directly by him before publication. Pushkin found this arrangement restrictive, however, and the czar ordered that he be put under constant government surveillance for the rest of his life.

Critical Analysis

Aleksandr Pushkin is considered the greatest poet of Russia. Often relying on historical foundations, his work established and shaped the country's poetic language. Influenced by the English romantic poets, such as Wordsworth and Lord Byron, however, Pushkin's attitude was ironic in the manner of Voltaire. His work was unprecedented in its scope, in imagery, and in its use of common Russian language.

In the long narrative poems Poltava (1829) and The Bronze Horseman (1837), Pushkin extols the achievements of Peter the Great. In both poems, the earthly figure of Russia's emperor is transformed through lyricism into a heroic deity who builds the Russian Empire.

Eugene Onegin (1833) is considered to be the definitive masterpiece of Russian literature. A novel in verse, Eugene Onegin dramatically describes the ill-fated relationship between lovers. The complex rhyme scheme and unprecedented, delicate treatment of poetic meter still amaze readers of Pushkin. Besides its poetic language, the work also contains a biting commentary on the social order of Russia during the 1820s. Some critics consider Eugene Onegin among the greatest works of all literature.

Although Pushkin is primarily known for his verse, his short stories also attained critical recognition. His stories and poems are based not only on historical facts but also on the deep cultural traditions of the Russian people. In “The Golden Cockerel” (1833), he introduces the traditional elements of a fairy tale into his prose, finding inspiration for his work in the bedtime stories that were told to him in childhood. He transformed several of these fairy tales into works of high poetic merit.

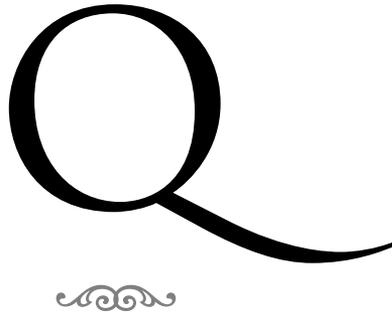

The Queen of Spades (1834) reveals deep psychological torments of a gambler who decides to risk his entire fortune in a game of cards. Eugene Onegin and The Queen of Spades were adapted into operas by Russian composer Tchaikovsky, while “The Golden Cockerel” became the basis for an opera by Rimsky-Korsakov. The adaptability of Pushkin’s verse into music demonstrates the lyrical quality of the poet’s work.

In 1837, Pushkin was wounded in a duel over an alleged affair between his wife and a young Frenchman; he died several days later, leaving a legacy for generations of Russian writers and for every major poetic movement. Pushkin clearly showed the poetic capacity of the Russian language, he also memorialized the rich cultural heritage of his motherland. Indeed, Pushkin is now considered to be an incomparable part of Russian language and culture.

A Work about Aleksandr Pushkin

Feinstein, Elaine. Pushkin. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1998.

Qabbani

See KABBANI, NIZAR.

Quasimodo, Salvatore (1901–1968) poet

Salvatore Quasimodo, recipient of the 1959 Nobel Prize for literature, was born in the small town of Modica, Sicily. The son of a railroad worker, he began to develop a love of writing in his early childhood. His family, however, felt that it would be much more practical for him to pursue an education in a technical field; therefore, he moved to Rome in his late teens to study engineering. Financial difficulties forced him to abandon his education in 1923, but a series of odd jobs eventually led to a secure government position as a civil engineer in 1926. Stable in his employment, Quasimodo was then able to return to his thoughts of becoming a writer. His brother-in-law, the novelist Elio Vitorini, introduced Quasimodo into literary circles where he soon befriended fellow writers Eugenio MONTALE, and Giuseppe UNGARETTI.

Quasimodo published his first poetry in magazines. His first volume of collected works, Water and Land (1930), contained several poems that had been written when he was as young as 18 as well as numerous, more recent pieces. This collection falls into what has been defined as the early phase of Quasimodo's career. Divided by World War II, his works are distinctly marked as falling into two separate stylistic categories. Before the war, as in this collection, his writing style was complex and tended toward the metaphysical. Most of his poetry during this period was nostalgic, filled with images of Sicily as a backdrop for feelings of loneliness and melancholy. At the same time, he also concerned himself with themes of childhood memory and a love for the beauty and culture of Italy. He connects this culture to influences of various invaders, such as the Greeks and Romans, and the profound and lasting effect they had on his own literary heritage.

As Quasimodo's early poetic style developed, he began to come under the influence of the symbolist movement (see SYMBOLISM). Sunken Oboe (1932) and Scent of Eucalyptus (1933) both contain poems that exemplify the movement's adherence to suggestive imagery and mysticism. As a result, much of his work during this period is considered difficult to analyze because of the complex and metaphysical nature of his imagery content.

In 1938, becoming more involved in his writing, Quasimodo left his government post to become an assistant to Cesare Zavattini, a well-known editor of several popular literary periodicals. He continued to work on his own poetry and to publish his works regularly in collections such as Greek Lyrics (1940), a compilation of ancient Greek lyrical poetry. In this work, he once again returned to the idea of past influences, making associations between modern style and ancient language. Quasimodo also became enamored of the academic lifestyle at this point. He devoted himself entirely to his writing, expanding his focus to include essays on poetry and other forms of literature as well as translations of classical poetry and drama, including the works of Shakespeare, Homer, Virgil, and Sophocles. In 1941, he gained employment as a professor of Italian literature at the Giuseppe Verdi Conservatory in Milan, allowing him to continue to spread his own poetic ideals to future generations.

The start of World War II marked a shift in Quasimodo's writing. He became a member of an anti-Fascist group and spent a brief period of time in prison. There, he began to develop a more humanistic approach to his work, becoming more concerned with social conditions, contemporary issues, and the atrocities of war and human suffering. His best-known work, And Suddenly It's Evening (1942), marks the beginning of this change in style.

Quasimodo briefly joined the Italian Communist Party at the end of the war, but he quickly resigned in protest of the party's insistence that he dedicate his talents to producing political poetry. In response, he published Day after Day (1947), a collection of poems in which he focuses on the hardships faced by Italian citizens during World War II and on his own disdain for his country and the role that it played in the war. Vivid in description, this work is often considered one of the strongest volumes of antiwar poetry to come out of any country during this period. It reflects strongly Quasimodo's own concerns for the fate of Italy, as well as his fear that the country will lose its culture and beauty. This falls in direct parallel to his early works and their tendency to exemplify those same values of cultural and natural beauty.

In the later years of his life, Quasimodo continued to focus on issues pertaining to the tragedy of human conditions and social injustices; however, he also began to return to some of his earlier nostalgia, this time not for places but for people whose lives impacted his own. Quasimodo had one child, a daughter Orietta, born in 1935 to Amelia Spicaletti, a woman to whom he was never married. His first wife, Bice Donetti, had passed away in 1948. Although he remarried to the dancer Maria Cumani, they permanently separated in 1960, leaving him with three lost loves. His fond but often bittersweet memories of these women, as well as reminiscences over several friends who died before him, form much of the driving force behind his final volume of poetry, To Give and To Have (1966).

He continued to be active as a writer and a critic until his death. While in Amalfi where he was judging a poetry competition, Quasimodo suffered a cerebral hemorrhage. He was returned to Naples for treatment, where he died, leaving behind a legacy of poetry best known for its fight against the social injustice and tragedy of war.

Other Works by Salvatore Quasimodo

Complete Poems. Translated by Jack Bevan. New York: Schocken Books, 1984.

The Poet and the Politician, and Other Essays. Translated by Thomas G. Bergin and Sergio Pacifici. Carbondale: Southern Illinois University Press, 1964.

Queirós, José María de (Eça de Queirós) (1845–1900) novelist

Born in Portugal, Eça de Queirós was the illegitimate son of a magistrate and was raised by his grandparents. He was sent to boarding school at the age of five. This parental neglect may explain the satirical nature of his works.

After law school, he became a journalist and then entered the consular service in 1872. He resided mostly abroad, and his Letters from England (1870) provide us some amusing views on life in Victorian England.

Considered Portugal's greatest novelist, he was influenced by ROMANTICISM and NATURALISM. He uses very expressive, realistic language and is known for his character descriptions. His major novels are critical portrayals of upper-class Portuguese society. In O crime do padre Amaro (1876; The Sin of Father Amaro) and his masterpiece Os Maias (1888), Queiroz depicts the corruption he saw among the clergy and in high society. He is critical of the intellectual elite, which he believes suffers from moral deficiency. His works seem to say that Portuguese society could not change unless there was a major catastrophe.

Other Works by José María de Eça de Queirós

The Illustrious House of Ramires. Translated by Anne Stevens. New York: New Directions, 1994.

The Relic. Translated by Margaret Jull Costa. New York: Hippocrene Books, 1995.

A Work about José María de Eça de Queirós

Coleman, Alexander. Eça de Queirós and the European Realism. New York: New York University Press, 1980.

Queiróz, Raquel de (1910–) journalist, novelist

Raquel de Queiróz was born November 17 in Fortaleza, a town in the state of Ceará in Brazil. Her great-grandmother was the cousin of another famous Brazilian writer, José de ALENCAR, also from the state of Ceará in northeastern Brazil. At age seven, she moved with her family to Rio de Janeiro, but they returned to Ceará just two years later, and she would remain there until she graduated from college in 1921.

Queiróz began to write early, and she had a long career as a journalist. She also wrote novels, the first of which, The Fifteen, was published in 1930. The novel was very well received, and it gave Queiróz a literary name in Brazil. She received the Graça Aranha Foundation prize for the novel in Rio de Janeiro in 1931. Just a few years later, she formed friendships with Graciliano Ramos and Jorge Lins do Rego, also from the northeast. Through the exceptional writing of Queiróz and others from this region, the northeastern novels of Brazil were born. In the 1930s, Queiróz married literary figure and poet José Auto da Cruz Oliveira. They had a daughter and later separated. She continued to write in various genres throughout her life, including journalistic chronicles, novels, short stories, theater, and even children's literature. One of her best-known novels, The Three Marias (1939), is often considered semiautobiographical because it recounts the story of a young woman through her developmental years, from the age of 12 until she turns 20.

Queiróz was also very politically active, and she represented Brazil at the session of the General Assembly of the United Nations in 1966, where she worked especially on the Human Rights Commission. On August 4, 1977, the Brazilian Academy of Letters elected her as its first female member, paving the way for future female authors in Brazil.

Other Works by Raquel de Queiróz

Castro-Klaren, Sara, Sylvia Molloy, and Beatriz Sarlo, eds. Selections in Women's Writing in Latin America. Boulder, Colo.: Westview, 1992.

A Work about Raquel de Queiróz

Ellison, Fred P. Brazil's New Novel: Four Northeastern Masters. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1954.

Queneau, Raymond (1903–1976) poet, novelist

Raymond Queneau was born in Le Havre, France. A man of many diverse intellectual interests, he was a mathematician, scholar, humorist, linguist, and poet. When he was 17, Queneau went to Paris, where he briefly associated with André BRETON's surrealism. He composed the manifesto Permettez! (1920) but soon broke with the group to write about the link he saw between surrealism and EXISTENTIALISM.

In his works, Queneau often uses colloquial speech patterns and phonetic spelling of words. Fascinated by languages, he felt that written French needed to free itself from archaic rules and restrictions. His first novel, Le Chiendent (The Bark Tree, 1933), was noted for its use of slang and casual language. Because of this, Queneau's works are difficult to translate, as the language itself is critical to the interpretation.

Queneau is best known internationally for his novel Zazie dans le métro (1959), the story of a young girl who comes to visit Paris and stays with her heterosexual uncle, who is employed as a dancer in a gay bar. Her one desire is to ride the metro, which she cannot do because the workers are on strike. Instead, she embarks on a journey toward adulthood. The novel was adapted to film in 1960, gaining both positive and negative critical attention for its bold use of language and its break from cultural norms.

After this first film endeavor, Queneau collaborated on several other occasions with "New Wave" film directors. His work in this genre marks his most notable contribution to world literature. In addition, one of his poems was made popular when it was set to music by Juliette Greco. Queneau was elected to the Goncourt Academy in 1952. He died on October 26, having left his mark in the destruction of traditional literary norms.

Another Work by Raymond Queneau

Stories and Remarks. Translated by Marc Lowenthal. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 2000.

A Work about Raymond Queneau

Guicharnaud, Jacques. Raymond Queneau. Translated by June Guicharnaud. New York: Columbia University Press, 1965.

Quental, Antero Tarquínio de

(1842–1891) poet

Antero Tarquínio de Quental was born in Ponta Delgada, Portugal. He was from an aristocratic family of intellectuals, writers, and religious leaders. Nevertheless, all his life Quental was a rebel and had decidedly liberal leanings.

He was the key figure in the Generation of Coimbra, a group of students at the University of Coimbra who attempted to revitalize postromantic Portuguese literature. The Generation of Coimbra had a great deal in common with Latin-American MODERNISM, and Quental had many affinities with Rubén DARÍO, modernism's key figure.

Quental's Modern Odes (1865) abandons romantic decadence and returns to a vocabulary of classical images and symbols, presenting a heightened, purified view of reality with a pessimistic tone.

Though not an innovator, Quental was a master of the sonnet. He proved this in his Complete Sonnets (1886), a collection of 109 sonnets that serve as a spiritual autobiography.

Quental, though a minor figure, was an important voice of modernism and social reform in 19th-century Portugal.

R

Rao Srinivasa, Srirangam

See SRI SRI.

Rabéarivelo, Jean-Joseph (1903–1937)

poet

Jean-Joseph Rabéarivelo was born in Tananarive, Madagascar. His mother was a member of an aristocratic Madagascar family that had been impoverished by the French takeover of the island. Rabéarivelo was educated by his uncle in French schools but left school at 13. He worked in various occupations, including as a librarian, which gave him the opportunity to read widely. He began to write poetry, mostly in French but some in his native Malagasy, at first under pseudonyms. He also began to write for journals, and when his article on Madagascar poetry was accepted by the international journal Anthropos in 1923, Rabéarivelo decided to become a full-time writer. During the same year, he became a proofreader for a printing press, a job he kept until his death in 1937. He married in 1926 and had five children; his grief over the death of his youngest daughter in 1933, expressed in a short story entitled “Un conte de la nuit,” may have contributed to his death. After struggling with addictions, Rabéarivelo committed suicide by poisoning himself.

A sensation of despair and foreboding overhang Rabéarivelo’s poetry, which was influenced by the work of Charles BAUDELAIRE and the French symbolists (see SYMBOLISM) as well as by traditional Malagasy form. His melancholy resonates through his poems, as in “Valiha,” which both celebrates and grieves for a transformation of nature into art, when bamboo shoots, rustling in the wind, are turned into a musical instrument, the traditional stringed valiha of Madagascar:

There they will sound until an artist comes who will break their godlike youth and flay them in his village and stretch out their skins with shards of calabashes . . .

The isolation and sadness of the speakers of his poems derive from Rabéarivelo’s personal life experiences. His sorrow was further accentuated by his perceived failure in life, giving his poems a poignant bitter-sweetness. His despair is tinged with a quiet resilience that was derived from his love of freedom and nature, echoing the chants of Madagascar’s highlands. Gerald Moore and Ulli Beier remark, “In his poetry he has destroyed and dismembered reality. And out of the fragments he has built a new mythical world; it is a world of death and frustration, but also transcended by a sad beauty of its own.”

Another Work by Jean-Joseph Rabéarivelo

Translations from the Night: Selected Poems of Jean-Joseph Rabéarivelo. Edited by John Reed and Clive Wake. London: Heinemann Educational, 1975.

Works about Jean-Joseph Rabéarivelo

Adejunmobi, Moradewun. Jean-Joseph Rabéarivelo, Literature, and Lingua Franca in Colonial Madagascar. New York: Peter Lang, 1996.

Moore, Gerald and Ulli Beier, eds. Modern Poetry from Africa. New York: Viking, 1963.

Rabinowitz, Sholem

See ALEICHEM, SHALOM.

Ravikovitch, Dahlia (1936–) poet

Dahlia Ravikovitch was born in Ramat Gan, a suburb of Tel Aviv (now in Israel), and spent her early years on a kibbutz (a communal farm or settlement in Israel) before attending high school in Haifa. She later studied at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Ravikovitch published her first collection of poems, The Love of an Orange, in 1959 when she was still in the army. She has worked as a journalist, teacher, and television reviewer and continues to write poetry.

Ravikovitch’s early poems are often romantic, evoking distant places, love, and mythological figures. Her later work contains increased satire and sarcasm but still maintains intellectual understanding and sensitivity.

After the Israeli war in Lebanon in 1982, Ravikovitch became active in the Israeli peace movement, and her poetry often tackles the difficult subject of war. She has said, “Everyone wants peace but everyone thinks someone else should bring it.” Yet, it remains difficult to categorize her work—she takes on womanhood, human rights, and war, alongside inner life and loneliness as some of her themes.

Ravikovitch is considered one of Israel’s leading poets. She has also written some prose and several children’s books, has translated poetry by William Butler Yeats, Edgar Allan Poe, and T. S. Eliot into Hebrew, and is the recipient of the Shlonsky, Brenner, Ussishkin, and Bialik Prizes.

Other Works by Dahlia Ravikovitch

A Dress of Fire. Translated by Chana Bloch. Camp Hill, Pa.: Horizon House Publishers, 1978.

The Window: New and Selected Poems. In collaboration with Ariel Bloch. New York: Sheep Meadow Press, 1989.

Works about Dahlia Ravikovitch

Cooperman, Alan. “Making Peace Where Politicians Fear to Tread.” U.S. News and World Report, June 30, 1997. Available online at <http://traubman.igc.org/makepeac.htm>.

Lowin, Joseph. “Born to Dream: A Discussion into English of Dahlia Ravikovitch’s ‘The Reason for Falling.’” From the Literary Corner (17 April 2002) of The National Center for the Hebrew Language. Available online at www.ivrit.org/literary/born_to_dream.htm.

realism

Realism in literature is a worldwide movement that had its most profound effects in fiction and drama in the late 1800s. Born out of the ideas of the ROMANTIC novel but infused with concrete details and accurate descriptions of society, the characters of realist fiction are drawn from the events and contexts of modern life and face everyday obstacles. Realism, as it has spread throughout the world, has mutated into POETIC REALISM, NATURALISM, SOCIALIST REALISM, MAGIC REALISM, and (in Italy) VERISMO. Realism has molded the expectations of readers worldwide, and in spite of the antirealist trends in MODERNISM and POSTMODERNISM, it remains a force every writer must reckon with to this day.

French Realism

Realism is most commonly traced to the French novelist Honoré de BALZAC and his series of novels and stories which, grouped together, form The Human Comedy (1840). Balzac's intention was to portray, as accurately as possible, all aspects of French life and culture, from the lowest prostitute to the highest political leader. His attention to detail in setting and characterization provided the foundations for the movement, although the actual plots of his works, often absurd and almost unbelievable, were far from the goals to which realism ultimately aimed.

In 1857, Gustave FLAUBERT's Madame Bovary became the prototype for the realist novel. Like Balzac's work, Flaubert's novel was the result of systematic research; however, instead of fanciful plots, he focused instead on the issue of female adultery and the unhappy married life of a country woman, Emma Bovary. Considered mild according to modern standards, Flaubert's love scenes were so detailed that they resulted in the author facing charges of obscenity. He was called the anatomist of the heart.

Russian Realism

The shift from romantic idealism to realism in Russian literature was primarily initiated by the prose of Nikolay GOGOL, which addressed aspects of everyday life of the common people in Russia. In many respects, realism in Russia coincided with the development of a large class of government officials and merchants. The works of realism often depict the lives and conflicts of the Russian middle class and deal with themes such as marriage, money, and class relations. For the realists, literature needed to reflect the problems and issues pertinent to the economic, political, and social life of the nation.

In the 1850s, during the early phase of the realist movement, such writers as Aleksandr OSTROVSKY and Ivan GONCHAROV began to shift artistic focus toward the previously neglected merchant class, while poets such as Nikolay Nekrasov (1821–78) created long narrative poems that focused on the social ills suffered by the poor. The early works of realism often also depicted the moral degeneration of the Russian aristocrats.

Most of the realist masterpieces produced in Russia emerged during the movement's late phase, which is sometimes referred to as the golden age of Russian literature. The highly sophisticated prose of Ivan TURGENEV, for instance, focuses on the social dynamics of minor aristocrats and middle-class families. Turgenev also provided an unprecedented level of literary attention to the Russian peasantry. Fyodor DOSTOYEVSKY, however, concentrated on psychological realism. His novels carefully examine the emotional motivations and desires of his characters. Another giant of realism, Leo TOLSTOY, combined astute social commentary with observations about spirituality and religion. Most critics view Anton CHEKHOV as the last seminal figure of Russian realism. Like many other realists, Chekhov focused on the problems and moral dilemmas faced by middle-class families. Chekhov believed that the middle class was the backbone of Russian society and, therefore, centered his work on it.

Chinese Realism

In China, realism accompanied MODERNISM in literature into the 20th century. In a sense, many modernist writers, such as HU Shih, were realists in their use of objectivity to reflect the modern "condition."

Several literary groups and organizations formed during the May Fourth era, a period of unprecedented intellectual openness, innovation, and experimentation in China. Among them was a group of scholars who comprised the Literary Association. They also came to be known as the realist school. Mao Dun (1896–1981; also known as Mao Tun) was the leader of this group and its most prominent practitioner. He took over the journal Short Story Monthly and converted it to a journal of vernacular literature (baihua literature). The use of the vernacular was an important component of realism in that it best captured the language of the Chinese people and contributed to an accurate representation.

Mao Dun and the realist school openly advocated “art for life’s sake,” which was a continuation of the idea that literature could effect social change. In contrast to the romantic tradition of “art for art’s sake,” the objective representation of reality had a sociopolitical purpose, and many realist writers had agendas for reform. BA Jin, an ardent anarchist and Communist, for example, was known for his realistic portrayals of Chinese society, as can be seen in Family (1931), his chronicle of the falling gentry. Mao Dun’s 1933 work, Midnight, was another such work: Considered a major political novel of the era, it was noted for its objectivity, optimism for change, and revolutionary appeal.

Realism often manifested itself in short stories and novels about daily life and included criticism of government or society. BING Xin’s short stories, such as “Loneliness” (1922), about young women confronting issues in love and life, were extremely popular, and because of her realistic portrayals, they often provided psychological insight readers could relate to.

The poetry school of realism also provided realistic depictions of Chinese life, adding innovative form and language. Realistic poetry focused on the preservation of natural rhythms as found in vernacular speech, as opposed to the poetic and formal diction of formalists or the experimental language of symbolist poetry. Realism’s poets included Hu Shih, Li Jinfa (1900–76), and Dai Wangshu (1905–50), whose works were published in the journal Poetry.

By the onset of the communist revolution, realism had faded into the more direct objectives of socialist realism. Works took on a distinct socialist tenor, but components of realism, such as the close representation of reality to provide social critique, as well as writing in the vernacular, persisted. These powerful elements of realism render it a continuing popular force in Chinese literature today, although it frequently appears in new, slightly changed forms.

Works about Realism

Anderson, Marston. Limits of Realism. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1989.

Fanger, Donald, and Caryl Emerson. Dostoevsky and Romantic Realism: A Study of Dostoevsky in Relation to Balzac, Dickens, and Gogol. Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern University Press, 1998.

Lukacs, Georg. The Theory of the Novel. Translated by Anna Bostock. Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press, 1974.

Mortimer, Armine Kotin. Writing Realism: Representations in French Fiction. Baltimore, Md.: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2000.

Reid, J. H. Narration and Description in the French Realist Novel: The Temporality of Lying and Forgetting. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1993.

Reis, Ricardo

See PESSOA, FERNANDO.

Remarque, Erich Maria (pseudonym of Erich Paul Kramer) (1898–1970) novelist

Erich Maria Remarque was born in Osnabruck, Germany, to Anna Marie and Peter Maria Kramer, a bookbinder. Despite the modest income of the family, Remarque was educated in the best private school in town, but his studies at the University of Munster were interrupted by the outbreak of World War I and his subsequent draft into the army at the age of 18. Remarque fought on the Western front and was wounded several times.

After discharge from the military, Remarque completed a pedagogy course offered by the government to veterans and soon began his writing career as a journalist for a sports magazine, Sportsbild, and then became its assistant editor.

Remarque’s first novel, All Quiet on the Western Front (1929), is his most famous work. It realistically depicts the horrors faced by soldiers of both sides during World War I. The novel begins in 1917, after Paul Baumer, the protagonist, loses half of his friends in battle. Encouraged by their teacher to enlist in the German army, Baumer and his classmates find themselves in the trenches under constant attack by French machine guns and poisonous clouds of mustard gas. Baumer's romantic and nationalistic perspective of war, which the reader finds in the beginning of the novel, is replaced by sudden physicality, violence, and, ultimately, a sense of the futility of war. Today, All Quiet on the Western Front is considered one of the best depictions of war and a masterpiece of German literature. The work was internationally acclaimed and read worldwide. In Germany, however, the novel was politically controversial: Not only did it enrage members of the rising Nazi party, it was also labeled as defeatist and unpatriotic by many veterans whose sensibilities were injured by the frankness Remarque depicted.

In 1931, Remarque published The Way Back. A chilling sequel to All Quiet on the Western Front, the novel presents the collapse of the German government and army after the war and the return of the veterans into a world that has been shattered forever. In the 1930s, Remarque's position in Germany became precarious because of the rise of the Nazi regime. All Quiet on the Western Front was banned and was among the works that were publicly burned by the Nazis in 1933. The premier of the film adaptation was violently disrupted by Nazi gangs. In 1938, after accusations of pacifism, the Nazi government stripped Remarque of citizenship. Remarque fled to the United States and settled in Switzerland after World War II.

Remarque's later works did not receive the same critical acclaim as All Quiet on the Western Front but achieved a wide popularity among readers. He continued to describe a European society plagued by social and political upheavals. Remarque also addressed the oppression of the Nazi rule: Arch of Triumph (1946) portrays a German physician who flees from the Nazi rule. Remarque also closely collaborated with filmmakers in the United States, and several of his novels were adopted into screenplays.

Today, Erich Maria Remarque's work continues to remind readers of the horrors of war. His works are widely read and have been translated into more than 20 languages. A remarkable and heroic writer, Remarque was not afraid to express his views, despite the constant threats and harassments by the Nazi regime. Remarque died in Locarno, Switzerland.

Other Works by Erich Maria Remarque

The Black Obelisk. Translated by David Lindley. New York: Fawcett Books, 1998.

Three Comrades. Translated by A. W. Wheen. New York: Fawcett Books, 1998.

A Work about Erich Maria Remarque

Barker, Christine. Erich Maria Remarque. New York: Barnes and Noble, 1980.

Reyes, Neftali Ricardo

See NERUDA, PABLO.

Rhys, Jean (Ella Gwendolyn Rees Williams) (1890–1979) novelist, short-story writer

Jean Rhys was born in Roseau, Dominica, West Indies, to William Rees Williams, a Welsh doctor, and Minna Williams (née Lockhart). She attended a Dominican convent school until immigrating to England at age 16, where she attended Cambridge's Perse School and London's Academy of Dramatic Art before joining a touring theater company. Three-and-a-half black notebooks, filled after a romantic break in 1913, were the basis for the novel Voyage in the Dark (1934).

During the 1920s, Rhys was loosely a part of the "Left Bank" writers, including such writers as James Joyce, Hemingway, and Ford Madox Ford, who represented the artistic and intellectual realm of politics. Ford helped Rhys publish her first work, The Left Bank and Other Stories (1927). Four more novels followed in the 1930s. Themes of denial, dissonance, rejection, discrimination, and alienation run through these and others of Rhys's works, which employ a controlled style, literal and figurative imagery, and first- and third-person points of view. Inquiries made by actress Selma Vaz Dias in 1949 to perform a dramatic adaptation of the modernist Good Morning, Midnight (1939) and in 1956 to broadcast the same novel as a radio play encouraged Rhys to complete her fifth novel, Wide Sargasso Sea (1966), the story of which is derived from Charlotte Brontë's Jane Eyre and tells the haunting tale of Rochester's first wife. In The Letters of Jean Rhys (1984), Rhys called the novel "a demon of a book" that "never leaves" her; the critics called the book a masterpiece.

During the years, British, American, and Caribbean critics have attempted to position Rhys's works as distinctively British, American, or Caribbean, respectively. In Fifty Caribbean Writers (1986), Jean D'Costa summarizes Rhys's importance to world literature when she says that "Rhys's works offer much to the analysts of society, of sexuality, of the psyche, of British imperial history, of Anglo-European letters, and of the Creole societies."

Other Works by Jean Rhys

After Leaving Mr. Mackenzie. New York: Harper & Row, 1982.

The Collected Short Stories. Introduction by Diana Athill. New York: Norton, 1987.

Smile, Please: An Unfinished Autobiography. Berkeley, Calif.: Donald S. Ellis/Creative Arts, 1983.

Works about Jean Rhys

Lykiard, Alexis. Jean Rhys Revisited. Exeter and Devon: Stride Publications, 2000.

Mellown, Elgin W. Jean Rhys: A Descriptive and Annotated Bibliography of Works and Criticism. New York: Garland Press, 1984.

Savory, Elaine. Jean Rhys. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1999.

Richardson, Elaine Potter

See KINCAID, JAMAICA.

Rilke, Rainer Maria (1875–1926) poet, playwright, translator

Rainer Maria Rilke was born in Prague, Czechoslovakia, to Josef Rilke, a minor railroad official, and Sophie Entz, a descendant of an aristocratic family. His mother dressed him in girls' clothes and called him Sophie until the age of eight to compensate for the loss of her infant daughter. Sophie Entz was a devout Catholic and often went on pilgrimages to shrines and other holy places; young Rilke accompanied her. This early experience with Catholicism left Rilke with a profound distrust and dislike of Christianity.

Rilke's parents separated when he was nine, and he was sent to a military academy by his father. Because of ill health, Rilke left the academy and traveled to Leinz, Austria, to study business. He was apprenticed to his uncle's law firm as a clerk. Rilke decided against a career in business and attended universities in Prague, Berlin, and Munich, where he studied art history, philosophy, and literature. He developed a talent for languages and became fluent in Russian, French, English, Danish, and Czech. Rilke developed a close relationship with several Russian intellectuals and accompanied them on a trip to Russia in 1899, where he met Leo TOLSTOY and studied Russian spiritual mysticism.

Critical Analysis

Today, Rilke is considered one of the greatest lyrical poets of the German-speaking world. He began his career as a poet in 1894 when he published a small, conventional volume of poems, Leben und Leiden. While working as a correspondence secretary for Auguste Rodin in Paris, Rilke composed The Book of the Hours: The Book of Monastic Life. Saint Francis of Assisi is a major figure in the work. Rilke transforms this conventional image of Christian humility and piety into a kind of pagan nature spirit who permeates all things. Furthermore, Rilke praises traditional Christian values, such as poverty and spiritual purity, and often presents God as a humble, homeless man: "For blessed are those who never went away / And stood still in the rain without a roof."

Among Rilke's prose works, The Tale of the Love and Death of Coronet Christoph Rilke (1906), a long prose poem, became a great popular success. Set during the 1660s, the dynamic prose of the work tells of a young coronet who joins the European forces in their fight against the Ottoman Empire. The young coronet falls in love with a young lady, but he is killed during a sudden attack by the Turks the next day. Rilke, however, does not utterly glorify the military. The poem includes brutal scenes of violence and conveys the monotony of long military marches.

Rilke was a master of several genres. His famous novel The Notebooks of Malte Laurids Brigge (1910) takes the form of the diary of a Danish poet who arrives in Paris and describes his reactions to the cultural and intellectual life in the city. The novel uses flashbacks to describe the events of Laurids's childhood and the various European cities that he had visited. Lacking a traditional plot, the novel focuses on episodes in Laurids's life that create confrontation in his development as a writer. Eventually, Malte Laurids realizes that he has to transform himself metaphorically into an open vessel, receiving the outside events without preconceptions, to become a truly great poet.

Rilke's last seminal collections of poetry, Duino Elegies and Sonnets to Orpheus, were both published in 1923. Both works no longer dealt with ordinary images; instead, they concentrated on the larger themes of life and death, spirituality, philosophy, and materiality. Rilke presented material and spiritual worlds as entities and the individual as an observer entrapped between the both realms, only momentarily able to capture them. The alienated artist, however, can build a bridge between two worlds by creating a material translation of the spiritual realm. Indeed, the theme of alienation is one of the most dominant ones in the collection: "We are not at one / Are not in agreement like birds of passage / Overtaken and delayed, we force ourselves suddenly on the winds / and fall onto an indifferent pond."

Rainer Maria Rilke established himself as one of the most important figures of German literature. Although he is mainly remembered as a poet, he made a tremendous impact in virtually every genre. Rilke's influence on his generation of poets is simply enormous: he composed a significant corpus of poetic works in Russian and French, and he translated innumerable literary works from English, French, Russian, and Danish into German. Today, Rainer Maria Rilke is considered as the most important 20th-century poet of the German-speaking world: "Rilke was a large man, expansive in his concern for the fate of human beings in a difficult world," as Patricia Brodsky notes. Rilke's death was as strange as his life; he died from an infection that was contracted from a prick of a rose's thorn.

Other Works by Rainer Maria Rilke

Ahead of All Parting: Selected Poetry and Prose of Rainer Maria Rilke. Translated by Stephen Mitchell. New York: Modern Library, 1995.

The Book of Images. Translated by Edward Snow. Portland, Oreg.: North Point Press, 1994.

Rilke's Book of Hours: Love Poems to God. Translated by Joanna Macy. New York: Riverhead Books, 1997.

Works about Rainer Maria Rilke

Brodsky, Patricia. Rainer Maria Rilke. Boston: Twayne, 1988.

Freedman, Ralph. Life of a Poet: Rainer Maria Rilke. Chicago: Northwestern University Press, 1998.

Rimbaud, Arthur (1854–1891) poet

Arthur Rimbaud was born on October 20 in Charleville, a town in provincial France. He was the son of an army captain who deserted his family when Rimbaud was only six years old, forcing the family into poverty. This abandonment became a central theme in Rimbaud's poetry and was represented by the figure of a mythical father who was a man of action and an adventurer. Rimbaud's mother was afraid that her son would become hardened by his experience, especially when he became intrigued by the social conditions in which he was forced to live and began to sneak out to play with his peers. She eventually secured the means to move her family to the best part of town but still forbade Rimbaud to associate with boys his own age. She appears in his works as a controlling and domineering figure.

Deprived of the company of his peers, Rimbaud devoted himself to his studies until July 1870 when, with the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War and the departure of his favorite teacher who left to serve with the army, he became despondent and fled his home to begin a life of rebellion.

Rimbaud spent a year of his life as a vagabond, denouncing women and the church, living on the streets in the most squalid conditions he could find. He studied the so-called immoral poets, such as BAUDELAIRE, and read everything from philosophy to the occult. He also began writing poetry, some of which he sent to Paul VERLAINE who, in 1871, invited the aspiring poet to visit him at his home in Paris.

Although the rest of the Parisian literary world rejected him, Rimbaud and Verlaine became lovers. In 1872, Verlaine left his wife and moved with Rimbaud to London. Their relationship was a difficult one, but it continued off and on for more than two years, giving Rimbaud a sense of spiritual and emotional disillusionment. After a drunken argument between the couple in Brussels, Verlaine shot Rimbaud in the wrist. Rimbaud, who had grown tired of the relationship, notified the police. Verlaine spent 18 months in prison. Rimbaud's guilt and disillusionment prompted him to write A Season in Hell (1873; translated 1932).

Rimbaud's affair with Verlaine eventually ended, and Rimbaud abandoned writing completely when he was not yet 20 years old. Returning to his earlier rebellious nature, he became a trader and gunrunner in Africa. He died 18 years later, on November 10, in Marseille, France, following the amputation of his right leg.

Rimbaud's literary legacy, however, lives on. He is known as the precocious boy-poet of SYMBOLISM and is credited with being one of the creators of free verse because of the rhythmic experimentation in his poem Illuminations (1886; translated 1932). Rimbaud's poetry is remarkable in its subtle suggestiveness. His work draws largely on subconscious sources, delving deeply into the human psyche. He helped to popularize synesthesia, a device commonly employed by symbolist poets in which one sensory experience is described in relation to another. In his "Sonnet of the Vowels" (1871; translated 1966), for example, each vowel is assigned a particular color and other sensory associations.

In addition, Rimbaud's influence can be seen in diverse works of modern literature, particularly that of the Beat poets. He has also been cited as the source of inspiration for modern musicians, such as Bob Dylan, Jim Morrison, and Patti Smith.

Another Work by Arthur Rimbaud

Rimbaud: Complete Works, Selected Letters. Translated by Wallace Fowlie. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1987.

Works about Arthur Rimbaud

Cohn, Robert Greer. The Poetry of Arthur Rimbaud. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1999.

Robb, Graham. Arthur Rimbaud. New York: Norton, 2000.

Rinser, Luise (1911–2002) novelist, short-story writer

Luise Rinser was born in Pitzling, Bavaria. Her parents Josef and Luise Sailer Rinser were strict Catholics. After she finished grammar school in 1930, Rinser studied psychology and pedagogy at the University of Munich. She earned her teaching diploma in 1934 and spent four years teaching elementary school. After her first husband, conductor Horst-Günther Schnell, died fighting in World War II, Rinser married composer Carl Orff in 1954.

Rinser began to write in the 1930s and published her first story, "Die Lilie" ("The Lily") in 1938. Her first published volume Die gläsernen Runge (Rings of Glass), 1941) gained popular approval but was banned by the Nazis for promoting values different from those approved by the government. In 1944, Rinser was sent to a concentration camp for opposing the war effort. She described her prison experiences in Gefängnis-Tagebuch (Prison Diary, 1946). After World War II, Rinser wrote short stories and worked as a literary critic and columnist. Her novel Mitte des Lebens (Nina, 1956) became a major international success and was translated into 22 languages. In the 1970s and 1980s, she published six diary volumes and a best-selling autobiography. A political activist, she ran for president of West Germany in 1984 as the Green Party candidate.

Rinser's influences include the baroque Catholic tradition, Eastern philosophy, Carl Gustav Jung, and Ernest Hemingway. A major theme in her works is the plight of the disadvantaged and oppressed. Her specific topics include the fight for female equality in a patriarchal society and power politics in the Catholic Church. Critic Albert Scholz writes in "Luise Rinser's Gefängnistagebuch" that Rinser "is strongest and most effective in her positive attitude toward the fundamental questions of the present day, in her striving for truth, and in her portrayal of authentic human beings working and suffering."

Another Work by Luise Rinser

Abelard's Love. Translated by Jean M. Snook. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1998.

A Work about Luise Rinser

Falkenstein, Henning. Luise Rinser. Berlin: Colloquium Verlag, 1988.

Robbe-Grillet, Alain (1922–) novelist

Alain Robbe-Grillet was born in Brest, France, to a family of scientists and engineers. Before becoming a writer, he worked in a German tank factory during World War II and earned a degree from the National Institute for Agronomy. He worked as an agronomist, supervising several banana plantations in the West Indies, until 1955, when he took a job at Les Editions de Minuit, a well-known publishing house, as a literary consultant.

Robbe-Grillet had actually begun to write much earlier in his life, completing his first novel, A Regicide, in 1949, although it was not published until 1978. An illness in 1951 prompted his writing of The Erasers (1951), the work that established him as a novelist and gained him recognition and a leading position in the NEW NOVEL group. Robbe-Grillet followed this work with The Voyeur (1955) and In the Labyrinth (1959).

In response to the growing debate as to what constitutes the new novel, he wrote For a New Novel (1963). According to Robbe-Grillet, the perspective of the new novel is highly subjective and expresses the angle of vision of individual characters, not of the novelist or reader. He also condemned the use of metaphors, for which he received much criticism from his contemporaries Jean Paul SARTRE and Albert CAMUS who felt that his ideas were out of touch with reality.

Critical Analysis

Robbe-Grillet's works often lack the traditional or conventional elements of literature: a solid dramatic plot, character development, and coherent chronology. Instead, his works are often composed of recurring images and events from daily life.

Although Robbe-Grillet has worked in several literary genres, he is first and foremost a writer of mysteries, albeit nontraditional ones. His novel, The Erasers, which earned him the Feneon Prize for Literature in 1954, mixed a traditional mystery story with shifting perspectives and vividly detailed descriptions of common, natural objects, such as a tomato slice. In his most famous work to date, Jealousy (1957), which is considered to exemplify the new novel, the main character spies on his possibly adulterous wife. The plot is secondary, if not nonexistent, and Robbe-Grillet devotes the bulk of the work to studying the importance of the narrator to the creation of the text.

In addition, many of Robbe-Grillet's so-called mysteries, including The Voyeur, leave the reader without any concrete resolution. In this case, the novel (which was awarded the Critic's Prize in 1955, in spite of the fact that many members of the jury did not feel the work could be classified as a novel) is about a traveling watch salesman named Mathias who is never explicitly identified as the murderer.

Using the same fractured structure that he employed in his novels, Robbe-Grillet wrote and directed several works for the screen, including Trans-Europ-Express (1966), which incorporates ideas from Alfred Hitchcock films and the popular gangster genre, and Topology of a Phantom City (1976), which uses freeze-frame cinematography to focus on specific elements. The tale of a police investigation into the murder of a French prostitute, this film is often told from the first person perspective of David, the narrator, who is also the perpetrator of the crime.

Another of Robbe-Grillet's trademark devices was the use of bizarre descriptions of sexual violence. Many of these were based on images taken from the visual arts. La Belle Captive (1975) was inspired by the paintings of René Magritte, for example. In Snapshots (1976), he includes a story in honor of a work of painter Gustave Moreau, "The Secret Room," in which he vividly describes a chained and abused woman.

In his later novels, Robbe-Grillet turned his attention to the spy genre. Djinn (1981) recounts the fractured tale of a man who works for an American spy. In the process, he is forced to question his own existence when he is told that he is not real at all but merely the product of a dream.

In 1984, Robbe-Grillet published the first part of an autobiographical trilogy, Ghosts in the Mirror. In this work, he acknowledges Claude SIMON's idea that everything is autobiographical to some extent, indicating that much of his work is drawn, at least in part, from elements of his own life and memory.

Robbe-Grillet continues to write regularly. His most recent work, following his same themes, is La Reprise (2001), about a spy's sado-erotic experiences in postwar Berlin.

Another Work by Alain Robbe-Grillet

Project for a Revolution in New York: A Novel. Translated by Richard Howard. New York: Grove Press, 1972.

A Work about Alain Robbe-Grillet

Smith, Roch C. Understanding Alain Robbe-Grillet. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 2000.

Roberts, Charles (1860–1943) poet, short-story writer

Charles G. D. Roberts was born in Douglas, New Brunswick; the eastern Canadian landscape would have a profound impact on his work. He graduated from the University of New Brunswick and published his first book of poetry, Orion and Other Poems, in 1880. From 1879 to 1895, Roberts worked as a teacher in New Brunswick, as editor of the literary magazine The Week, and as a professor at King's College of Windsor, in Nova Scotia.

Regarded by many as the father of Canadian poetry, although he also wrote prose, Roberts, along with three contemporary writers, styled themselves the "Poets of the Confederation" and strove for a distinctly Canadian voice. During this period, he wrote one of his most celebrated collections, In Divers Tones (1887). Although in this and other works Roberts attempted to establish a Canadian national literature, he was profoundly influenced by British Victorian poets. The title of In Divers Tones, for example, is taken from Alfred, Lord Tennyson's long poem In Memoriam.

In 1897, Roberts moved to New York. He began, in part for financial reasons, to write prose; in particular, he pioneered the genre of the modern animal story. These stories are collected in the volumes Earth's Enigmas (1896) and Eyes of the Wilderness (1933). Roberts returned to Canada in 1925, settling in Toronto, and returned to writing poetry as well. Roberts was knighted in 1935.

Another Work by Charles Roberts

Keith, W. J., ed. Selected Poetry and Critical Prose.
Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1974.

romanticism

The term romanticism is applied to literary, intellectual, and artistic movements of the late 18th to mid-19th centuries that share a number of common characteristics, including strong emotion, imagination, freedom from classical correctness in art forms, and rebellion against social conventions. Many romantics advocated a return to nature and a belief that humanity, specifically the individual, was innately good or worthy, rather than inherently sinful, as the church had held for centuries. Romanticism was also, in part, a revolt against the age of reason and the ideals of rationalism.

Psychologically, romanticism was marked by a focus on emotions over intellect (the sense that the artist is an individual and thus the supreme creator of his or her own work) and on a deep feeling of national pride. Whereas the thinkers and writers of the Enlightenment paid homage to the classical writers by emphasizing reason, logic, order, and restraint, the romantics valued emotional experience. Romantic works emphasize subjective experience, individuality, and imagination. Romantics value emotional experience, individual style, and spontaneity in the individual expression of experience.

Imagination and emotions are linked to nature rather than to reason and logic. The romantics believed that human nature was generally good but was corrupted by society. Considering this philosophical viewpoint, it is not surprising that many romantics depicted and praised various aspects of nature because the natural environment outside the confines of civilization was supposedly a force that encouraged the possibility of authenticity and goodness. Nature, often seen as the antithesis of materialism and the social conflicts produced by civilization, became a prominent theme in the works of romantics. The romantics also revered childhood, which they saw as a natural state before the intervention of the corrupting forces of modern society.

Romantic writers, opposing the established order, also insisted on political and moral changes. Many took inspiration from the French Revolution of 1789, before the horrors of the Reign of Terror. Critics have sometimes attributed the romantic opposition to REALISM to the political affiliations of the movement. Many romantics became politically disenchanted after a series of failed European revolutions of the early 19th century. However, broadly speaking, the term romanticism applies to the arts, philosophy, and politics.

Romanticism in Germany

Romanticism originated in Germany and England during the 18th century as an opposition to the Enlightenment and neoclassicism. Eighteenth-century German philosopher Friedrich von SCHILLER was the first to apply the term to the literary movement.

In Germany, romanticism played an especially significant role in the development of national literature. Johann Wolfgang von GOETHE and Friedrich von Schiller are perhaps the most important figures associated with German romanticism. In his poetry and prose, Goethe created powerful emotional scenes often set against the background of wild, untamed nature. Likewise, Schiller created powerful emotional scenes, combining elements of folklore and traditional genres of literature. Many romantics also began to compose works celebrating the vernacular German and German culture. E. T. A. HOFFMANN and the GRIMM brothers wrote fairy tales that not only included fantastic and irrational elements but also celebrated the traditional culture of the German people. The humble heroes of their tales exemplified the courage, morality, and ingenuity of the common people. Achim von Arnim (1781–1831) and Clemens Brentano (1778–1842) collaborated on a collection of German tales that were orally transmitted to them by various common folk throughout Germany. Romanticism began during the process of unification of the German states, and thus greatly contributed to the establishment of a unified German national identity.

In certain ways, romantic literature in Germany was linked with the romantic tradition in music: Wilhelm Müller's (1784–1827) Die Winterreise was transformed into a series of musical pieces by Franz Schubert (1797–1828). Ludwig Uhland (1787–1862) wrote lyrical ballads that praised nature and human passions based on the traditional tales of German peasants.

German romanticism was perhaps one of the most influential movements in the history of European literature, affecting innumerable writers in England, France, Russia, and later America. The works of German romantics are still read and appreciated throughout the world. Romantics were visionary in their concern for emotions and psychology and their humanistic emphasis on the individual, particularly the individual who occupies a humble rank on the social ladder.

Romanticism in France

Romanticism arrived later in France than it did in Germany and England. The reasons for this are largely political. During the French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars, France was too involved in its own internal struggles to be greatly affected by the outside world. In 1815, however, with the restoration of the monarchy, the return of the French nobility from exile brought about significant changes in literature and culture, as well as in politics. Many of those nobles who returned had lived for many years of exile in England. On arriving in France, they brought with them a variety of English cultural traditions, including the poetry of English romantic poet George Gordon, Lord Byron (1788–1824). Up until this point, French literature had for the most part held to the 17th-century literary ideal of neoclassicism. In a time when large-scale sociopolitical changes were occurring with great force, the works of Racine and Corneille and the expression of perfect harmony and clarity that had their roots in the Greek and Roman traditions were soon usurped by the rebellious beauty of romanticism.

Romanticism did not arrive in France without precedents, however. The works of the 18th-century writer Jean-Jacques Rousseau anticipated the trend by focusing on the social aspects of the human condition and questioning whether the concept of the soul could be dealt with rationally. In Les Confessions (1770), for example, Rousseau's subject, himself, becomes the most important figure in literature, granting the "I" form of identity a sense of supremacy that was lacking in literature to that point.

François-René CHATEAUBRIAND expresses the alienation of young aristocrats after the revolution, and with his René and Atala explores the themes of melancholy and exile. Germaine de STAEL's De L'Allemagne introduced German mysticism and romanticism into France and contested universalist ideals in the name of a national literature. In French theater, Victor HUGO is credited with having set forth a definition of the movement in the Préface to his play Cromwell (1827). Hugo championed freedom of speech and freedom of the artist and individuality in all of his works, most notably in the novels Les Misérables (1862) and Notre Dame de Paris (1831).

In general, the romantic shared a few common goals. The focus on political freedom and the exploration of individual psyche, even to the point of the bizarre and the supernatural, became of utmost importance. The peculiar and the macabre were stressed as equally valid aspects of humanity. Gothic literature and the fantastic experienced a rise in popularity in the 1830s. Poetry, in particular, turned to nature as a source of primary inspiration. The romantic poet often felt the need to suffer to understand art as it related to the human condition. Political activism and the push for social change were also important aspects of the movement.

See also COSTUMBRISMO.

Works about Romanticism

Daniels, Barry V. Revolution in the Theatre: French Romantic Theories of Drama. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1983.

Lacoue-Labarthe, Phillipe, ed. The Literary Absolute: The Theory of Literature in German Romanticism. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1988.

Moses, Claire Goldberg. Feminism, Socialism and French Romanticism. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1993.

Schulte-Sasse, Jochen, ed. Theory as Practice: An Anthology of Early German Romantic Writings. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1997.

Rosas, Oscar (1864–1925) poet

Oscar Rosas was born in Florianópolis, Brazil. He was a minor member of the Brazilian symbolist movement whose leading figure was João CRUZ E SOUSA. Symbolism in Brazil was a manifestation of Latin American MODERNISM, a larger movement best exemplified by Rubén DARIO.

Later in life, Oscar Rosas became increasingly politically active, eventually serving in the Brazilian house of representatives. In 1925, he was attacked in a fight over politics and eventually died from the wound he sustained.

Rosenstock, Samuel

See TZARA, TRISTAN.

Roy, Arundhati (1961–) novelist, nonfiction writer

Arundhati Roy was born in Bengal, India, and grew up in Kerala. In 1986, her mother, Mary Roy, became famous for her court case that demanded equal rights for women in inheritance laws. Mary Roy also ran a liberal school, called Corpus Christi, where Arundhati Roy received her primary education. Born into a religious family, Roy was brought up in a traditional Syrian Christian household. When she was 16 years old, she left home and went to Delhi to study architecture.

Her first novel, The God of Small Things (1997), won the 1997 Booker Prize. She is the first nonexpatriate and the first Indian woman to win this award, and she has claimed that it will be the only novel she writes. Her novel, in fact, begins with the quote stating that this story will “be told as though it’s the only one.” The God of Small Things is a MAGIC REALISM depiction of Kerala’s multireligious communities. Roy’s brand of magic realism steers away from mere illusion, however, because of the text’s lingering question on social identity. The secret love affair between two main characters foregrounds the still-existing burden of caste and religious (especially Syrian-Christian) divisions in Kerala. Roy poses time and place as protean categories in the narrator’s memory as she tries to understand her roots within a family that is separated within itself by outside social forces.

Roy has also written many screenplays, including In Which Annie Gives It Those Ones (1988) and Electric Moon (1992), for which she became known for her straightforward and highly opinionated style. Since then and after her novel, she has dedicated herself to writing newspaper and journal articles about social issues in India. As a writer, she claims, this is the best form of activism of which she is capable. In 1999, her essay “The Greater Common Good,” on the dispossession of tribal peoples during construction of the Narmada Dam, caused global concern. Her journalistic writing has given several underprivileged communities of India access to international media attention and has helped these kinds of social issues gain worldwide support.

Another Work by Arundhati Roy

Power Politics. Cambridge, Mass.: South End Press, 2001.

A Work about Arundhati Roy

Jones, Sonya L. “The Large Things of Arundhati Roy.” In A. L. McLeod, ed., The Literature of the Indian Diaspora: Essays in Criticism. New Delhi: Sterling, 2000.

Rushdie, Salman (1947–) novelist, essayist

Ahmed Salman Rushdie was born to wealthy, liberal, secularized Muslim parents, Anis Ahmed Rushdie and Negin Rushdie, in Bombay, India, but has lived much of his life in England. He is an agnostic Muslim and feels torn between different cultures. Referring to his short-story collection East, West (1994), Rushdie told the Daily Telegraph, “[t]he most important part of the title is the comma. Because it seems to me that I am that comma.”

Rushdie’s first three novels, Grimus (1975), Midnight’s Children (1980), and Shame (1983), won critical approval. Midnight’s Children was a multiple award winner: the Booker Prize, an award from the English Speaking Union, the James Tait Black Prize, and a special “Booker of Bookers” award as the best novel in the first 25 years of the Booker Prize.

Rushdie gained international fame even with nonreaders with his novel The Satanic Verses (1988), which rewrote the story of the Islamic prophet Muhammad, depicting him as a skeptic and a man driven by sexual desire. The prophet’s scribe, “Salman,” is initially faithful but says that when faced with religious hypocrisy, “I began to get a bad smell in my nose.”

Satanic Verses enraged Islamic fundamentalists, leading Iran’s spiritual leader at the time, the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, to issue a fatwa, or religious decree, pronouncing a death sentence against Rushdie for offending God. “Anyone who dies in the cause of ridding the world of Rushdie,” said Khomeini, “will be a martyr and will go directly to heaven.” After Khomeini’s pronouncement, some bookstores that were believed to be carrying Rushdie’s book were bombed, and riots occurred in places where he was believed to be staying. One translator of the book was stabbed to death. Many writers vocally announced their support for Rushdie, and politicians around the world condemned the death sentence. Critic Amir Mufti says, “The violence of the novel’s reception . . . is an accurate indicator of the anger generated by its insistence on a sweeping rearrangement and rethinking of the terms of Muslim public culture.” Pradyumna S. Chauhan says, “The Satanic Verses was, and still remains, a major contribution to the contemporary novel.”

Despite the death threat, which eventually was lifted, Rushdie continued to write. He even made unannounced public appearances, including one onstage during a well-attended, multimedia concert by the rock group U2.

After writing a nonfiction account of travels in Nicaragua, The Jaguar Smile (1987), Rushdie took a sympathetic interest in the United States, setting his novel Fury (2001) there. It is the story of Malik Solanka, professor and dollmaker, who tries to lose himself in New York City but discovers that one’s deeds take on a life of their own as he watches his dolls become extremely popular. Solanka sees parallels between God’s strange relationship to the humans he created, who have free will, and his own relationship to his dolls: “Nowadays, they started out as clay figurines. Clay, of which God, who didn’t exist, made man, who did.”

Solanka also struggles to control his own anger, often amplified by the chaos of the city: “He was never out of earshot of a siren, an alarm, a large vehicle’s reverse-gear bleeps, the beat of some unbearable music.” Rushdie argued in newspaper editorials in the years prior to Fury that America has generated hostility from both left-wing and right-wing groups around the globe precisely because it is an embodiment of freedom and change. In America’s ability constantly to reinvent itself, Rushdie sees parallels to the dangerous power of fiction making and to his own status as a cultural nomad, a theme that arises repeatedly in his collection Imaginary Homelands: Essays and Criticism 1981–1991 (1991).

Critical Analysis

Much of Rushdie’s work is classifiable as MAGIC REALISM, combining realistic issues and events with elements of magic or mythology. Grimus, for instance, sends its Native American protagonist, Flapping Eagle, in search of his sister and involves him with magicians, intelligent stone frogs, extra-terrestrials, and a host of other fantastic devices.

In Midnight's Children, political satire mixes with Hindu fantasy and psychic abilities as it is revealed that 1,001 children born at the stroke of midnight on August 15, 1947, the day of Indian independence from Britain, gained such superpowers as telepathy and telekinesis. Two of those children, one wealthy and one poor, are switched at birth, leading to political complications.

The Muslim Indian narrator, Saleem Sinai, says he is “handcuffed to history,” the events of his life “indissolubly chained to those of my country.” Sinai’s psychic powers, says critic Dubravka Juraga, enable him “to empathize with members of all segments of India’s complex, multilayered society,” from a starving man to a rich man who bullies serfs and even to real-life political figures such as Prime Minister Nehru. Throughout the course of the novel, Saleem struggles to retain his own identity. Scholar Michael Reder remarks, “as Saleem’s story demonstrates, individuals can fall victim to a discourse—such as a national myth—in which they themselves are denied a role.” Individual identity is constrained by historical circumstances.

Shame, patterned after Gabriel GARCÍA MÁRQUEZ’s One Hundred Years of Solitude, combines Pakistani civil war with the fairy-tale-like story of a little girl so wracked by shame that her blushes can set objects on fire. An accusatory narrative voice sometimes interrupts Rushdie’s main narration, demanding to know whether Rushdie is close enough to Indian and Pakistani culture to tell this tale: “We know you, with your foreign language wrapped around you like a flag: speaking about us in your forked tongue, what can you tell but lies?” Critic Timothy Brennan calls this “Rushdie’s most fully realized and densely crafted novel.”

In Haroun and the Sea of Stories (1990) Rushdie artfully blends references to The Thousand and One Nights with Rushdie’s philosophy that reality is open to many interpretations and his love of fiction as a playground of the mind where countless ideas, even heretical ones, can be displayed. It is the story of a boy who hopes to rescue his father by returning to him the gift of storytelling: “And because the stories were held here in liquid form, they retained the ability to change, to become new versions of themselves.” Rushdie and his characters savor the ability to rework old tales and old beliefs.

Rushdie’s blending of different cultural influences has been a chief interest of his critics, who have seen in him both a testament to the relevance of tradition and folklore and a reminder that the entire idea of nationhood is in some sense a fiction, maintained by common beliefs and touchstone stories. Further, as critic Timothy Brennan observes, by rewriting sacred stories with the imagination and freedom of a fiction writer rather than the ferocity of a heretic or adherent of a rival religion, Rushdie “unravels the religion from within.” Scholar M. Keith Booker, in his introduction to a collection of essays on Rushdie, writes that “Rushdie has undoubtedly been one of the most important writers in world literature in the past quarter century . . . [and] a major commentator on Indian and other postcolonial cultures.”

Other Works by Salman Rushdie

The Ground Beneath Her Feet. New York: Henry Holt, 1999.

The Moor’s Last Sigh. Thorndike, Maine: Chivers Press, 1995.

Works about Salman Rushdie

Booker, M. Keith, ed. Critical Essays on Salman Rushdie. New York: G. K. Hall, 1999.

Cundy, Catherine. Salman Rushdie. Manchester, U.K.: Manchester University Press, 1996.

Harrison, James. Salman Rushdie. New York: Twayne, 1992.

Russian symbolism

See SYMBOLISM.

Saadawi, Nawal El

See SADAWI, NAWAL.

Sachs, Nelly Leonie (1891–1970) poet

Nelly Leonie Sachs was born in Berlin to Jewish parents, William and Margarethe (Karger) Sachs. Her father was a wealthy industrialist and inventor. Sachs attended Hoch Toechterschule but received most of her education privately. She developed an early interest in dancing and literature and began writing poetry and puppet plays as a teenager.

Sachs's first volume of poetry Legenden und Erzählungen (Legend and Tales, 1921) reflected her interest in the common roots of Judaism and Christianity. She was later influenced by German and Jewish mysticism, including the writings of Jakob Böhmne, and Hasidism. In the 1930s, Sachs published her poetry in newspapers and Jewish journals. With the help of friends, she escaped from Nazi Germany to Sweden in 1940. Sachs wrote her most significant poetry about the horrors of World War II and the Nazi death camps; these poems are included in volumes such as In den Wohnungen des Todes (In the Habitations of Death, 1946) and Sternverdunkelung (Eclipse of the Stars, 1949) and earned her worldwide acclaim.

While in Sweden, Sachs also translated the works of several Swedish poets, such as Erik Lindegren and Johannes Edfelt, into German.

The primary theme of Sachs's literary work is the Holocaust. Critics have noted that her poems elevated the Jews' suffering to a cosmic plane. Scholar Elisabeth Strenger writes in her essay "Nelly Sachs and the Dance of Language," that in Sachs's poems, "Jewish mystical voices cry out over the uninitiated language of the German oppressors." Sachs includes deep religious feeling, mourning, and elements of dance in her language. Her work provides an important poetic testimony to the Holocaust. She shared the Nobel Prize for literature in 1966 with Samuel Joseph AGNON.

Another Work by Nelly Sachs

The Seeker and Other Poems. Translated by Ruth Mead, Matthew Mead, and Michael Hamburger. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1970.

A Work about Nelly Sachs

Bahti, Timothy, and Marilyn Sibley Fries. Jewish Writers, German Literature: The Uneasy Examples of Nelly Sachs and Walter Benjamin. Ann Arbor: The University of Michigan Press, 1995.

Sadawi, Nawal (al-Sa'dawi, El Saadawi)
(1931–) essayist, memoirist, novelist

Nawal Sadawi has authored some of Arab feminism's landmark texts. Her indictment of female genital mutilation in The Hidden Face of Eve is perhaps the aspect of Sadawi's work best known in the West; the English translation rearranges the Arabic text to begin with the author's searing memory of her clitorectomy at age six. Well known, too, are her attacks on Islamic fundamentalism and theory of ancient Egypt as originally matriarchal. Less well known in translation, perhaps because it is less palatable to her Western readership, is the fact that Sadawi denounces the patriarchy of all three Near Eastern religions—Islam, Christianity, and Judaism. Her protest against U.S. and global capitalism's exploitation of women in the developing world is another important theme in her work, which tends to be glossed over in English-language references in favor of emphasis on her critiques of Arab sexual morés. Sadawi's travelogue, My Travels Around the World (1992), which contains powerful condemnation of Western imperialism, is out of print.

In her fiction, Sadawi's protagonists are victimized women, beaten by overwhelming male domination in a world devoid of female friendship and male allies. In life, Sadawi earned her M.D. (1955) at Cairo University in a climate made possible by other Egyptian feminist men and women. Her parents, of rural Egypt, supported her career choice. In Memoirs of a Woman Doctor (1989) and other works, Sadawi drew on her clinical experiences for writing about women's sexual oppression. Abortion, honor killings, child molestation—Sadawi's indictment of patriarchy leaves no taboo unbroken. Women and Sex (1971) got her fired as Egypt's director of health education, and Sadat imprisoned her in 1981 for feminist activism, releasing her after international outcry. This is the basis of her Memoirs from the Women's Prison (translated by Miriam Cooke, 1986).

Sadawi's husband Sherif Hetata translates her novels to English. She has a daughter and a son from two earlier marriages; the family is active in the Arab Women's Solidarity Association, founded by Sadawi. Currently living in Cairo, she has seen her work translated into a dozen languages. Woman at Point Zero (translated by Hetata, 1983) is the most widely read of her novels. Some critics see its story of a friendless, poverty-stricken woman driven to murder by a life in which she has suffered every possible sexual abuse from child molestation to rape and forced prostitution as a stunning portrayal of patriarchy at its worst, while others find its popularity an example of the way in which Sadawi's complex, highly political feminist analysis is susceptible to being reduced to grist for sensationalist stereotypes of Arab women as sexual victims.

Other Works by Nawal Sadawi

Daughter of Isis. Translated by Sherif Hetata. London: Zed Books, 1999.

The Nawal El Saadawi Reader: Selected Essays 1970–1996. London: Zed Books, 1997.

Works about Nawal Sadawi

Malti-Douglas, Fedwa. Men, Women, and God(s): Nawal El Saadawi and Arab Feminist Poetics. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1995.

Tarabishi, George. Woman Against Her Sex: A Critique of Nawal El-Saadawi, with a Reply by Nawal El-Saadawi. London: Al Saqi Books, 1988.

Sa'id, Ali Ahmad

See ADONIS.

Saint-Exupéry, Antoine de (1900–1944)
novelist, nonfiction writer

Best known internationally for his children's fantasy Le Petit Prince (1943; translated as The Little Prince, 1943), Antoine de Saint-Exupéry was born in Lyons and educated in Switzerland at Jesuit schools. Obsessed with aviation, he joined the French air force in 1921 but left to become a commercial pilot in 1926. His novels and other works express his humanist beliefs regarding fairness and compassion to all humankind, as well as a deep respect for the art of flying.

As a commercial pilot, Saint-Exupéry's job involved flying air-mail routes over North Africa, the South Atlantic, and South America. He based his first novel, Southern Mail (1929; translated 1933), on these experiences. He married a young widow from Buenos Aires in 1931, publishing his second novel, Vol de Nuit (Night Flight, translated 1932), that same year.

During World War II, Saint-Exupéry returned to the military, joining the French air force once again; however, during combat, his plane was shot down. He escaped to the United States, where he joined the Free French Forces. Flight to Arras (1942; translated 1942) is an account of his wartime experiences.

Grounded from combat due to his age and multiple injuries, Saint-Exupéry began to serve as a flight instructor and reconnaissance pilot. During this time, he wrote his children's fantasy, The Little Prince (1943), for which he has gained lasting popularity.

Saint-Exupéry was last seen alive when he departed to fly a reconnaissance mission over southern France in 1944. His plane vanished without a trace. After his death, two notebooks that reflect on his life and ideas were published as Wisdom of the Sands (1948; translated 1950).

Another Work by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry

The Tale of the Rose: The Passion that Inspired The Little Prince. Translated By Esther Allen. New York: Random House, 2001.

A Work about Antoine de Saint-Exupéry

Schiff, Stacy. Saint-Exupéry: A Biography. New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1995.

Saint-John Perse

See PERSE, SAINT-JOHN.

Saleh, Tayyib (Al-Tayyib Salih) (1929–)

novelist, short-story writer, broadcast journalist Tayyib Saleh's name points his readers toward his connection to the Islamic African world. The word tayeb, or tayyeb, in Arabic denotes purity, goodness, and piety. In addition, the prophet Saleh is an important prophet in The Qur'an. Saleh's contribution to world literature is his ability to fuse Western and Islamic-African realities in interesting and accessible ways.

Saleh was born into a farming community in the northern section of Sudan, a country that has had a troubled history of conflict with its larger, wealthier, northern neighbor, Egypt. The Sudan of which he writes is a country divided by racial, national, and religious schisms. The seeds of the geopolitical problems of the region stem from its European colonial heritage but are also tied to issues of religious and cultural differences that national boundaries too rarely reflect.

Saleh was raised in a traditional Islamic home, which meant that he studied the Qur'an regularly. He had originally intended to follow his father's lead and pursue a career in agriculture, but his path led him to a career in broadcasting. Notably, Saleh led the dramatic production division of BBC's Arabic Service. This experience undoubtedly helped him to put the struggle for "true" Sudanese independence into a larger geopolitical context.

His most well-known work is the novel Season of Migration to the North, which was first published in 1969. The novel operates as a sort of "response" to Joseph CONRAD's Heart of Darkness in that it traces the journey of an Islamic African named Mustafa as he visits the "horror" of London, the heart of the imperial center of the colonial world. The novel also echoes Othello and other literary encounters between dominant groups and "marginal" characters, stressing the deep chasms of cultural misunderstanding that appear when one encounters those who are different. As Mustafa puts it in the novel, "May God have mercy on someone who has turned a blind eye to error and has indulged in the outward aspect of things."

Like the Egyptian writer, Naguib MAHFOUZ, with whom Saleh shares many thematic interests, Saleh is not primarily a "protest" writer but one whose narratives speak to the richness of the culture out of which he has sprung and to the need to embrace the whole experience of a people.

Another Work by Tayyib Saleh

The Wedding of Zein and Other Stories. Washington, D.C.: Three Continents Press, 1985.

A Work about Tayyib Saleh

Boullata, Issa. Critical Perspectives on Modern Arabic Literature. Washington, D.C.: Three Continents Press, 1980.

Samman, Ghada (1942–) novelist, short-story writer, essayist, journalist, poet

Born in Damascus, Syria, Samman has written more than 30 books, including six short-story collections. The latest, The Square Moon (1994), uses supernatural elements. Her novel Beirut '75 (1975) was considered prophetic for seeing the tensions under the surface of seemingly prosperous Lebanon; Samman wrote it just before the outbreak of the civil war that would rack the country for 15 years (1975–90). Her 1976 novel, Beirut Nightmares, placed her in a group of novelists who stayed in Lebanon during the civil-war years. Composed in more than 200 “nightmares,” ranging in length from 10 lines to 10 pages each, Beirut Nightmares is a riveting experiment in form, as well as a stunning portrait of civil war from the apartment window of one woman trapped by crossfire. Samman’s latest novel, al-Riwaya al-mustahila (1997), has not been translated into English. In addition to short stories and novels, she has written poetry, including Love Across the Jugular Vein (Arabic) in 1980, which treats love relationships in an ironic, wry tone that is, at the same time, infused with warmth and honesty.

Having lost her mother as a young girl, Samman was raised by her father, a law-school dean. She earned her B.A. in English literature at the University of Damascus and her master’s at the American University of Beirut. She studied in London for a time and lived in Europe from 1967 to 1969. Because of problems with Syria’s strict regulations on Syrians abroad, Samman was unable to return to Syria. She settled in Lebanon where, in 1977, she established her own publishing company.

Samman cuts a striking figure as one of the best-known feminists of the Arab world. The heroines of her novels tend to be strong women breaking out of traditionally feminine roles. Her writing shows fierce awareness of the economic exploitation of the poor, in addition to an abiding concern with gender. Samman’s tone is typically ironical, urbane, witty, and sometimes cynical, conveying profound commitment to social and political issues and attention to the craft of writing. Samman’s work is translated into Russian, Romanian, Italian, Persian, German, Spanish, and English.

Another Work by Ghada Samman

The Square Moon. Translated by Issa J. Boullatta. Fayetteville: University of Arkansas Press, 1998.

Works about Ghada Samman

Cooke, Miriam. War’s Other Voices. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988.

Zeidan, Joseph. Arab Women Novelists. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1995.

San Juan, Epifanio (1938–) poet, novelist

Epifanio San Juan was born in Manila, Philippines. He received his B.A. degree from the University of the Philippines in 1958, left for the United States in 1960, and received his M.A. and Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1962 and 1965, respectively. He has taught in various universities, and is currently the professor and chair of the Department of Comparative American Cultures at Washington State.

San Juan has written poetry, fiction, and literary criticism, in both Tagalog and English. His works address important issues, such as class conflict and political struggle in Filipino history, which had remained largely uninvestigated. He seeks to define the central role of race and racism in America, using his experience as an Asian intellectual living in the United States. San Juan believes that literature constitutes an important critical tool that should be used to examine and reflect social change.

San Juan has written more than 100 scholarly articles, published in journals in Europe, Japan, the Philippines, and the United States. Although he is an accomplished poet and novelist, he is better known for his work in comparative cultural studies. His 1972 work, Carlos Bulosan and the Imagination of the Class Struggle, on Carlos Bulosan, a famous Filipino-American writer of the 1940s and 1950s, narrates the biography of a talented Filipino writer who published several important and influential works before his death in 1956. Bulosan did not manage to return to the Philippines or to become a U.S. citizen, but his works are celebrated for their depictions of the Filipino experience.

Another work, From Exile to Diaspora: Versions of the Filipino Experience in the United States, (1998) examines the diasporic experience of Filipinos, who constitute one of the major immigrant groups to the United States within the past century. In this work, San Juan argues that even in their overseas location, Filipinos continue to assess and reexamine their colonial past in view of their present. Their zeal for democracy and equality remains as vital to their existence in their new adopted home as in their homeland. This book as well as The Rise of the Filipino Working Class and Other Essays (1978), attribute a great degree of agency to the Filipino people.

San Juan was awarded the Fulbright lectureship from 1987 to 1988. His book, Racial Formations/Critical Transformations (1992), won both the National Book Award and the Human Rights Award in 1993. He is the recent recipient of the 1994 Katherine Newman Award from the Society for the Study of Multi-ethnic Literatures in the United States.

Another Work by Epifanio San Juan

From the Masses, to the Masses: Third World Literature and Revolution. Minneapolis, Minn.: MEP Publications, 1994.

Sand, George (Amandine-Aurore-Lucile Dupin) (1804–1876) novelist

Noted for her skill as a writer as well as for her numerous love affairs with prominent men, such as Alfred de MUSSET and Frédéric Chopin, French romantic (see ROMANTICISM) novelist George Sand was born in Paris and raised and educated at her grandmother's country estate, which Sand inherited in 1821. In 1822, she married Baron Casimir Dudevant. Financially and socially secure, Sand bore two children with Dudevant, but she never found happiness with him nor reconciled her intellectual and artistic goals with those of wife and mother. She left her family in 1831 to return to Paris and embarked on a career as a writer.

Sand wrote and edited for several journals, including the prominent Le Figaro, Révue de Deux Mondes, and La République. Through her employment, she became acquainted with several well-known poets, artists, and philosophers. Her early works, in particular, show the influence these associations had on her. This was particularly true throughout the 1830s when, in response to rapidly expanding industrialization, Sand and her associates sought, through their works, to cure society of the evils of new technology. She was joined in this cause by Franz Liszt, with whom she became very good friends. Several other prominent figures with whom Sand was involved during this period and whose views distinctly reveal themselves in her writings include the revolutionary Michel de Bourges and Pierre Leroux.

One relationship in particular marked the start of Sand's career as a novelist: Her affair with fellow writer Jules Sandeau led them to coauthor and publish a novel, Rose et Blanche (1831), under the pseudonym Jules Sand. She assumed the name George for her second novel, Indiana (1832), which recounts the tale of a young woman who is both abused by her much older husband and deceived by her treacherous lover. The work was an instant success and was soon followed by the publication of popular novels in the 1830s, such as Lélia (1833), which exalted free love over conventional marriage.

In the 1840s, Sand began to break away from the molds provided for her by the men in her life and started to establish her unique writing voice. She became firmly committed to the ideals of socialism and, as a result, her works often provoked controversy. Alongside economic and social themes, Sand often questioned the preconceived notions of gendered identity. Her autobiography, Histoire de ma vie (1855), for example, raises questions about gender and sexuality that emerged from her complicated and unconventional life.

Sand's works were extremely popular during her lifetime. She wrote novels, memoirs, essays, short stories, and even children's fairy tales that often carried a deeper, more mature meaning. She died on June 8, having paved the way for female novelists, and left behind a lasting influence on fellow writers Fyodor DOSTOYEVSKY, Gustave FLAUBERT and Marcel PROUST.

Other Works by George Sand

The Castle of Pictures and Other Stories: A Grandmother's Tales. Translated by Holly Erskine Hirko. New York: Feminist Press at the City University of New York, 1994.

Horace. Translated by Zack Rogow. San Francisco: Mercury House, 1995.

Works about George Sand

Jack, Belinda Elizabeth. George Sand: A Woman's Life Writ Large. London: Chatto and Windus, 1999.

Massardier-Kenney, Françoise. Gender in the Fiction of George Sand. Atlanta, Ga.: Rodopi, 2000.

Saramago, José (1922–) novelist

José Saramago was born in Azinhaga, Portugal. His parents, José de Sousa and Maria da Piedade, were landless subsistence farmers. His last name, different from his father's, was written on his birth certificate as a joke by the public official who registered his birth. José de Sousa, the father, was called Saramago as a nickname because Saramago was a kind of wild green that was eaten in Azinhaga by the very poor.

Saramago was extremely close to his grandfather who, though illiterate, was an eloquent storyteller. The two of them, old man and young boy, would go on summer nights to sleep beneath a large fig tree by their house, and the grandfather would tell stories into the night. This formative experience instilled in Saramago a love of narrative and fantasy. Years later, he would begin to write in an attempt to preserve his memories of his grandfather and grandmother and his experiences of hearing stories under the fig tree.

Having moved to Lisbon, where Saramago's father worked as a policeman, Saramago went to elementary school and excelled. However, after a few years, his parents could no longer afford a liberal education for their son. He was sent to a technical school instead, where he trained to be a mechanic. Even at technical school, Saramago sought out the poems and stories contained in the literary anthologies that were used to teach grammar. He spent his evenings in the public library, reading whatever books he came across and practicing his French.

It was at this time that Saramago discovered the work of Fernando PESSOA, who was the inspiration for Saramago's novel The Year of the Death of Ricardo Reis (1984). Ricardo Reis was one of Pessoa's pseudonyms, and Saramago's novel explores the meaning of Pessoa's work in the face of the fascism that plagued Portugal in the 20th century.

Saramago worked for a few years as a mechanic and then managed to get a job as a civil servant. In 1950, he lost this job because of his affiliation with the Communist Party. He managed to find some work as a journalist and in the publishing industry, but as the political situation became more and more radically conservative, it became impossible for Saramago to find work anywhere. It was this situation that prompted him in 1976 at age 54 to dedicate himself to writing novels full time.

For the next 20 years, Saramago produced a steady stream of exceptional novels that blend allegorical symbolism, politics, and a unique narrative style. Finally, in 1998, Saramago was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature, the first Portuguese citizen to receive that award.

Critical Analysis

Saramago's novels share certain affinities with the MAGIC REALISM of some novels of Latin America, whose political contexts often center on colonialism. Though Portugal was a colonial power and not a colony, its separation from the rest of Europe, due to the fascist regimes that held power after World War II, create many similarities between Saramago's Portugal and Latin America.

He explores these political themes in his novel The Stone Raft (1986), in which the Iberian Peninsula breaks off from Europe and starts to float south on the ocean. The Stone Raft is a utopian novel in which the image of Portugal floating toward Africa represents Saramago's political vision of a world in which the oppressors in Europe come together with the oppressed peoples of developing nations.

In 1991, Saramago wrote The Gospel According to Jesus Christ. This book presents Christ in a very humanized form, emphasizing his family relationships and his love affair with Mary Magdalene. The novel was written as a critique of the strict Catholicism of Portugal and as an exploration of metaphysical doubt. The Portuguese government reacted strongly against it for its anti-Catholic views and vetoed its presentation for the European Literary Prize. In protest, Saramago moved to the Canary Islands.

In 1995, Saramago wrote Blindness, which is probably his most widely read book in the English-speaking world. It recounts an epidemic of a mysterious blindness that strikes people in an unnamed country seemingly at random. In his Nobel lecture, Saramago said of the book, Blind. The apprentice thought, "we are blind," and he sat down and wrote Blindness to remind those who might read it that we pervert reason when we humiliate life, that human dignity is insulted every day by the powerful of our world, that the universal lie has replaced the plural truths, and that man stopped respecting himself when he lost respect for his fellow-creatures.

Largely unknown outside of Europe before winning the Nobel Prize, Saramago is quickly becoming the most popular Portuguese writer worldwide. His perceptiveness about human nature coupled with his strong moral and political concerns allow his novels to reveal to the reader a view of reality that was previously hidden. Saramago uses magic-realist techniques in a mode that both revitalizes his readers and stirs them to moral action.

Other Works by José Saramago

All the Names. Translated from the Portuguese by Margaret Jull Costa. New York: Harcourt, 1999.

Baltasar and Blimunda. Translated from the Portuguese by Giovanni Pontiero. San Diego: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1987.

Journey to Portugal. Translated from the Portuguese and with notes by Amanda Hopkinson and Nick Caistor. London: Harvill Press, 2000.

Sargeson, Frank (1903–1982) novelist

Frank Sargeson was born to a middle-class family in Hamilton, New Zealand, completed his training as a solicitor in Auckland in 1926, and traveled in Britain and Europe for two years. He returned to New Zealand and took on various odd jobs before settling on his family land near Takapuna, remaining there for the rest of his life and making his living as a full-time writer. Between 1936 and 1954, Sargeson published 40 stories, most of which were completed before 1945. He continued writing in the postwar period, but he was unable to produce many works. Sargeson's writings reveal him as a writer who continued to develop and improve his art as he grew older. In his 60s, he experienced a new zest for writing, which culminated in the publication of his first complete collection of stories, Collected Stories, 1935–1963 (1964). By the time Sargeson turned 70, he had begun to write a number of autobiographies and memoirs, veering away from the macabre and dark satirical style that characterize his writings of the previous decade. His trilogy of memoirs is, in comparison, anecdotal and lighthearted. These memoirs, which traces Sargeson's life as a writer from 1930 to 1970, are titled Once Is Enough (1973), More Than Enough (1975), and Never Enough (1977).

Sargeson's earlier works are remarkable for their stark depiction of human characters whose limited vision and lack of imagination represent the New Zealand working-class society. His central characters, usually the narrators of the stories, are often undistinguished and ordinary with puritanical upbringing that dictates actions and choices. Readers can appreciate these stories through Sargeson's mastery in conveying the poignant but realistic social circumstances of the working-class majority. In stories such as "The Making of a New Zealander" (1940) and "That Summer" (1946), the main characters are represented by unsettled laborers and unemployed men whose limited visions do not allow them to recognize and challenge the social forces that constitute the causes of their unhappy lives.

In the 1960s, Sargeson began to experiment with a different narrative technique. Using dark humor, he examines a new set of characters now taken from the middle classes whose better social positions ironically do not give them any advantage over the less-educated working classes of Sargeson's earlier short stories and novels. For instance, in the novel The Hangover (1967), Sargeson describes the dark world of a young university student caught between his duty to obey his puritanical but demented mother and his desire to indulge in the sensual pleasures of the city. The narratives of Sargeson's stories, unlike his earlier works, are elaborate and verbose.

In the 1970s, Sargeson began to write another form of narrative, reminiscent of his earlier writings but dealing with subjects closer to his heart. These were mainly autobiographies and critical writings. He managed to complete two novellas before his death in 1982: Sunset Village (1976), a comic crime mystery, and En Route (1979), a story relating a journey of self-discovery, which was published together with a novella by Edith Campion, another New Zealand author, in a joint volume entitled Tandem. Sargeson's achievements in fiction enable New Zealand writing to be appreciated and recognized all over the world.

Other Works by Frank Sargeson

Conversation in a Train, and Other Critical Writing. New York: Oxford University Press, 1990.

I Saw in My Dream. Auckland, N.Z.: Auckland University Press, 1974.

Joy of the Worm. London: MacGibbon and Kee, 1969.

Man of England Now; With, I for One . . . , And, a Game of Hide and Seek. London: Martin, Brian and O'Keefe, 1972.

Memoirs of a Peon. London: MacGibbon and Kee, 1965; Auckland, N.Z.: Heinemann, 1974.

Never Enough: Places and People Mainly. Wellington, N.Z.: Reed, 1978.

Sunset Village. London: Martin, Brian, and O'Keefe, 1976.

Works about Frank Sargeson

King, Michael. Frank Sargeson: A Life. New York: Viking, 1995.

McEldowney, Dennis. Frank Sargeson in His Time. Dunedin, New Zealand: McIndoe, 1976.

Sarmiento, Félix Rubén García

See DARÍO, RUBÉN.

Sarraute, Nathalie (1900–1999) novelist, essayist

Pioneer and leading theorist of the French nouveau roman or NEW NOVEL, Nathalie Sarraute was born in Ivanova, Russia, on July 18 to intellectual parents: Her father worked in the field of sciences, and her mother published novels under the pseudonym of Vichrovski. They divorced, however, when Sarraute was two years old, and she went to live with her mother in Paris where, at a young age, French became her primary language. Her mother eventually remarried and the family returned to Russia when Sarraute was eight years old. She remained in close contact with her father, spending one month each year with him. When he began to encounter difficulties in Russia over his political views, he emigrated to France. Sarraute followed two years later to live with him in Paris and did not return again to her native Russia until 1936.

Sarraute received the bulk of her education at the Sorbonne, where she studied literature and law. In 1921, she spent a year at Oxford, prior to traveling to Berlin, where she continued to study legal science. She married Raymond Sarraute, a fellow law student, in 1925 and became a member of the French bar in 1926. She remained an active member until 1941 when she quit law to pursue a career as a writer.

Sarraute began writing while she was actively practicing law. Her first work, Tropismes (1932), was completed in 1932. It contains 24 short sketches based on nameless characters who are trapped by their interdependence on each other. Initially, the work was not well received or understood. It was rereleased in 1957 at the height of the popularity of the new-novel style and received greater success and critical acclaim.

During the 1950s and 1960s, Sarraute, alongside fellow writers such as Alain ROBBE-GRILLET, Claude SIMON, Marguerite DURAS, and Michel Butor, worked to pioneer the new-novel format. Exemplified by such works as Sarraute's Portrait d'un homme inconnu (Portrait of an Unknown Man, 1951), which Jean-Paul SARTRE dubbed an anti-novel, the new novel discarded the conventional ideas of structure. In her works, Sarraute routinely abandoned chronological order and shifted point of view freely to focus instead on the conscious and subconscious minds of her characters.

Central to Sarraute's works is the idea of interpersonal relationships. Portrait of an Unknown Man explores a daughter's difficult relationship with her miserly father. Martereau (1953) recounts the internal tensions that arise in a family structure that is made up of individuals whose personalities are vastly different. In both of these works, the constantly shifting point of view calls into question the narrator's reliability. In Le Planétarium (1959), Sarraute does away with the narrator entirely in what is considered to be both an ironic comedy of manners and a parable of the creative process.

In the mid-1950s, Sarraute began to work on critical essays as she continued to write fiction. In L'Ere de soupçon (The Age of Suspicion, 1956), she attempts to analyze her own creative process and the goals she had for her works. In later years, she also devoted time to writing critical analyses on the works of other authors, including Paul VALÉRY and Gustave FLAUBERT. Sarraute expanded her writing further to include work on a number of radio and stage plays and on her partial autobiography, Childhood (1983), which was adapted for the stage. Sarraute died at the end of a lengthy and productive career in Paris on October 19.

Other Works by Nathalie Sarraute

Collected Plays. Translated by Maria Jolas and Barbara Wright. New York: George Braziller, 1981.

Here: A Novel. Translated by Barbara Wright. New York: George Braziller, 1997.

Works about Nathalie Sarraute

Barbour, Sarah. Nathalie Sarraute and the Feminist Reader: Identities in Process. Lewisburg, Pa.: Bucknell University Press, 1993.

Knapp, Bettina. Nathalie Sarraute. Atlanta, Ga.: Rodopi, 1994.

Sartre, Jean-Paul (1905–1980) novelist, playwright, essayist

Best known for his ties to EXISTENTIALISM, a philosophy that emphasizes the ultimate importance of human freedom, as well as for his long-term relationship with fellow French philosopher and writer Simone de BEAUVOIR, Jean-Paul Sartre was born in Paris on June 21. The son of a naval officer who died when Sartre was very young, he spent his early years living with his mother and his grandfather. After his mother's remarriage in 1917, he moved to La Rochelle, where he attended school. He graduated from the École Normale Supérieure in 1929. He was a student at the time of his first meeting with de Beauvoir, and their relationship, along with Sartre's studies and exposure to other existential philosophers, proved to be important influences on both his life and his works.

After graduation, Sartre secured employment as a teacher. In 1945, he left teaching to devote his time exclusively to writing. He also traveled extensively in Egypt, Greece, Italy, and Berlin, where he studied the works of German philosophers Martin Heidegger and Edmund Husserl. At this time, Heidegger's most important work, Being and Time (1927), had been released. Uniting Søren Kierkegaard's and Friedrich NIETZSCHE's views on existentialism with Husserl's concept of phenomenology, Sartre began developing his own existential philosophy. During the late 1930s, Sartre began to gather around him a small group of intellectuals; together, they spent hours at cafés on the Left Bank, discussing philosophy and the importance of freedom.

In 1939, Sartre was drafted to serve in World War II. Less than a year later, he was captured and imprisoned in Germany, where he remained until 1941. Here, Sartre experienced firsthand the ramifications of the loss of what he valued most, his personal freedom. On returning to Paris, he joined the French Resistance Movement and put his growing talents as a writer to good use penning articles about the Resistance for magazines such as Les Lettres Françaises and Combat.

Sartre was deeply affected by his experience in the war and when it was over, decided to devote himself full-time to writing and political activism. He founded Le Temps Modernes (1946–), a monthly journal dedicated to literature and politics. Although he never became a member of the Communist Party, he worked closely with Communists in hopes of finding a solution to the problems of poverty and the poor social conditions of the working class. In his writing, he spent a great deal of time and effort trying to reconcile existentialism with marxism.

Aside from his work as a writer, Sartre exemplified his own beliefs by speaking out for freedom for oppressed peoples, such as the Hungarians in the mid- to late 1950s and the Czechoslovakians in the late 1960s. He became involved in numerous humanitarian causes and, as a result, twice had bombs set off in his place of residence. In 1967, he served as leader of the war-crimes tribunal, which investigated the actions of U.S. soldiers in Indochina, and, in 1968, he supported the student anti-Vietnam War protestors. He was also arrested in 1970 for selling an underground newspaper publication.

In 1975, Sartre's eyesight began to fail, and his health declined rapidly. No longer able to write, he nevertheless remained vocal and active; toward the end of his life, he was completely blind. He died on April 15 in Paris. His legacy remains as one of the strongest and most influential voices of the existentialist movement.

Critical Analysis

Sartre's first novel, La Nausée (1938), was greatly influenced by Husserl's concept of phenomenology, a movement devoted to describing experiences exactly as they present themselves with no reliance on theories, assumptions or deductions. Transferring this concept to human existence, Sartre's novel explores the idea that life has no essential purpose and that the main character is haunted by feelings of horror and nausea as he attempts to come to terms with the banality of life. During this period, Sartre also published a collection of short stories and a novella, Le Mûr (1938; published in English as Intimacy), which dealt with similar themes of identity and freedom.

Sartre's nonfiction work L'Être et le néant (Being and Nothingness, 1943) begins to formulate the foundation of his own philosophy. He relates the idea of existence to his belief that it is composed of two distinct parts. In the first part are those things that exist simply because they are. They exist “en-soi” or in themselves. Human beings, however, belong to the second part, existing “pour-soi” or for themselves. According to Sartre, the demarcation between the two parts of existence is based on the fact that humans possess consciousness, in particular an awareness of mortality; thus, human beings exist in a constant state of dread. Sartre’s premise, which he examines in later works, was this: To give meaning to those things that exist “en-soi,” it is necessary for humans first to detach themselves from those things.

The importance of accepting responsibility for one’s own actions is, therefore, also an essential part of Sartre’s philosophy. His first dramatic work, Les Mouches (The Flies, 1943), examines this theme against the backdrop of ancient Greece, using the mythological characters of Electra and Orestes. Orestes, choosing to act by killing his murderous mother, rejects the guilt that has paralyzed his city since Agamemnon’s death. His second play, Huis-clos (No Exit, 1944), presents three characters in a room with no way out, learning to face the truth that “Hell is other people.”

Sartre also wrote works of literary criticism that explore the responsibility of artists in relation to their art, beginning with Qu’est-ce la Littérature? (What Is Literature?, 1947). He followed this in the same year with a study of BAUDELAIRE, and in 1952 he published a biography of Jean GENET, Saint-Genet, Comédien et Martyr (Saint Genet, Actor and Martyr). Sartre admired Genet for being free of the constraints of convention and making his own personal distinctions between right and wrong. Sartre was among a group of writers (including Albert CAMUS and Jean COCTEAU) who in 1948 successfully petitioned for Genet’s release from a life sentence for burglary. From 1960 to 1971, he worked on a massive critical biography of Gustave FLAUBERT, L’Idiot de la famille (The Family Idiot). The work reached five volumes but remained unfinished, as in the last years of his life Sartre’s failing eyesight prevented him from writing.

In 1963, Sartre published his memoir of childhood, Les Mots (The Words), in which he explored how language and literacy changed the consciousness of the growing child. In that year, the Nobel committee chose to honor Sartre with the Nobel Prize in literature, but Sartre refused to accept the award, feeling that it represented bourgeois values he rejected. Nonetheless, his reputation continued to grow, and his funeral drew thousands of mourners.

Other Works by Jean-Paul Sartre

Colonialism and Neo-Colonialism. Translated by Steve Brewer, Azzedine Haddour, and Terry McWilliams. London: Routledge, 2001.

Notebook for an Ethics. Translated by Davis Pellauer. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1992.

Truth and Existence. Translated by Adrian van den Hoven. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1992.

Works about Jean-Paul Sartre

Gordon, Haim. Sartre’s Philosophy and the Challenge of Education. Lewiston, N.Y.: E. Mellen Press, 2001.

Howells, Christina, ed. The Cambridge Companion to Sartre. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1992.

Kamber, Richard. On Sartre. Belmont, Calif.: Wadsworth/Thomson Learning, 2000.

McBride, William L., ed. Sartre’s Life, Times and Vision-du-Monde. New York: Garland Press, 1997.

Satyanarayana, Visvanatha (1895–1976) poet, novelist, dramatist

Visvanatha Satyanarayana was born in Andhra Pradesh, India. He wrote in Telugu and is the author of more than 100 works. This alone places him among the most important figures in Telugu fiction. He has also rewritten ancient Hindu epics such as the The Ramayana, which dates from the fourth century B.C. When his version of the epic, Ramayana—The Celestial Tree appeared in 1953, it was seen as controversial because of his transformation of the original, formal Sanskrit into a more conventional style. This translation, however, made it accessible to a wider audience, and in 1971, it won him the Jnanpith Award (India's highest literary award).

Satyanarayana was widely read in European literature. One of his novels, Veyipadagalu (A Thousand Hoods, 1933–34), was inspired by the novels on industrialization by British writers Thomas Hardy (1840–1928) and D. H. Lawrence (1885–1930). Satyanarayana saw in their work his own belief that great literature is not only about issues but also form. Like them, Satyanarayana believed important themes such as social reform should not overshadow the mechanics of the literary genre and that the social message should not subsume the aesthetic element of the literary work.

Satyanarayana's literary legacy includes poetry, short stories, essays, plays, and novels. In 1970, he was made a Fellow of the Sahitya Akademi, which is reserved for the "immortals of Indian Literature."

A Work about Visvanatha Satyanarayana

S. P. Sen, ed. History in Modern Indian Literature. Calcutta, India: Institute of Historical Studies Press, 1975.

scapigliatura

A mid-19th-century Italian bohemian movement in art and literature, often associated with the French DECADENCE movement, scapigliatura takes its name from the title of a novel by one of the group's founding members, Cletto Arrighi, The Scapigliatura and February 6th (1862). In the book, the term refers to the restlessness and independent spirit of its characters, all ranging in age from 25 to 30 years old. Founded in Milan, the movement was greatly influenced by the works of BAUDELAIRE, and Edgar Allan Poe, as well as those of the French symbolist poets and German romantic writers (see SYMBOLISM and ROMANTICISM).

The main characteristics of the movement include an intense aversion to the sentimentalism and conformity of romanticism. In particular, artists of the scapigliatura movement held a common conviction that truth was the only valid form of poetry and art; anything less than brutal honesty was seen as substandard and unimportant. The works that came from this school featured bizarre and often pathological elements, as well as direct, realistic narration and vivid, often grotesque description, a theme held in common with French decadent writers. A second aim of scapigliatura, similar to many avant-garde and bohemian movements, was the rejection of bourgeois values and of the right to ownership of property.

The group was never large, consisting only of a select few artists, poets, and musicians. Its primary leader was Iginio Ugo Tachetti, who began his education in classical studies and was well acquainted with English literature. After a brief stint in the army, he began writing short stories and spending his free time in Milan, where he met with other members of the group, including the novelists and chief spokespeople for the movement, Giuseppe Rovani and Emilio Praga. Tachetti's works exemplified much of what the group sought to attain. He died young, at age 30, refusing to the end to accept hypocrisy, tradition, or conventions.

In the end, the group's most lasting influence on world literature came in its advancement of the avant-garde. The writers associated with the movement were largely considered isolated avant-garde writers who chose to live their lives and dedicate their art to revolt against middle-class conformity.

A Work about Scapigliatura

Del Principe, David. Rebellion, Death, and Aesthetics in Italy: the Demons of Scapigliatura. Madison, Wisc.: Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1996.

Schiller, Friedrich von (1759–1805) playwright, essayist, poet

Friedrich von Schiller was born in Marbach, Württemberg (present-day Germany), to Johannes Kaspar Schiller, an army officer and surgeon, and Elizabeth Schiller. Johannes Schiller was a pious Lutheran and a harsh disciplinarian. He disapproved of his son's interests in literature and theater and many times forbade him to write poetry. At age 14, Schiller entered an academy to study law but subsequently decided to study medicine instead. His medical education was short-lived, however: He was expelled in 1780 for writing a controversial essay, On Relation Between Man's Animal and Spiritual Nature, which openly questioned the official theological dogma of the church.

On his return to Marbarch, Schiller was forced to join his father's regiment of the army. Despite his father's strong efforts to suppress this "foolish" activity, Schiller continued to write. Schiller did not find the life of the soldier appealing and consciously avoided his duties as much as possible. Thoroughly resisting his father, Schiller continued to write and was almost arrested for neglecting his military duties.

Schiller's first play, The Robbers (1781), depicts a noble outlaw, Karl Moor, who violently and passionately rejects the conservative and reactionary notions of his father in his quest for justice. The play simultaneously reflected Schiller's own conflict with his father and the ideological struggle between the conservative and liberal political forces in Germany. The play was warmly greeted not only in Germany, especially among the university students, but also among the romantic writers in England. The play remains a groundbreaking work in the corpus of German romanticism. The major theme of liberty that appears in The Robbers permeates virtually all of Schiller's major works. The play Don Carlos (1787) similarly depicts a conflict between a father and son. Don Carlos is set during the reign of Philip II of Spain. It portrays the inner struggle of his eldest son, torn between passionate love and the vile political intrigues of his father's ministers in the court.

Between 1783 and 1784, Schiller worked as a playwright and stage manager for the theater in Mannheim. With the assistance of Johann Wolfgang GOETHE, Schiller was appointed professor of history at the University of Jena in 1789. For the next three years, Schiller worked almost exclusively on history, writing an account of the Thirty Years War. Schiller had to give up the professorship because of declining health. He worked as an assistant to Goethe, then the director of the theater at the Weimar Court.

Schiller also distinguished himself as a poet. "Ode to Joy" (1785), later set to music by Ludwig van Beethoven, is currently the anthem of the European Union. In Wilhelm Tell (1804), Schiller describes the close relationship with nature shared by the Swiss hero. The characteristics of Schiller's works—in their attention to nature, human emotions, and the ideals of liberty and political freedom—became the working definition of ROMANTICISM.

Schiller's interest in history resulted in several historical plays. Mary Stuart (1800) describes the turbulent relationship between Elizabeth I and Mary Queen of Scots in the final days before Mary's execution. The captive, wild environment of the castle of Fothernghay provides a dark, melancholy background that amplifies Mary as a tragic, romantic figure in the play. The dramatic trilogy Wallenstein (1796–1799) depicted Germany during the Thirty Years' War. Schiller captured the deep fragmentation of society along the lines of religion. The German national identity and the idea of nationhood is juxtaposed against the ruinous conflict created by the religious strife and political scheming of the rulers.

Schiller also wrote essays on topics ranging from religion and politics to art and humanity's relationship with nature. Many of Schiller's ideas were influenced by the works of the famous 18th-century German philosopher Immanuel Kant. In On the Aesthetic Education of Man (1795) Schiller deals with the bloody aftermath of the French Revolution and how it changed an understanding of notions of freedom. The key to freedom, the essay argues, is the fundamental aesthetic development of the individual and society. According to the essay, the experience of the sublime and the beautiful—two important philosophical categories in the works of Kant—is truly fundamental to one’s education. A true sense of freedom and liberty is tightly connected to this experience.

In On the Naïve and Sentimental in Literature (1795), Schiller creates a series of dialectical dichotomies, such as feeling and thought, nature and culture, finitude and infinity, and finally sentimental and naïve modes of writing. Although describing himself as a sentimental or “reflective” writer, Schiller paid homage to his close friend Goethe, whom he described as the ultimate archetype of the naïve genius. Here, naïve is not used in the conventional sense of the word, but rather as a philosophical term that describes something that is utterly pure and good and closely connected with nature.

Critical Analysis

Friedrich von Schiller is considered today to be one of the foremost German writers. His drama and poetry are significant contributions to the literature of the romantic movement, although his reputation and legacy is recognized significantly more in Europe than it is in the United States. His magnificent control and elegant use of the German language inspired generations of readers, writers, and poets, and his works have had a long-lasting impact on the formation of the German national literature, as well as the German national identity.

Other Works by Friedrich von Schiller

Essays. New York: Continuum, 1993.

Schiller’s Five Plays: The Robbers, Passion and Politics, Don Carlos, Mary Stuart, and Joan of Arc. Translated by Robert McDonald. New York: Consortium Books, 1998.

Works about Friedrich von Schiller

Carlyle, Thomas. The Life of Friedrich Schiller: Comprehending and Examination of His Works. Portland, Ore.: University Press of the Pacific, 2001.

Sharpe, Lesley. Friedrich Schiller: Drama, Thought, and Politics. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991.

Scherzer, Rosalie

See AUSLANDER, ROSE.

Schmitz, Ettore

See SVEVO, ITALO.

Schwarz-Bart, Simone (Simone Bruman) (1938–) novelist

Simone Schwarz-Bart was born Simone Bruman in Charente-Maritime, France, to a governess and a military man, according to a 1973 Elle interview; however, the novelist has since named the Guadeloupean capital Pointe-à-Pitre as her birthplace. Bruman was educated at Pointe-à-Pitre, Dakar, and Paris, where she met and married her husband, novelist André Schwarz-Bart, in the early 1960s.

Simone and André Schwarz-Bart coauthored Un Plat de porc aux bananes vertes (A Dish of Pork with Green Bananas, 1967), which employs nonlinear narratives, and La mulâtresse Solitude (A Woman Named Solitude, 1972), a fictional biography of a mulatto female struggling to exist in society. In 1972, Simone Schwarz-Bart also published Pluie et vent sur Télumée Miracle (The Bridge of Beyond, 1972), in which Télumée, the novel’s female heroine, explores and consequently revises the painful history of her people.

One year after her return to Guadeloupe in 1978, Schwarz-Bart published Ti Jean L’Horizon (Between Two Worlds, 1979). In this novel, she uses MAGIC REALISM (elements of dreams, magic, fantasy, or fairy tales) and science fiction to tell the adventures of Ti Jean, a Guadeloupean folk hero, and to deconstruct traditional myths of Antillean identity.

All of Schwarz-Bart’s novels have been internationally well received in multiple publications, including The New York Times Book Review, Savacou, and Nouvelle Revue Française. Her fictional retelling of personal Caribbean histories contributes to international contemporary expressions and examinations of the painful repercussions of patriarchal domination and exile.

Another Work by Simone Schwarz-Bart

Your Handsome Captain. Translated by Jessica Harris. In Plays by Women: An International Anthology. Edited by Francoise Kourilsky and Catherine Temerson. New York: Ubu Repertory Theatre Publications, 1989.

Works about Simone Schwarz-Bart

Karamcheti, Indira. "The Geographics of Marginality: Place and Textuality in Simone Schwarz-Bart and Anita Desai." In Feminist Explorations of Literary Space. Edited by Margaret R. Higonnet and Joan Templeton. Amherst: University of Massachusetts Press, 1994: 125–46.

McKinney, Kitzie. "Memory, Voice, and Metaphor in the Works of Simone Schwarz-Bart." In Postcolonial Subjects: Francophone Women Writers. Edited by Mary Jean Green et al. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1996: 22–41.

Seferiadis, Giorgos

See SEFERIS, GEORGE.

Seferis, George (Giorgos Seferiadis)

(1900–1971) poet

George Seferis was born Giorgos Seferiadis in Smyrna, Turkey. As a child, he attended school in Smyrna and at the Gymnasium in Athens and, in 1918, moved with his family to Paris, where he attended the University of Paris to study law and where he also developed an interest in literature.

After graduating, Seferis returned to Athens in 1925. One year later, he was admitted to the Royal Greek Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In addition to his success as a writer, he had a long and successful diplomatic career. His final diplomatic post was as Royal Greek Ambassador to Great Britain from 1957 to 1962. Throughout his career, Seferis received numerous awards and recognitions. Included among these were honorary doctoral degrees from Cambridge University in 1960, Oxford University in 1964, the University of Salonika in 1964, and Princeton University in 1965.

His background in law and diplomacy, combined with his love of literature, allowed Seferis to make a profound impact on Greek poetry. His travels throughout the world gave him numerous ideas and provided the rich backgrounds for many of his works. What he experienced through war and through political negotiation influenced his decision to write poetry, almost exclusively with the themes of alienation, wandering, and death. Seferis's poetry is often surrealistic and always highly symbolic, sometimes to the point of being cryptic and difficult to interpret. He often invokes classical Greek themes as a means of exploring 20th-century Greek lifestyles and social consciousness.

Seferis's earliest poetry collections exist in two volumes. Strophe (Turning Point), 1931 consists of rhymed lyrical poems that were strongly influenced by the symbolist movement (see SYMBOLISM). His second collection, E Sterma (The Cistern), 1932, portrays through vivid imagery the idea that humankind must keep its true nature hidden from the everyday world that seeks to alienate and ignore humanity.

In his later poetry, Seferis shifts his focus to include a pervasive sense of awareness of the past, in particular Greek history. This awareness is not merely that of a historian but rather is indicative of the poet's desire to relate past events to those of the present and, ultimately, the future. This theme first becomes apparent in Mythistorema (1935; translated 1960), a collection consisting of 24 short poems that, when read as a group, translate the Odyssean myths into modern situations and circumstances. Seferis continued to develop these themes, using Homer's Odyssey as his symbolic basis, in several subsequent collections: Book of Exercises (1940), Logbook I (1940), Logbook II (1944), Thrush (1947), and Logbook III (1955). One notable exception to his use of Odysseus as a solitary source, however, occurs in "The King of Asine," one of the poems in Logbook. This poem is considered by many critics to be Seferis's greatest achievement because of its historical importance. This historical source consists of a single reference in Homer's Iliad to the King of Asine, who remains otherwise an all-but-forgotten character in Greek history.

Seferis did not limit himself to poetry and diplomatic relations, however. In addition to his collected poetic works, he published one book of essays, Dokimes (1944; translated Essays on the Greek Style, 1962). He also translated several works by T. S. Eliot and produced Copies (1965), a collection of translations from American, English, and French poets.

In the later years of his life, Seferis returned to writing in a style similar to that of his early poetry. His final collection of poems, Three Secret Poems (1966), contains, much like his first collection Strophe, 28 short lyrical poems that are highly surrealistic in nature. In 1963, Seferis was the first Greek writer to win the Nobel Prize in literature "for his eminent lyrical writing, inspired by a deep feeling for the Hellenic world of culture."

Other Works by George Seferis

Keeley, Edmund, ed. Complete Poems of George Seferis. Translated by Philip Sherrard. Greenwich, U.K.: Anvil Press Poetry, 1989.

Works about George Seferis

Hadas, Rachel. Form, Cycle, Infinity: Landscape Imagery in the Poetry of Robert Frost and George Seferis. Cranbury, N.J.: Bucknell University Press, 1985.

Kelley, Edmund, and Philip Sherrard, eds. George Seferis. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1995.

Tsatsos, Ioanna. My Brother George Seferis. Translated by Jean Demos. St. Paul, Minn.: North Central Publishing Company, 1982.

Seifert, Jaroslav (1901–1986) poet

Jaroslav Seifert was born in Prague, Czechoslovakia. He quit school at a young age to work for the Communist newspaper Rudé Pravo, where he acquired an extensive knowledge of Czechoslovakian history and culture, as exemplified in his first volume of poetry, The City in Tears (1920). The poems in this collection are characterized by simplicity and sensuality.

Seifert traveled throughout Europe, where he became familiar with literary trends. He initially regarded poetry as a tool for social change, and his early work expressed support for communism. Later, influenced by DADA and FUTURISM, his focus shifted toward poetry that was guided by sensual rather than intellectual motivations.

Because of his refusal to conform to orthodox political beliefs, Seifert's works were often censored by the Czechoslovakian government. He co-founded a society of avant-garde literary figures in Prague and, in 1929, was finally expelled from the Communist Party for refusing to oppose the elected Czechoslovakian government.

Seifert joined the Social Democrats, and his poetry began to change once again. The Carrier Pigeon (1929) focused on daily life, rejecting metaphor in favor of REALISM. During World War II, the publication of Bozena Nemcová's Fan (1939), with its passionate opposition to the Nazi occupation of Prague, put Seifert back in favor with the Communist Party, but by 1950 he was once again evicted from the party and charged with subjectivism.

Seifert then became a spokesperson for artistic freedom. In the 1970s, he headed the Union of Czech Writers and acted to oppose a ban on foreign publishing. The Plague Column (1977), which warned of the dangers of neo-Stalinism, was published in Cologne, West Germany, as a result of Czechoslovakian censorship. His final published work was his memoir, All the Beauties of the World (1981).

In 1984, Seifert became the first Czechoslovakian to receive the Nobel Prize in literature. Age and failing health prevented him from traveling to Stockholm to accept his award in person, and the Czechoslovakian government would not grant his son an exit visa to pick up the award for him. He died in Prague two years later.

Other Works by Jaroslav Seifert

Dressed in Light. Translated by Paul Jagasich and Tom O'Grady. New York: Dolphin-Moon Press, 1990.

The Early Poetry of Jaroslav Seifert. Translated by Dana Loewy. Evanston, Ill.: Hydra Books, 1997.

Sembène, Ousmane (1923–) novelist, screenwriter

Ousmane Sembène was born in Ziguinchor, in the Casamance region of southern Senegal. The son of a fisherman who was too poor to put his son through school, Ousmane left school before finishing to take various odd jobs, including those of bricklayer, fisherman, plumber, and apprentice mechanic. He was drafted into the French colonial army during World War II and served in both Italy and Germany. After the war, he returned to work as a manual laborer, first in Dakar, Senegal, and later in Marseilles, France. While in France, he was strongly influenced by French leftist thought and eventually became a trade-union leader. He joined the French Communist Party and became an active member until 1960 when Senegal gained its independence. After a year of instruction in cinema studies in Moscow, he devoted most of his attention and time to making films.

Sembène first made his mark as a novelist with Le Docker noir (The Black Dockworker, 1956) and moved into the film industry after 1962. In both his novels and his screenplays, he develops the themes of the nationalist struggle against colonialism, corruption, and racial discrimination. These are the issues that plagued most African writers who had firsthand experience of colonialism. What distinguishes Sembène is that he continues to write and explore these themes long after the colonial struggle ended. He completed three novels during the 1950s and 1960s. His most popular and, arguably, best novel is Les Bouts de bois de Dieu (God's Bits of Wood, 1960), a story that vividly depicts the African workers' struggle against colonial oppression and exploitation. The book is set during the 1947 and 1948 Dakar-Niger Railway strike, an event that Sembène witnessed. He develops a sophisticated view of workers' rights and industrial relations, using a Marxist approach in this novel. Xala (1973) ironically bespeaks the anguish and disappointment following the postcolonial independence where Africans realized that their new leaders were incapable of making genuine progress or fulfilling promises that they pledged during the struggle.

Sembène's novels and screenplays are informed by his own personal experiences and encounters. He is most effective in depicting the complexities of the colonial and postcolonial struggle of many African nations, which, in many cases, did not end with the gaining of independence. Sembène has written all his works in French; approximately half have been translated into English.

Other Works by Ousmane Sembène

The Black Docker. London: Heinemann, 1987.

The Money-Order; with White Genesis. London: Heinemann, 1972.

Niiwam and Taww. Oxford: Heinemann, 1992.

Tribal Scars and Other Stories. London: Heinemann, 1974.

Films by Ousmane Sembène

Camp de Thiaroye. 1988. With Thiero Faty Sow.

L'Empire Sonhrai. 1963. In French.

Le Mandat (The Money-Order). 1968. In French and Wolof. English version, 1969.

Xala. 1974. In French and Wolof.

Works about Ousmane Sembène

Conde, Maryse. "Sembène Ousmane-Xala." African Literature Today no. 9 (1978).

Peters, Jonathan. "Sembène Ousmane as Griot: The Money-Order with White Genesis." African Literature Today no. 12 (1982).

Pfaff, Françoise. The Cinema of Ousmane Sembène, A Pioneer of African Film. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood, 1984.

Senghor, Léopold Sédar (1906–2001)poet

Léopold Sédar Senghor was born in the little coastal town of Joal, Senegal. As a boy, he moved around the circle of Serere farmers and fishermen and listened to the tales they told of precolonial Africa. These stories would greatly influence his poetry. He attended a Roman Catholic mission school in French West Africa when he was young and entered the Collège Libermann in Dakar in 1922 to study for the priesthood. He was, however, found participating in protests against racism and expelled from the school. Senghor finally completed his secondary education in a public school in 1928 and left Senegal after winning a scholarship to study in France.

Senghor studied contemporary French literature at the prestigious École Normale Supérieure in Paris. He was greatly influenced by the vibrant atmosphere of intellectual ferment in 1930s Paris. Black African writers were rediscovering their roots in exile away from their homeland, and this led them to establish the intellectual movement called NÉGRITUDE, which encouraged black students, artists, and writers to explore their common cultural roots and tradition. Senghor and his writer-friend Aimé CÉSAIRE were the cofounders of négritude and the newspaper, L'Étudiant noir (The black student).

Senghor established his literary and political career in the aftermath of World War II. In 1946, he and his mentor, Lamine Guèye, were both appointed as representatives of Senegal in the French Constituent Assembly in Paris. Senghor managed to be reelected and served in the assembly until 1958. When Senegal gained its independence in April 1960, Senghor became its first president. His rich cultural background and his keen intellect made him an effective leader, but his success did not last long. The persistence of Senegal's economic crisis and the futility of Senghor's programs led to his forced retirement in 1980. He resettled in Verson, France, where he spent the rest of his life.

Senghor's poems, written in French and translated into many languages, reflect his inner conflict between his Western predisposition and his determination to preserve the wealth of his African heritage. The poems in his first book, Chants d'ombre (Songs of shadow, 1945), are extremely effective in their dramatization of his search for identity. In these poems, he manages to extricate himself from the vicious cycle of self-doubt and find balance by retreating to his childhood and the past. This theme of the returning to his origins is best presented in the poem "Que m'accompagnent kôras et balaphong" ("To the Music of koras and balaphong"), which also exhibits Senghor's aptitude for music. He believed that good musical rhythm was essential in poetry and often insisted that his poems should be read to the accompaniment of African music.

Senghor's personal experience as an exile living in France also influenced his writings. His sense of alienation derives from his dilemma as an educated African who felt torn between his black attributes and background and his Western intellectual inclinations. He felt distinctly the need to promote his black identity in the margins of Western society to establish his presence. Senghor's volume Hosties noires (Black victims, 1948) contains many poems written in the war years. A common thread runs through these poems: Senghor's growing disappointment and exasperation with losing his European "heritage." Senghor knew he could never be French, but his desire to retain his "Frenchness" was intermixed with a realization that his true roots lay in Africa. Senghor's ingenuity lies in his fluency in French, his extraordinary exploration of the range of human emotions, and his intellectual critique of French colonialism in Africa.

Other Works by Léopold Sédar Senghor

The Collected Poetry. Translated by Melvin Dixon.

Charlottesville: University Press of Virginia, 1991.

Irele, F. A., ed. Selected Poems of Léopold Sédar Senghor. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1977.

Works about Léopold Sédar Senghor

Kluback, William. Léopold Sédar Senghor: From Politics to Poetry. New York: Peter Lang, 1997.

Spleth, Janet. Léopold Sédar Senghor. Boston: Twayne, 1985.

Vaillant, Janet G. Black, French, and African: A Life of Léopold Sédar Senghor. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1990.

Serote, Mongane Wally (1944–) poet, essayist, novelist

Mongane Wally Serote was born in Sophiatown, South Africa. He received his early education in Alexandra Township and later attended the Morris Isaacson High School in Soweto. In 1974, after a succession of different jobs, he left South Africa on a Fulbright scholarship, which enabled him to study for a master's degree in fine arts at Columbia University in New York. Before leaving he had been awarded the Ingrid Jonker Prize for Poetry following the publication of his collection Yakhal'inkomo (1972).

Serote's most recent novel, Gods of Our Time (1999), documents the latter years of the liberation struggle in South Africa and conveys the bewilderment and uncertainty of those involved in the historic events of the time. In his text, Serote mimics the dislocated sensation of living in a time when people often disappeared without a trace by using a multitude of characters who enter the pages in an apparently random manner and then, inexplicably, disappear again. Much of Serote's work chronicles a disconnection with the past and attempts a realignment and reconfiguration with that past. His collection of poetry The Night Keeps Winking (1982) was banned in his home country. It contains vivid imagery of the cruelty of life under apartheid, but also lyrical notes:

*If life is so simple why can't it be lived if it is so brief
why can't it be lived*

After living in exile in Botswana and Britain, he returned to South Africa when the end of apartheid came. In 1991, he received an honorary doctorate from the University of Natal. He won the Noma Award for Publishing in Africa in 1993. Mongane Serote was elected to South Africa's Parliament in 1994 and became the chair of the Arts, Culture, Language, Science and Technology Parliamentary Portfolio committee. Serote continues to chronicle the history of the South African experience.

Another Work by Mongane Wally Serote

To Every Birth Its Blood. Westport, Conn.: Heinemann, 1983.

Works about Mongane Wally Serote

Brown, Duncan. "Interview with Mongane Wally Serote." Theoria: A Journal of Studies in the Arts, Humanities and Social Sciences 80 (October 1992): 143–49.

Horn, Peter. "A Volcano in the Night of Oppression: Reflections on the Poetry of Mongane Serote." Available online at <http://homepages.com-puserve.de/PeterRHorn/volcano.htm>.

Seth, Vikram (1952–) novelist, poet

Vikram Seth was born in Calcutta, India, but grew up in Delhi. His father, Prem Seth, is an executive in a business company, and his mother, Lalitha Seth, is a judge. After completing his schooling in India, Seth went to England and America for further studies. At Stanford University in 1975, while studying for his doctorate in economics but frustrated by the tediousness of filling in data for a project, Seth decided to take a temporary leave from economics and thought to try writing a novel instead. He went to a bookstore and was so inspired by a PUSHKIN novel that he decided to write one himself.

What began as a break became Seth's lifetime profession—a cross-cultural exploration of the question of identity and human relationships. He has written about North America, Tibet, China, England, and India: In each instance, he does not create, as in the works of Salman RUSHDIE, post-modern cultural hybrids through his characters; rather, Seth's works can be said to be deliberately straightforward and direct without undermining the lyricism of his language. He does not complicate human nature but frankly and compassionately tries to communicate it. In An Equal Music (1998), which is set in England, the imminent separation of the lovers is an outcome destined by music and is not a result of a larger social or political cause. In this novel, the theme of love is contained within the context of the feelings the couple have for each other. The romantic intimacy between individuals in a drama devoid of politics places this work in a modernist framework.

Seth's difference from contemporary Indian writers of English can be found in a descriptive style that is as uncomplicated in form as it is in content. This, however, does not mean that he has not written on political issues: The poem "A Doctor's Journal Entry for August 6, 1945," from All You Who Sleep Tonight (1990), is a vivid exposition of a doctor's reaction to the atomic bomb at the moment of its fall into Hiroshima. Caught between saving himself and needing to do his duty to others as a doctor, the narrator realizes that silence and death are his only options.

Seth's first literary venture was not, as he intended, a novel. Golden Gate (1986) is written completely in rhyme and won him the Commonwealth Poetry Prize in 1986. Golden Gate follows the formal tradition of older poetry and is a satire of cosmopolitanism in sonnet form. It was inspired by the vibrancy of San Francisco and the lives of the youth who eke out a living there. Seth's second novel, A Suitable Boy (1993), is set in postindependent India in the 1950s. While a mother performs an exacting search for a perfect husband for her daughter, ethnic violence between Hindus and Muslims divides a nation. A Suitable Boy is the longest novel ever written in English. Because of its length and scope, covering the lives of four extended families, Seth was hailed as a "latter-day Tolstoy" by international critics when it was released.

Seth also studied classical Chinese poetry at Nanjing University (China) and has written about his travels in China and Tibet. Seth's travelogues uncover traces of India, found even in the remotest mountain in Tibet. After his studies in China, Seth published a collection of Chinese poems that he translated into English.

Seth has proven to be a truly versatile writer. Just as uncomplicated in form as he is in content, he has written in almost every literary genre. He has often said that rather than trying to combine different genres at one time, he prefers to pick a different form for a different theme. He has written six books of poetry, three novels, and a libretto, Arion and the Dolphin (1999), for an opera by British composer Alec Roth. His attention to form has twice placed him in the Guinness Book of Records: for Golden Gate, the first novel in English written entirely in sonnet form, and for A Suitable Boy.

Other Works by Vikram Seth

Arion and Dolphins. New York: Penguin Putnam, 1999.

From Heaven Lake. New York: Vintage Books, 1987.

Works about Vikram Seth

A. L. McLeod, ed. "The Gate and the Banyan: Vikram Seth's Two Identities," The Literature of the Indian Diaspora. Delhi, India: Sterling, 2000.

Atkins, Angela. Vikram Seth's "A Suitable Boy": A Reader's Guide. New York: Continuum International Inc., 2002.

Pandurang, Mala. Vikram Seth: Multiple Locations, Multiple Affiliation. New Delhi: Rawat, 2001.

Shalamov, Varlam (1907–1982) poet, essayist

The son of a priest, Varlam Tihonovich Shalamov was born in Vologda, Russia. As a young man, Shalamov joined the communist cause and actively participated in the Russian Revolution. Between 1926 and 1929, Shalamov studied law at the Moscow University. In 1929, he was arrested for distribution of the so-called “Lenin’s Will,” a document that stated that Lenin opposed the appointment of Joseph Stalin to the leadership of the Communist Party and the Soviet Union. Shalamov was released in 1932 but was arrested once again in 1937 at the height of the period of Stalin’s political repressions.

Shalamov spend the next 17 years in a labor camp in Kolyma, a remote location in Siberia. After he returned in 1952, he began to publish poems in various journals. In the meantime, he secretly worked on Kolyma Tales, which appeared in dissident circles around Moscow in 1966. Kolyma Tales describes Shalamov’s experiences in Stalin’s labor camps. The stories were officially published in London in 1977. After the London publication, the collection caused a scandal for the Soviet government, and Shalamov was forced to renounce his work publicly. He died alone in a nursing home five years before Kolyma Tales was officially published in the Soviet Union.

Varlam Shalamov’s Kolyma Tales is considered by many to be a centerpiece of dissident fiction in Russia. His tales had a direct political impact in the Soviet Union, as they exposed the scandalous treatment of political prisoners in the Soviet Union and the injustices of the Soviet judicial system. Today, Shalamov is admired by many, and his work continues to bear relevance to the treatment of political prisoners by various totalitarian governments around the world.

Another Work by Varlam Shalamov

Graphite. Translated by John Glad. New York: Norton, 1981.

Shiga Naoya (1883–1971) novelist, short-story writer, essayist

Shiga Naoya was born in Ishimaki, Miyagi Prefecture, Japan, to Shiga Naoharu and Gin. When he was still very young, his grandparents took him to their residence in Tokyo. A member of an affluent and influential family, Shiga entered the elitist Gakushūin, a school established to educate the imperial family. He became interested in Christianity and joined a Christian study group while in middle school, and in 1906, he entered the English literature department of the Tokyo Imperial University. In 1914, Shiga married Sadako Kadonokōji. His father disapproved of the marriage, and Shiga responded by renouncing his inheritance, thus severing his ties with his family.

Shiga’s formal literary career began with his publication of the short story “The Little Girl and the Rapeseed Flower” (1904) while he was still in high school. In 1910, Shiga and a group of friends from Gakushūin started a literary magazine as an outlet for their writing, and Shiga regularly contributed short stories. In 1912, he published Ōtsu Junkichi, his first long work. While critics called the novella uneven, its honesty of emotion ranks it highly among Japan’s literary works. Five years later, while recovering from having been hit by a train, Shiga wrote his masterpiece “At Kinosaki,” a reverie over the deaths of small animals. Shiga excelled in the arena of short stories, but he struggled with novel writing. Despite other attempts, he wrote only one full-length novel—A Dark Night’s Passing—over a 16-year period, from 1921 to 1937. In the last 20 years of his life, Shiga entered into semiretirement, periodically writing personal essays based on his observations.

Shiga is regarded as the supreme stylist of his day. Using an economy of words, he depicted vivid vignettes based closely on his personal experiences. His literary power stems from his objectivity and honesty in portraying his characters’ emotions. In 1949, he received the Order for Cultural Merit.

Other Works by Shiga Naoya

Morning Glories. Translated by Allen Say and David Meltzer. Berkeley, Calif.: Oyez, 1976.

The Paper Door and Other Stories. Translated by Lane Dunlop. San Francisco: North Point Press, 1987.

Works about Shiga Naoya

Mathy, Frances. Shiga Naoya. Boston: Twayne, 1974.
Starrs, Roy. An Artless Art: The Zen Aesthetic of Shiga Naoya. Richmond, Surrey: Japan Library, 1998.

Shiina Minako

See ŌBA MINAKO.

Sholokhov, Mikhail (1905–1984) novelist, short-story writer

Mikhail Aleksandrovich Sholokhov was born in a small village of Kruzhlinin, Russia. Sholokhov's father engaged in a number of farm-related trades; his mother was an illiterate Ukrainian peasant who learned to read and write late in her life to correspond with her son. Sholokhov was educated in several schools but left his educational pursuits to join the army in 1918. He fought on the Bolshevik side during the Russian civil war. He took part in the suppression of an anti-Bolshevik rebellion by the Don Cossacks (a semiautonomous group who was granted limited local independence by the czar, often in exchange for services in the military). Indeed, almost all of Sholokhov's prose is based on this experience during the war.

At the end of the war, Sholokhov relocated to Moscow where, between 1922 and 1924, he worked as a stonemason and an accountant. He occasionally participated in writers' seminars and published his first story, The Birthmark, in 1924. The same year, he decided to dedicate himself completely to writing; only a year later, he published his first collection of short stories, Tales of the Don, which depicted the bitter transformation of village life during the civil war.

Sholokhov's fame as a novelist came with the serialized publication of And Quiet Flows the Don (1928–40). Although the novel won the Stalin Prize in 1941, it was initially criticized for its objectivity in depicting the civil war. The work traces the tragic life of Cossack Grigory Melekhov and his ill-fated love. Along with the spiritual destruction of the protagonist, Sholokhov also depicts the downfall of traditional Cossack communities. His other major work, Virgin Soil Uplifted (1932–60), describes the agricultural collectivization in the Soviet Union. Although now recognized by many critics as mediocre at best, the novel received the Lenin Prize in 1960.

Sholokhov achieved high rank in the Communist Party. He accompanied the Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev on a trip to Europe and the United States in 1959, and in 1961, he was elected as a member of the Central Committee. Many writers have criticized Sholokhov's work for its unscrupulousness in following official doctrines; still others questioned the authorship of Tikhii Don. Despite these troubles, Sholokhov was the first officially sanctioned Soviet writer to receive the Nobel Prize in literature in 1965. By Sholokhov's death in 1984, more than 79 million copies of his work were published in 84 languages.

A Work about Mikhail Aleksandrovich Sholokhov

Ermolaev, Herman. Mikhail Sholokhov and His Art. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1982.

Shu Qingchun

See LAO SHE.

Sienkiewicz, Henryk (1846–1916) novelist, short-story writer

Henryk Sienkiewicz was born in Wola Okrzejska, part of the Russian area of Poland. His father's family were revolutionaries who fought for Polish independence, and his mother's family included scholars of history.

Sienkiewicz's talent for writing emerged at a young age. His earliest works were satirical sketches on social consciousness. In 1876, he visited America, publishing his travel accounts in Polish newspapers and gaining material for future works.

Returning to Poland, Sienkiewicz turned to historical studies, writing a trilogy about 17th-century Poland, which included With Fire and Sword (1884), The Deluge (1886), and Pan Michael (1888). A prolific writer, he followed these works in rapid succession with novels on a variety of contemporary subjects. Without Dogma (1891) was a psychological study of decadence, while Children of the Soil (1894) focused on the lives of peasants.

In 1896 Sienkiewicz published Quo Vadis. This novel, for which he is most widely recognized internationally, told of the persecution of Christians at the time of Nero. He returned to historical subjects in Krzyzacy (1900), recounting the Poles' victory over the Teutonic knights in the Middle Ages, and On the Field of Glory (1906), a sequel to his previous trilogy. His final works, Whirlpools (1910) and In Desert and Wilderness (1912), again deal with contemporary issues.

In 1905, Sienkiewicz was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature for his "outstanding merits as an epic writer" (Nobel Lectures). Living in a time of cultural oppression, Sienkiewicz encouraged patriotism through his writing. Evidence of his success can be found in reports of Polish citizens pinning pages of his books to their clothing as a reminder of the fight for freedom. Sienkiewicz also wrote open letters to his people addressing political injustice, and in 1901, he helped to expose the persecution of Polish schoolchildren by the Prussians. He did not live to see the success of all he had fought to attain. He died two years before Poland's boundaries were restored.

Other Works by Henryk Sienkiewicz

Charcoal Sketches and Other Tales. Translated by Adam Zamoyski. Chester Springs, Pa.: Dufour Editions, 1990.

The Little Trilogy. Translated by Miroslaw Lipinski. New York: Hippocrene Books, 1995.

Works about Henryk Sienkiewicz

Giergielewicz, Mieczyslaw. Henryk Sienkiewicz: A Biography. New York: Hippocrene Books, 1991.

Kryanowski, Jerzy, ed. The Trilogy Companion: A Reader's Guide to the Trilogy of Henryk Sienkiewicz. New York: Hippocrene Books, 1992.

Simenon, Georges (1903–1989) novelist
Best known as a skilled writer of highly literate detective fiction, Georges Simenon was born in Liège, Belgium. The son of an accountant, he was forced to quit school because of his father's poor health. His mother died in 1921, and he worked for a time as a baker and a bookseller before launching his writing career with an apprenticeship at a local newspaper, Gazette de Liège.

Simenon began publishing when he was only 17 years old. He joined with a group of painters, writers, and artists who called themselves The Cask. This group spent the majority of their time drinking, experimenting with drugs, and having deep philosophical discussions. He recounts his experiences with this group in his novel Le Pendu de Saint Pholier (1931).

In 1922, Simenon moved to Paris, where he published numerous short stories and novels under a variety of pennames. Between 1922 and 1939, he produced more than 200 works of pulp fiction. The first work published under his real name was The Strange Case of Peter Lett (1931), in which Simenon introduces the character of Inspector Maigret, the Paris police detective about whom he would ultimately pen 84 mysteries, 18 of them written in the early 1930s. Simenon left the character behind for an eight-year hiatus at the start of World War II.

During the German invasion of France, Simenon moved to Fontenay, where he wrote successfully for the film business. After the war, under suspicion of having been a Nazi collaborator, he moved to the United States, where he wrote several mysteries with American settings, including Belle (1954) and The Hitchhiker (1955).

Simenon returned to Europe to live in Switzerland in 1955. Several of the Maigret novels enjoyed success as films. He announced his retirement in 1973, just after the publication of one last Maigret work, Maigret et Monsieur Charles (1972). He continued to write some nonfiction, including Lettre à ma mère (1974), which focuses on his relationship with his mother. Simenon died on September 4, leaving instructions that his body be cremated without ceremony. His legacy to literature lives on in the psychological depth he brought to the genre of detective fiction.

Other Works by Georges Simenon

Maigret Loses His Temper. Translated by Robert Eglesfield. San Diego, Calif.: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1993.

The Rules of the Game. Translated by Howard Curtis. San Diego, Calif.: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1988.

Works about Georges Simenon

Assouline, Pierre. Simenon: A Biography. Translated by Jon Rothschild. New York: Knopf, 1997.

Becker, Lucille. Georges Simenon Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1999.

Simon, Claude (1913–) novelist

Closely associated with the emergence of the NEW NOVEL in the 1950s, Claude Simon was born in Tananarive, in the then French colony of Madagascar. His father was killed during World War II, leaving Simon to be raised by his mother and her family in Perpignan, a French city near the Spanish border.

Simon studied for a career in the navy but was ultimately dismissed and left to study art at both Oxford and Cambridge Universities. In the early 1930s, he visited the Soviet Union. Upon his return, he served with the French army. During World War II, he was captured by the Germans but managed to escape and join the Resistance.

It was not until after the end of World War II that Simon began his career as a writer. His first novel, Le tricheur (The Cheat, 1945), was followed by the autobiographical novel La corde raide (The Tightrope, 1947). These two works and Simon's two subsequent novels are traditional in structure, with easily identifiable plots and characters. Simon gained international recognition, however, with his "new novel"-styled Le Vent (The Wind, 1959). Here Simon began to develop a style in which the plot is really just one event viewed from several perspectives.

In L'herbe (1958) Simon began to emphasize visual perceptions. Nothing much happens in the novel, even though it is set in France in 1940, the tumultuous year of the German invasion. An old woman, Marie, is dying; her recollections, mainly of houses and gardens, form the substance of the book. A sequel, La route des Flandres (1960), is about Marie's nephew Georges, juxtaposing his wartime experiences with his present postwar reality. Much of Simon's work is largely biographical or historical in origin. Stylistically, he grew to favor a stream-of-consciousness style that was often devoid of regular punctuation and used parentheses excessively. For his works and contribution to the field of literature, Simon was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature in 1985.

Other Works by Claude Simon

The Georgics. Translated by Beryl and John Fletcher. New York: Riverrun Press, 1991.

The Invitation. Translated by Jim Cross. Normal, Ill.: Dalkey Archive Press, 1991.

The Jardin des Plantes. Translated by Jordan Stump. Evanston, Ill.: Illinois University Press, 2001.

The Trolley. Translated by Richard Howard. New York: New Press, 2002.

A Work about Claude Simon

Brewer, Maria Minich. Claude Simon: Narratives Without Narrative. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1995.

Singer, Isaac Bashevis (Icek-Hersz Zynger) (1904–1991) novelist, short-story writer

Isaac Bashevis Singer was born in Radzymin, Poland. Singer's father was a Hasidic rabbi, and his mother came from a family of rabbis. When he was four, he moved with his family to Warsaw where he received a traditionally Jewish education, combining academics with the study of Jewish law in Hebrew and Aramaic texts. An avid reader, he was also influenced by the works of Spinoza, GOGOL, DOSTOEVSKY, and TOLSTOY. Singer entered the Tachkemoni Rabbinical Seminary in 1920 but ultimately gave up this vocation to become a writer.

He began his writing career as a journalist in Warsaw, where he worked as a proofreader for Literarische Bleter, a newspaper edited by his eldest brother Joshua Singer, who was more politically active than his brother and highly disillusioned with the Soviet political system. This disillusionment affected the younger Singer's awareness of the continuous sociopolitical and cultural upheaval in Poland.

Singer's chief subject was Jewish life, history, and tradition, centered primarily on the period before the Holocaust. He examines the importance of the Jewish faith through the lives of his characters.

Singer's earliest fictional works were short stories and novellas. His first novel, Satan in Goray (1932), was published in Poland. It addresses the theme of the power of the 17th-century false messiah Shabbatai Zvi. Written in a linguistic style similar to the medieval Yiddish book of chronicles, the novel is set in the 17th century during the time of the Cossaks and is based on the mass murder of Jews, peasants, and artisans. The characters are often at the mercy of circumstance but are also the victims of passion. The story examines the danger of messianic fever or overzealous prophet-worship. The destructive nature of passion and obsession are common themes in Singer's work.

Fearing Nazi persecution, Singer became a foreign correspondent and emigrated to the United States just after the publication of his first novel. He left behind his first wife, Rachel, and their son Israel. Settling in New York, he obtained employment with the Yiddish newspaper Jewish Daily Forward. In 1940 he married Alma Haimann, a German émigré, and was granted American citizenship in 1943.

His first collection of stories that was published in English was Gimpel the Fool (1957). He also published numerous stories in the Jewish Daily Forward, which were later collected in In My Father's Court (1966) and More Stories from My Father's Court (2000). The latter collection was published posthumously. In these stories, Singer depicts his own childhood in the overpopulated poor Jewish quarters of Warsaw before and during World War I. Singer's father is depicted as a pious man who studies the Talmud with great fervor; his mother is pictured as more practical, focusing on everyday problems.

The Family Moskat (1950) was Singer's first novel to be published in English. It forms the first volume of a trilogy along with The Manor (1967) and The Estate (1969). These novels describe how families are destroyed by the changing demands of society and a decline in religious faith.

Although Singer wrote all of his works in Yiddish, he collaborated with a number of well-known literary figures in the translation of his work, among them Saul Bellow and, most frequently, Cecil Hemley. He often published fiction under the penname Isaac Bashevis and journalism under Warshofsky.

In 1978, Singer was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature. In 1984, his short story "Yentil the Yeshiva Boy" was made into the popular film Yentl. The 1989 film Enemies, a Love Story was also based on one of his novels. Singer died in Surfside, Florida, on July 24, 1991.

Other Works by Isaac Bashevis Singer

Reaches of Heaven. New York: Farrar Strauss, 1980.

Scum. Translated by Rosaline Dukalsky Schwartz. New York: Farrar Straus, 1991.

The Penitent. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1983.

The Slave. Translated by the author and Cecil Hemley. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1962.

Works about Isaac Bashevis Singer

Friedman, Lawrence. Understanding Isaac Bashevis Singer. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1988.

Hadda, Janet. Isaac Bashevis Singer: A Life. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997.

Škvorecký, Jozef (1924–) novelist

Jozef Škvorecký was born in 1924 in Náchod, Bohemia, Czechoslovakia. He received his Ph.D. from Charles University in Prague. Škvorecký was fired from his job when his first novel, The Cowards (1958; translated 1970), was published; the novel was banned in Czechoslovakia soon after its publication for its ironic portrayal of the everyday lives of people living under communist rule. Undaunted, Škvorecký began freelancing, writing novels, film scripts, and nonfiction.

In response to the defeat of the Czech reform movement, Škvorecký left Czechoslovakia to settle in Canada in 1969. With his wife, he founded a Czechoslovakian publishing house in Toronto, where he began to build a solid reputation as a novelist. During a 20-year period, he developed a reputation as one of Canada's finest novelists, receiving the Governor General's Award for Fiction in 1984.

All of Škvorecký's novels have some basis in his experiences in Czechoslovakia and are often semi-autobiographical. Some of his works also focus on the problems of romantic love in a harsh sociopolitical climate. The Engineer of Human Souls (1984) is a comic novel that tells the tragic tale of novelist Danny Smiricky, a Czech immigrant living in Canada. The Bride of Texas (1995) is a historical novel about Czechoslovakian immigrants during the American Civil War who fought alongside the Union army.

Škvorecký taught at the University of Toronto from 1971 to 1991. Retired from teaching, he continues to write. His most recent novel, Dead Man on Campus (2000), is an autobiographical novel merged with a murder mystery.

Other Works by Jozef Škvorecký

Dvorák in Love: A Light-Hearted Dream. New York: Norton, 1988.

The Bass Saxophone: Two Novellas. New York: Ecco Press, 1994.

A Work about Jozef Škvorecký

Solecki, Sam. Prague Blues: The Fiction of Josef Škvorecký. New York: Ecco Press, 1990.

So Chōng-ju (Midang) (1915–2001) poet

So Chōng-ju was born in Sonuna village in Korea's North Cholla province. After receiving a high school education without graduating, he entered the monastery but soon left to pursue a career in writing.

So Chōng-ju, who was influenced by the Western writers Friedrich NIETZSCHE and Charles BAUDELAIRE, is considered one of Korea's first modern poets. He made a ripple in the Korean literary community by being the first writer to invoke sexual imagery, as in the poem "The Snake" (1938). Poems such as these marked his early sensual period.

So Chōng-ju also masterfully chronicled ordinary life. In the 1950s and 1960s, he drew on his Buddhist training and entered a Zen stage. Writing under his Buddhist name, Midang, he wrote of epiphany and Zen insight in "Legendary Karma Song" (1960) and "Beside a Chrysanthemum" (1955). He also focused on aesthetics and the natural world, both areas of Buddhist scholarship. Eventually, as So Chōng-ju aged, he returned to more personal poetry, reflecting upon his life and experiences and confronting the specter of his own mortality. "In Looking at Winter Orchids" (1976), for example, the narrator draws a parallel between his own mortality and flowers past bloom.

So Chōng-ju is one of the best-loved poets of modern Korea. He also achieved renown in the international community, which culminated in his nomination for the Nobel Prize in 1994, becoming the first Korean writer to receive this honor. A respected scholar, So Chōng-ju was a professor at Buddhist University and Dongguk University in Seoul. When he died on December 24, at the age of 85, the country mourned his death as a premier man of letters.

Another Work by So Chōng-ju

Poems of a Wanderer: Selected Poems of Midang So Chōng-ju. Translated by Kevin O'Rourke. Dublin: Dedalus Press, 1995.

socialist realism

Socialist realism was first recognized as an emerging literary movement in the Soviet Union in response to a May 1932 article in the Literary

Gazette. The article stated that, in response to modern times and a general trend toward embracing socialist doctrine, “The masses demand of an artist honesty, truthfulness, and a revolutionary, socialist realism in the representation of the proletarian revolution.” This article was followed shortly thereafter by a 1933 article by Maxim GORKY, “On Socialist Realism,” which emphasized the importance of artists taking “a new direction essential to us—socialist realism, which can be created only from the data of socialist experience.” However, socialist realism was not officially defined as a literary and political term until 1934 when, at the First All-Union Congress of Soviet writers, it was officially adopted as the accepted standard for art and literature. In a speech at the congress, Gorky called on writers to “make labor the principal hero of our books.”

Socialist realism was based on the principle that the arts should serve the purposes of communism and communist ideologies, both by glorifying worker heroes and by educating readers about the benefits of communist life. A first generation of socialist realists, including Maxim Gorky and Andrey Platonov (1899–1951), were not under state control and created works that portrayed the suffering of the poor and oppressed. However, socialist realism under Stalin persecuted writers who did not adhere to the party line. Writers, as well as visual and performing artists, were required to join the state-controlled Union of Soviet Artists and, as a condition of membership, were required to agree to abide by the union’s restrictions. The movement began and spread quickly alongside the growth and expansion of communist ideology and government, becoming a dominant form of artistic expression in much of Eastern and Central Europe, but it also included writers from the United States, Latin America, Africa, and Asia.

Many writers and visual artists living under Communist governments found the demands of socialist realism stifling, so they emigrated to other countries. Others, such as the Polish writer Sławomir MROŻEK, without leaving, found ways to keep their creativity alive through the use of indirect satire. The first collection of Mrozek’s works, Slon (1957; The Elephant, 1967), was an anthology of very short stories that satirized various aspects of Polish communism in the 1950s. It was immediately successful with both critics and the general public but was not favored by strict socialists. Stalin’s death in 1953 led to some relaxation of government control of the arts, but socialist realism continued as the official accepted literary and artistic practice into the 1980s.

Socialist realism is no longer a major movement, and very few works, if any at all, written today would fall under this category. It seems that socialist realism dissolved well before the collapse of the Soviet Union, and very few works of socialist realism, with the major exception of the first wave, are either read or appreciated today.

Socialist Realism in China

The growth of communism in the 1920s introduced socialist realism to China. A lack of mass awareness was discussed by writers, and quasi-socialist associations, such as the League of Left-Wing Writers (1930), were founded. But socialist realism did not materialize as an explicit literary and political directive in China until 1942, when Mao Zedong’s talks at the Yanan Forum on Art and Literature gave the movement its foundation. By circumscribing the role of literature in a socialist society, Mao Zedong shaped communist literature for the remainder of the century. He drew heavily upon Soviet influence, and his primary tenet was the service of literature to revolutionary thought and politics.

Mao Zedong believed writers should not criticize the revolution but should emphasize the positive. Another main point at the Yanan talks was that literature must serve the masses. However, Mao Zedong also indicated that literature should not “lower” itself culturally to simple propaganda but should rise to a new artistic standard that concurrently served the revolutionary cause and urged the study of folk traditions.

Socialist realism was best served by writers indigenous to the movement. However, there were many writers who had been working for years who converted to communism, such as DING Ling and BA Jin. Adaptation to the newly stringent requirements of socialist realism was difficult. Some writers, including Ding Ling, Ba Jin, and the unfortunate scapegoat Wang Shiwei, were eventually purged by the party for a lack of mass awareness and other literary “crimes.” The new writers were untrained students of revolution, such as Hao Ran, who wrote party-line fiction such as the three-volume novel Bright Sunny Skies (1965). Held up as a hallmark of literature for and by the masses, the novel follows three players—a landlord, a party secretary, and a fallen party member—in the difficult task of collectivizing their local economy.

Socialist realist works were to depict the revolutionary journey accurately. However, they also needed to portray revolutionary heroes or heroines, focus on the masses, and glorify the work of the revolution, such as industrialization, the militia of the People’s Liberation Army, and agrarian reforms. The novels tended to be long and predictable, with idealistic young heroes, such as Yang Mo’s romantic and revolutionary Song of Youth (1958). The military was the most popular topic, as in Chin Ching-mai’s The Song of Ou-Yang Hai (1966), about a real-life People’s Liberation Army soldier who acted selflessly. Ts’ao Ming’s The Motive Force (1949) told the story of the rehabilitation of a destroyed hydroelectric plant and glorified industrial reconstruction in Manchuria.

The Communist Party had to launch periodic campaigns against forces that they deemed threatening to socialist realist literature. Two of the most infamous were the criticisms and purgings of Ding Ling and Hu Feng in 1955. Ding Ling, who was once lauded for her 1949 socialist-realist novel on land reform, The Sun Shines Over Sanggan River, was sent to labor reform for explicit and immoral writings and for her urgings for literary openness. Hu Feng was imprisoned for his criticisms of thought reform and the dogmatic views of party leaders regarding literature. Some writers, like Wang Shiwei, were even executed.

A brief respite against such persecution occurred from April 1956 to May 1957 in a period of tentative liberalization called the Hundred Flowers. In Literature of the Hundred Flowers, Mao Zedong said, “In the arts, let a hundred flowers bloom and in scholarship, let a hundred schools of thought contend.” Here, Ding Ling and other writers who had been working under the demands of socialist realism for nearly a decade took the ills of the movement to task. Among the issues they raised were whether all literature had to be overtly political and whether poetry could be lyrical. The flowering was immediately followed by a purging anti-Rightist campaign.

The Cultural Revolution that began in 1966 and was led by Jiang Qing, Mao Zedong’s wife, produced a high volume of works of propaganda that were of dubious artistic quality. Many cultural relics were destroyed; intellectuals, writers, and other artists were sent to labor reform camps; self-criticisms were forced; and mass persecutions were common.

After the Cultural Revolution, socialist realism had some mending to do. The first wave of writings from “rehabilitated” writers, such as Ding Ling and Ba Jin, were known as “scar literature” and revealed the wounds that resulted from the oppressive dictates of Chinese socialist-realist literature. Socialist realism persists in some form today, but with the changing face of Communist China it is hardly recognizable. Writers such as MO YAN document stories of ordinary life under communism with darkness and humor.

Works about Socialist Realism

- Bisztray, George. Marxist Models of Literary Realism. New York: Columbia University Press, 1978.
- Herdan, Innes. The Pen and the Sword: Literature and Revolution in Modern China. London: Zed Books Ltd., 1992.
- Kemp-Welch, A. Stalin and the Literary Intelligentsia, 1928–39. New York: St. Martin’s Press, 1991.
- Lahusen, Thomas. How Life Writes the Book: Real Socialism and Socialist Realism in Stalin’s Russia. New York: Cornell University Press, 1997.

Mao Zedong. Selected Works of Mao Tse-Tung. New York: Pergamon Press, 1977.

Robin, Régine. Socialist Realism: An Impossible Aesthetic. Translated by Catherine Porter; foreword by Léon Robel. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1991.

Yang Lan. Chinese Fiction of the Cultural Revolution. Hong Kong: Hong Kong University Press, 1998.

Södergran, Edith (1892–1923) poet

Edith Södergran was born in St. Petersburg, Russia, to Finnish–Swedish parents. Her father, Matts Södergran, was a mechanic and engineer who worked for Alfred Nobel for a time. Her mother, Helena Lovisa, was the daughter of a wealthy Swedish ironmaster. Södergran was educated at a German school in St. Petersburg and spent her summers at Raivola, Russia. As a teenager, she wrote poems in German, Swedish, French, and Russian. Södergran battled tuberculosis throughout her adolescence and spent several years in sanitariums in Switzerland and Finland.

An unhappy love affair with a Russian physician inspired Södergran's first collection of poetry Dikter (Poems, 1916). Her verse blended numerous influences, including Heinrich HEINE, Else LASKER-SCHÜLER, Walt Whitman, and Russian SYMBOLISM. Södergran's collection Septemberlyran (September Lyric, 1918), written after her wealth was erased by the Russian Revolution, was partially about the Finnish civil war. Her friendship with critic Hagar Olsson inspired the verse in Rosenaltaret (The Rose Alter, 1919). After Södergran adopted Rudolf Steiner's anthroposophy doctrines and Christianity, she ceased writing poetry until her final days. She died after long bouts with illness and malnutrition.

Södergran developed a cult following after her death. Young poets made pilgrimages to her Raivola home until it was destroyed in World War II. Södergran's works have been translated into French and German. Her poems combine childlike humor, frankness, and a passion for beauty, and she is credited with liberating Nordic verse from the restrictions of traditional rhyme, rhythm, and imagery. George Schoolfield's biography Edith Södergran (1984) contains a quote from Swedish poet Gunnar Ekelöf in a letter to W. H. Auden, describing Södergran as "a very great poet . . . brave and loving as your Emily Brontë."

Another Work by Edith Södergran

Love and Solitude: Selected Poems, 1916–1923. Translated by Stina Katchadourian. Seattle: Fjord Press, 1985.

A Work about Edith Södergran

Schoolfield, George C. Edith Södergran: Modernist Poet in Finland. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1984.

Solovyov, Vladimir (1853–1900) philosopher, poet, translator

Vladimir Sergeyeovich Solovyov was born in Moscow, Russia. His father, S. M. Solovyov, was a famous historian. Solovyov received an excellent education while growing up and attended the Moscow University, where he received a doctoral degree in philosophy. Afterward, he became a professor at the Moscow University until 1881, when he was forced to resign after publicly criticizing the death sentence passed on the assassins of Czar Aleksandr II.

Solovyov's poetry was closely connected with his philosophical and scholarly works, for which he is primarily remembered today. Deeply influenced by Plato, he adopted many of the Platonic ideals in the development of his own philosophy in conjunction with the beliefs of the Russian Orthodox Church. Although Solovyov was hardly a liberal in his political beliefs, he supported land reforms and other democratic reforms to ease the suffering of the Russian masses. His views became more and more reactionary as the Russian antigovernmental opposition became more and more violent.

Although initially sympathetic to the democratic cause and socialism, Solovyov's philosophy took a bitter turn toward the end of his life and became firmly grounded in Christian mysticism. He began to write about the end of history and the coming of the Antichrist.

A Work by Vladimir Solovyov

Politics, Law, and Morality: Essays by V. S. Solviev. London: Yale University Press, 2000.

A Work about Vladimir Solovyov

Kostalevsky, Marina. Dostoevsky and Soloviev: The Art of Integral Vision. London: Yale University Press, 1997.

Solzhenitsyn, Aleksandr (1918–)

novelist, historian

Aleksandr Isayevich Solzhenitsyn was born in Kislovodsk, Russia. His father died in a hunting accident six months before Solzhenitsyn's birth, and his mother supported the family by working as a typist. Solzhenitsyn studied mathematics and physics at the Rostov University, graduating with honors in 1941. While studying sciences, he also completed correspondence courses in literature at the Moscow State University. During World War II, he served as a captain of the artillery and was decorated for bravery. After writing a letter in which he criticized Stalin, he was sent to the political prison camps, where he remained from 1945 to 1953.

Most of Solzhenitsyn's work deals with his experiences during imprisonment. His first published novel, One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich (1958), appeared in the leading literary journal of the Soviet Union, Novy Mir. The novel dramatically portrays a day in the life of a political prisoner in one of the Stalin's labor camps. After the publication of the novel, Solzhenitsyn attracted negative attention from the government. His second novel, Cancer Ward (1968), was initially rejected. The novel describes the lives of patients suffering and dying from cancer as an allegory for Stalinist persecutions; it was viewed as too radical by the authorities. The First Circle (1968), set during the late 1940s and the early 1950s, depicts a group of scientists who are forced to work on secret government projects in the labor camps.

By 1966, all of Solzhenitsyn's works were censored. In 1965, the KGB confiscated numerous manuscripts, and when Solzhenitsyn complained to the Soviet Writers' Union, he was expelled. Fortunately, Solzhenitsyn's works were smuggled abroad and were immediately recognized as dramatic testimony to Stalin's purges and persecutions. In Russia, Solzhenitsyn's work was secretly distributed in underground editions. Although he was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature in 1970, Solzhenitsyn was forced by the Soviet government to decline it. After Gulag Archipelago was published abroad in 1973, Solzhenitsyn was arrested and charged with treason. Gulag Archipelago contains personal testimony, interviews, and memories of the victims of Stalinist oppression. For the first time, the world could read about the unimaginable extent of Stalin's labor camps, where millions of political prisoners slaved for years. Solzhenitsyn was stripped of Soviet citizenship and forcibly deported to Switzerland.

Solzhenitsyn accepted his Nobel Prize in 1974, after his deportation from Russia. In 1990, his citizenship was reinstated, and all charges against him were dropped. He returned to Russia in 1994 and settled near Moscow.

Solzhenitsyn's work is considered groundbreaking, particularly for its fearless exposure of the oppressive nature of the Soviet political system. Solzhenitsyn remains the central figure of dissident literature, as well as one of the best-known Russian writers of the 20th century. His prose is distinct not only for its content but also for its well-developed narrative, highly descriptive diction, and realistic dialogue.

A Work about Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn

Scammell, Michael. Solzhenitsyn: A Biography. New York: Norton, 1984.

Souza, Eunice de (1940–) poet, novelist, critic

Eunice de Souza was born in Pune, India. She is of Goan Roman Catholic origin. Her father, an aspiring novelist, filled their house with books and inspired de Souza's love for literature and writing. In addition to writing four collections of poetry, she has put together anthologies of poems by other Indian poets. De Souza also writes folktales for children, is a regular contributor to newspapers and magazines, and is a respected literary critic. She is the head of the English department at St. Xavier's College, Mumbai, where she helped start an annual literary festival called Ithaka.

De Souza's anthology of Indian women poets of the 20th century is called Nine Indian Women Poets (1997). One of her inspirations for starting the project was her discovery of an obscure, ancient poem by a female monk. She began the anthology in the hopes that such moments of literary history would never again be neglected. Nine Indian Women Poets uncovers the contribution of women poets, such as Kamala Das and Sujata BHATT, and their role in advancing an old tradition of women writing in India. The anthology also reveals the different ways modern poetry has developed as a mode of expression for women in India.

De Souza's own poetry is in English, combined with its spoken version from Mumbai's streets, a sharp, witty and scathing language that reflects the author's own personality. Famous for her highly opinionated and critically discerning work, de Souza is often hailed as a feminist, she herself claims that poetry and propaganda do not belong together and that, if asked, she would have to admit she prefers writing about her pet parrots.

Other Works by Eunice de Souza

Conversations with Indian Poets. New York: Oxford University Press, 2001.
Dangerlok. New Delhi: Penguin Books, 2001.

Soyinka, Wole (Akinwande Oluwole Soyinka) (1934–) playwright, poet, novelist, essayist

Soyinka was born to Samuel Ayodele, a teacher, and Grace Eniola Soyinka, a shopkeeper, in western Nigeria. Both of his parents were Yoruba, a major tribal group in this West African country. He showed immense intellectual ability at an early age and was eventually able to go to England to study at the University of Leeds. Soyinka returned to Nigeria after graduating and worked to develop a Yoruba-based theater. He was influential in training many young people as the head of the Drama School of Ibadan University until he was arrested in 1967. Soyinka worked and wrote for the freedom of Biafra, a section of Nigeria, and his writings led to his imprisonment for almost two years. He details the experience in his text The Man Died: The Prison Notes of Wole Soyinka (1972), in the preface, of which, he says, "Books and all forms of writing have always been objects of terror to those who seek to suppress the truth."

Books were smuggled in to him while he was imprisoned. Soyinka read them ceaselessly and then wrote on these and other loose pieces of paper. In a sense, he inscribed his life in between the lines of other texts. Ultimately, the books were smuggled out, and the experience, as well as much poetry, was reconstituted. Some of the poetry can now be read in collections such as A Shuttle in the Crypt (1972). Soyinka's act of writing himself into existence within an unforgiving environment, using whatever materials were available, is an apt metaphor for how he has dealt with the legacy of colonialism in Nigeria. Like his countryman Chinua ACHEBE, Soyinka draws on his cultural inheritance to make sense of the postcolonial world he inhabits.

He has written several autobiographical books that also portray Nigeria from the 1940s to the 1960s. Soyinka depicts his coming of age in Ake: The Years of Childhood (1981) and his early adulthood in Ibadan, The Penkelemes Years, A Memoir: 1946–1965 (1994).

Critical Analysis

In his play, Death and the King's Horseman (1975), Soyinka depicts a proud Yoruba leader who must make an impossible choice. His king has died, and he is expected to will himself to death and follow his king. A colonial administrator imprisons the king's "horseman" (a form of commander, and a very revered position), and the Yoruba takes this interference as a sign that his gods do not wish him to die. But the very people who had worshiped him now shun and insult the once-renowned warrior. In the most affecting portion of the play, the protagonist, Olori Elesin, sways and becomes one with the rhythmic pulse of the drums as they beat him on his way to the welcome embrace of eternity. Elesin's death is sad, yet honorable, even magnificent. His gesture is not futile—he does not act out of personal pride or desperation—rather, his embrace of this appropriate end fulfills the proper Yoruba tradition and leaves an honorable legacy.

Soyinka adapted the historical events of a 1946 incident to ground his play, but it is important to note that he refuses the label of a "clash of cultures" for his representations of such events. In much the same way that he inscribed himself into books while in prison, he takes the historical reality of colonialism and "writes" himself and his people into it. In this way, he examines the legacies left to his country while still insisting on the cultural vigor of his own people. Further, this form of writing his people into European versions of history allows Soyinka to avoid merely politicizing in favor of a joyous embrace of the power of theater itself.

Many of his plays deal with political themes. For example, Madmen and Specialists (1975) is set during the civil war in Nigeria in the 1960s and depicts the struggle between an interrogator and his prisoner.

Soyinka's poetry also deals with political subjects, but it is also often concerned with everyday Nigerian existence. For example, in the poem "Telephone Conversation," from the collection Reflections (1980), the speaker of the poem tries to entice a young woman into a date. The young woman wants to know just how dark, how "black" he is before she will agree. The young man simply wants her to see him for herself.

Soyinka's political thought is best viewed in his collection of essays, The Open Sore of a Continent (1996), which examines Nigeria's descent into turmoil in the 1990s. His outspoken criticism of the government led to a death sentence on the now-exiled writer.

It would be difficult to overstate the importance of Wole Soyinka to world literature. He was the first black African to win the Nobel Prize for literature (1986) and has a dazzling variety of texts that point to his prolific ability and his immense versatility.

Other Works by Wole Soyinka

Idanre and Other Poems. New York: Hill and Wang, 1967.

Madmen and Specialists. New York: Hill and Wang, 1971.

Myth, Literature, and the African World. Cambridge, U.K.: Cambridge University Press, 1976.

Works about Wole Soyinka

Katrak, Ketu. Wole Soyinka and Modern Tragedy: A Study of Dramatic Theory and Practice. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1986.

Wright, Derek. Wole Soyinka Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1993.

Sri Sri (Srirangam Rao Srinivasa)

(1910–1983) poet, novelist

Sri Sri was born in Vishakapatnam, Andhra Pradesh, India. After finishing his education in Madras, he became a subeditor for a daily newspaper and also worked for All India Radio. He wrote his first poem when he was seven and his first novel when he was nine.

Sri Sri is best noted for his radical attempts to use literature for social critique. His poetry is stylistically uncomplicated and composed of simple vocabulary, a trademark of "progressive poetry," a new school of Telugu poetry that Srinivasa started in the mid-1950s. The new movement attracted young writers because of its aim to change the style, content, and mythical and religious topics of traditional Telugu poetry. These poets were often called the militant young poets of Telugu literature. Their poetry characteristically resisted any romanticization and, instead, was concerned with reform and progress.

Sri Sri wrote creative, journalistic, and critical works that were collected into a six-volume anthology in Telugu titled Sri Sri Sahityamu (1972). The difference in genre, however, did not change the thematic kernel of his writing, which is to uncover the reasons for social inequalities. The poem “Hogwash” is a list of questions, posed to an imaginary “Sir.” The speaker of the poem refuses to believe that the other man’s economic privilege is a product of his own “illusion.” Rejecting silence, he asks: the landlord’s / Rolls Royce, / an illusion? / the prince’s / fat wallet, / an illusion? / Sir / how can it be?

Sri Sri’s contribution to Telugu literature was not only his original work. Profoundly influenced by dadaism (see DADA) and surrealism, he translated the works of Charles BAUDELAIRE (1821–61), André BRETON (1896–1966), and Salvador Dalí (1904–89) into Telugu. In 1966, Sri Sri was awarded the Lenin Peace Prize for his collection of poems called Creation by the Sword. In 1970, he became the first president of the Revolutionary Writers’ Association of India.

Another Work by Sri Sri Mahaprasthanam. Machilipatnam, India: Nalini Kumar Publishing House, 1950.

A Work about Sri Sri

Dharwadker, Vinay, and A. K. Ramanujan, eds. The Oxford Anthology of Modern Indian Poetry. London: Oxford University Press, 1994.

Srivastav, Dhanipat Rai

See PREMCHAND, MUNSHI.

Staël, Germaine de (Anna Louise Germaine Necker, Baronne de Staël-Holstein) (1766–1877) novelist

Anna Louise Germaine Necker was born in Paris to Swiss parents active in contemporary political and intellectual life. As a young child, she was tutored privately in her home and spent much time attending her mother’s celebrated intellectual salon, where she had the opportunity to become acquainted with such leading intellectual figures as Edward Gibbon and Denis Diderot. As finance minister to Louis XVI, her father, Jacques Necker, directly experienced the turmoil of the revolution of 1789. He was a major influence on his daughter.

At age 20, Mademoiselle Necker married a Swedish diplomat, Baron Staël-Holstein. The baron was 17 years older than she and, though a titled nobleman, penniless. She supported the moderates during the revolution, but when her life was threatened, she fled to England and helped others escape the terror. Her major work on the revolution, Considerations sur la Révolution Française (Thoughts on the French Revolution), was not published until after her death. When she returned to Paris, her home became an intellectual and political salon of great power where writers, critics, and other artists gathered together to discuss not only politics and literature but also fashion trends and the development of social manners and customs. Although Staël and her husband separated in 1797, they remained on friendly terms.

Critical Analysis

Staël was a writer from a very young age. Influenced by Jean-Jacques Rousseau, she published the short stories “Mirza” and “Zulma” in 1795. Among the issues raised in these stories are the difficulties of being a writer when women were increasingly confined to a domestic role and the iniquities of the slave trade. In 1796, she published the major treatise De l’influence des passions (On the Influence of the Passions), following it in 1800 with De la littérature (On Literature). This work, which relates literature to social and political structures, transformed literary theory and founded comparative studies.

In 1794, Staël became romantically and intellectually involved with Benjamin CONSTANT, whose ideas were a great source of inspiration to her. Under his influence, she began to read the works of August Wilhelm SCHLEGEL (1767–1845) and his brother Friedrich (1772–1829) and dared to oppose Napoleon's policies.

Staël's first major novel, Delphine (1802), gained her attention both popularly and politically. Following the release of a nonfiction study of the effects of social conditions on literature, the novel is a politically challenging look at the destiny of women in a male-dominated, aristocratic society. Above all, the work questions the accepted norms of society as they pertain to the rights of women as intellectually independent people. Staël denied allegations that her work was intended to provoke a political response, claiming to be more intent on observations of fact than on causing open opposition to the norm. Napoleon, however, considered the work such a threat to the traditions of French society that he exiled Staël in 1803.

Staël retreated to Coppet on Lake Geneva, where she had an estate. There, she surrounded herself with a circle of highly influential and intelligent friends and associates. She traveled as much as possible, and a trip to Italy provided her with the inspiration for her second major novel, Corinne (1807). This work strips away all of the trappings of neoclassicism to express itself fully in the style of French ROMANTICISM. It is a tragic love story about an Italian woman, an intellectual, who falls for an English lord. The novel challenges, once again, the accepted norms for women in society—its main character, Corinne, is a celebrated poet, who ultimately loses her lover because he desires a less complex and more domestic partner. Other early feminist themes pervade the text as well, such as the rights of women to chose whom to love and to be intellectuals. These themes are developed alongside descriptions of Italy's artistic and architectural beauty and of evocations of the ideal of individual freedom not hampered by gender or class. The novel stands as one of Staël's most influential works, affecting not only the development of the French novel but also literary trends in England and the United States.

Staël's principal theoretical work, De l'Allemagne (On Germany, 1810) was also the result of her travels. It again brought her to Napoleon's attention. Although government censors did not see the book as a threat, Napoleon disliked it because he resented the comparisons Staël made between French and German cultures to the detriment of the French. In 1811, he ordered the destruction of the entire first edition, stating that it had no business being published in the first place because it was "un-French." Several copies of the book escaped destruction, however, and made their way to England, where they were published in a new edition and were well received. De l'Allemagne introduced German Romantic literature and idealist philosophy into France and was a major influence on the French Romantic movement.

In 1811, after a series of affairs with influential men, de Staël secretly married a young officer nearly half her age, Jean Rocca. Together they had one child, a boy, who was born mentally retarded. By this time, Staël had two other children, a boy fathered by a revolutionary whom she had helped escape to England in 1793 and a daughter, most probably fathered by Constant. Harassed repeatedly by the police, Staël exiled herself and her family, fleeing to Russia and then to England.

In 1815, Staël returned to Coppet and republished De l'Allemagne. Although her health was declining rapidly, she enthusiastically participated in the political life of France and, in spite of her long-standing history of problems with Napoleon, warned him of a threat that had been made on his life.

Staël suffered a stroke on July 14, and died in Paris. One of her best-known works, Ten Years of Exile (1821), which was largely autobiographical, was published posthumously.

Another Work by Germaine de Staël

An Extraordinary Woman: Selected Writings of Germaine de Staël. Translated by Vivian Folkenflik. New York: Columbia University Press, 1987.

Works about Germaine de Staël

Besser, Gretchen Rous. Germaine de Staël Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1994.

Hogsett, Charlotte. The Literary Existence of Germaine de Staël. Carbondale: Southern Illinois University Press, 1987.

Stead, Christina (1902–1983) novelist, short-story writer

Christina Stead was the child of English parents who immigrated to Rockdale, New Sydney, Australia, where she was born. After the death of her mother, Ellen Butters Stead, when Christina was two years old, she was raised and influenced by her father, David George Stead, a naturalist who worked as an economist for the Australian fisheries. When her father remarried Ada Gibbons, Stead was expected to help care for the six children whom their marriage produced. She received her education in Sydney, graduating from Sydney University Teacher's College in 1922. After working for a short time at the university as a demonstrator in experimental psychology and then in Sydney Schools as a teacher of abnormal children, Stead became a secretary until she decided to leave Australia in 1928, working as a clerk first in London and then in Paris.

During her years in Europe, Stead began writing fiction, producing a collection of rather bizarre short stories, Salzburg Tales (1934), and a novel, Seven Poor Men of Sydney (1934). Soon after this, she met William Blake, an American financier, writer, economist, and socialist, whom she eventually married in 1952 and lived with until his death in 1968. Stead and Blake lived in Spain until the threat of civil war and then moved to the United States, living in New York and then Hollywood, where Stead worked as a screenwriter for MGM during World War II. They returned to Europe after the war, living in various countries until Blake's death. Stead finally returned to Australia in 1974, where she lived and wrote until her own death.

Although Christina Stead is the author of numerous novels and several collections of short stories, she is best known for her brilliant portrayal of a dysfunctional family in The Man Who Loved Children (1940). Loosely based on the lives and relationships of her father and her stepmother and their children, including herself, the novel depicts Sam and Hetty Pollit, each of whom seems unable to speak in a language that the other understands, so they employ their children as their means of communication, having them convey messages and carry notes back and forth between their parents. Also suffering from economic reversals after the death of Hetty's wealthy father, the family's struggles with angry creditors, Sam's passivity when it comes to fighting to keep his government job, Hetty's unwanted sixth pregnancy, the stepdaughter Louisa's defiance of her father, and an anonymous false accusation Sam receives that the baby is not really his, the family is unable to survive the passionate destructiveness and selfishness of the parents, whose battles become physical and life threatening. Louisa, who longs to save the children from their parents, wants to kill them both but manages to poison only Hetty, who actually realizes what is happening and thus chooses it as well. Sam, however, cannot believe that Louisa is indeed responsible for his wife's death, and Louisa is finally driven to escape from her father to survive. Stead's success in capturing the psychological truths of each character and the vividness with which she conveys their animosity has made The Man Who Loved Children a memorable book for which she has received the most acclaim, especially after its reissue in 1965 by an American publisher.

Another Work by Christina Stead

Letty Fox: Her Luck. New York: New York Review of Books, 2001.

Works about Christina Stead

Rowley, Hazel. Christina Stead: A Biography. New York: Henry Holt & Company, 1995.

Sheridan, Susan. Christina Stead. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1988.

Stendhal (Marie-Henri Beyle)

(1783–1842) novelist, essayist

Best known for his two masterpieces, Le Rouge et le noir (The Red and the Black, 1830) and La Chartreuse de Parme (The Charterhouse of Parma, 1839), Stendhal was born as Marie-Henri Beyle in Grenoble to a wealthy lawyer. His mother passed away in childbirth when Stendhal was very young. At age 16, he moved to Paris ostensibly to study, but he entered the military before ultimately settling on a career as a writer.

Stendhal enlisted in Napoleon's army in May 1800 and served for 18 months as a lieutenant, fighting in Russia, Germany, and Italy. His dreams, however, were not centered on achieving military accolades; he hoped to become one of the greatest comic poets of all time. When he resigned from active service, he took a post in civil and military administration, which he held until the fall of the French empire in 1814. At that point, he was given a 50 percent pay cut, making his income inadequate to his needs. He searched for other employment for several years but was unable to secure anything in France. Ultimately, he decided to move to Italy, where his first book, a travel piece entitled Rome, Naples, and Florence in 1817 (1817), was published. This was also the first time he chose to use the penname of Stendhal.

Stendhal returned to Paris in 1821, taking advantage of his success as a writer and the steadily improving conditions in France. He frequented salons where he could discuss the latest ideas on art, literature, and politics. He continued to do well as a writer, publishing On Love (1822) and Racine and Shakespeare (1823) in quick succession. On Love, a psychology of love, is a collection of thoughts and ideas that show Stendhal as an early sympathizer, particularly with regard to his feelings on women's education. Racine and Shakespeare is an important romantic manifesto that insists that literature should reflect its historical moment. These works were well received, but his first novel, Armance (1827), a psychological study of impotence, was scorned by the critics.

Critical Analysis

The Red and the Black was a breakthrough for Stendhal. Inspired by a newspaper account of the trial of a young man for attempted murder of a married woman, it advanced the development of the novel in its complex and ironic interweaving of the psychological and the historical. It tells the story of Julien Sorel, a peasant, in the context of the post-Napoleonic period between 1815 and 1830. Sorel uses seduction and hypocrisy to rise in society, but believing that his mistress has betrayed him, he shoots the one woman he ever really loved. Finally, he rejects his lies and masks and, a condemned man, stands before the court to attack social inequality and oppression:

Gentlemen, I have not the honour to belong to your social class. You see in me a peasant in revolt against the baseness of his fate. . . . I see men who would like in my person to punish and dishearten for ever that class of young people who, born in a lowly and poverty-stricken class, had the chance to educate themselves and the courage to associate with those circles which arrogance of the rich calls society. . . .

After the revolution of 1830 and the rise to power of King Louis-Philippe, Stendhal was appointed French consul in the small Italian port town of Civitavecchia. While there, he wrote Memoirs of an Egoist, (published 1892), in which he provides a vivid depiction of life in and among the salons, museums, and theatres of Paris. This work, along with two others, Lucien Leuwen: The Green Huntsman, which depicts the corruption under the reign of Louis-Philippe, and the largely autobiographical piece The Life of Henry Brulard, which was left unfinished, remained in manuscript at Stendhal's death, but were published in the 1890s.

Stendhal's political views were often motivated by his own success or failure under a prevailing regime. If he was doing poorly, he tended to mock and criticize the ruling body for his lack of success. However, as soon as he began to thrive, his views shifted and he became moderately conservative. He composed his second great work, The Charterhouse of Parma between 1836 and 1839, which is concerned with a search for identity. The protagonist, Fabrizio del Dongo, defines himself in areas as diverse as the battlefield at Waterloo and a Carthusian monastery. He experiences the frustrations of war, politics, love, and the loss of his child. He finally withdraws to the Charterhouse of Parma, where he dies. The work was published to great acclaim, rapidly gaining popularity, and critical success.

The Charterhouse of Parma was destined to be Stendhal's last major accomplishment. In 1841 he suffered a stroke, which forced him to take a leave of absence from his post and return to Paris. Late in the evening of March 22, Stendhal was taking a walk down a Paris street when he collapsed, unconscious, to the ground. He died a few hours later on March 23.

Another Work by Stendhal

Lamiel, or The Ways of the Heart. Translated by Jacques Le Clercq. New York: H. Fertig, 1978.

Works about Stendhal

Keates, Jonathan. Stendhal. London: Sinclair-Stevenson, 1994.

Pearson, Roger. Stendhal's Violin: A Novelist and His Reader. New York: Oxford University Press, 1992.

Talbot, Emile J. Stendhal Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1993.

Storni, Alfonsina (Alfonsina Tao-Lao)

(1892–1938) poet, dramatist, journalist

Alfonsina Storni was born in Sala Capriasca, Switzerland, and moved with her cultured Italian-Swiss parents to Argentina at the age of four. When her father died in 1900, she was obligated to work in a cap factory, as an actress, and later as a schoolteacher. Her first poems were published in 1910, the year she moved to Buenos Aires. In 1911, she gave birth to an illegitimate child and later worked as a journalist and a teacher to support herself and her son.

Storni's first book of poems, The Restlessness of the Rose Bush, appeared in 1916, and her poetry between 1916 and 1921 reflects an intense romantic subjectivity. Her poetry was well received—in 1920, she won First Municipal Poetry Prize and Second National Poetry Prize.

By 1925, Storni's poetry was becoming more objective, as reflected in Ochre (1925), which focuses on the sea, and in World of Seven Wells (1934). Between 1926 and 1934, many of her plays were performed in theaters in Buenos Aires. During this period, she also authored, under the pseudonym Tao-Lao, various critical articles that appeared in the newspaper La Nación.

Her last books of poems, Magnetized Circles (1938) and Mask and Trefoil (1938), reflect her cynicism, her feminist rebelliousness, and her powerful language. By then, Storni had been dealing with breast cancer for three years, and when the cancer returned in 1938, she chose to commit suicide by filling her pockets with stones and drowning herself in the sea at Mar del Plata. She sent her final poem, "I Want to Sleep," now considered to be a suicide poem, to La Nación so that it would be received at the same time she entered the sea.

Another Work by Alfonsina Storni

Selected Poems of Alfonsina Storni. Translated by Mary Crow and Norman Ton. Fredonia, N.Y.: White Pine Press, Inc., 1996.

A Work about Alfonsina Storni

Phillips, Rachel. Alfonsina Storni: From Poetess to Poet. United Kingdom: Boydell & Brewer, Inc., 1975.

Strindberg, August (1849–1912)
playwright, short-story writer, novelist

August Strindberg was born in Stockholm, Sweden, to Carl Oscar Strindberg, a shipping agent, and Ulrika Eleanora Norling, a woman of working-class origins. Norling had been Carl Oscar's domestic servant but later became his mistress and mother to August. Strindberg's childhood was quite unhappy: He experienced the loss of his mother at age 13, endured poverty and family conflicts, and suffered abuse from his stepmother.

In 1867, Strindberg entered the University of Uppsala but failed to pass a preliminary examination in chemistry and had to leave. He worked at the Royal Dramatic Theater as an assistant manager and then returned to the University of Uppsala, where he finally received his degree in 1872. On graduation, Strindberg worked in Stockholm as a journalist and, from 1864 to 1882, served as an assistant librarian at the Royal Library.

Strindberg was married three times. His first, unsuccessful marriage was to the Baroness Siri von Essen, a member of the Swedish aristocracy in Finland, with whom he had three children. He married a second time in 1893 and a third time in 1901. These unions also ended in divorce, and he lost custody of his children.

Strindberg's first nationally successful novel, The Red Room (1879), focuses on the rise of industrialism in Sweden. The protagonist of the novel, Arvid Falk, is an aspiring youth who dreams of becoming a writer. Although he is talented, Falk rejects the uncertainties of a writer's life for a stable middle-class existence. Strindberg suggests that it is almost impossible to devote one's life to aesthetic pursuits in a world controlled by capitalistic values. The novel was popular throughout Sweden and established Strindberg as one of the foremost writers of Scandinavian literature.

During the years between 1883 and 1887, while living in France and Switzerland, Strindberg faced financial troubles and found himself on the verge of a nervous breakdown. This psychological imbalance culminated in clinical paranoia and a dependence on absinthe, a liquor made from wormwood. In 1884, Strindberg published Getting Married, a novel based on his experience during marriage. This frank portrayal of the institution of marriage outraged many in Sweden. Strindberg was put on trial charged with blasphemy, but he was eventually acquitted. He developed a deep distrust of women, whom he saw as persecutors, and believed that his wife was behind a plot to have him committed to a mental institution.

Critical Analysis

Strindberg's most famous play, Miss Julie (1888), was also one of his most controversial works. Julie, the daughter of a prosperous count, allows Jean, a male servant, to seduce her during a night of festivities. Jean understands that marriage between him and Julie is impossible. Fearing for his position, Jean psychologically corners Julie, and she commits suicide. Miss Julie combines the elements of NATURALISM and REALISM that made it a masterpiece. It depicts a Darwinian struggle between the sexes that is further amplified by the respective social roles and positions of the two main characters. Many critics have compared Miss Julie to Henrik IBSEN's A Doll's House. Both plays are classified as works of realism, but the representations of femininity found in the two plays are strikingly different. Julie is ultimately dominated by Jean, while Nora, even in defeat, is dominated by no one. Today, Miss Julie is Strindberg's most frequently performed play.

Between 1892 and 1897, Strindberg experienced one mental crisis after another. Constantly under attack by critics, and haunted by the guilt of losing custody of his children, Strindberg was on a verge of a complete collapse. Still, he eventually recovered and entered the most productive period of his career. Between 1898 and 1909, Strindberg wrote 36 plays, most of which deal with life, death, and various aspects of marriage.

In a A Dream Play (1901), however, Strindberg breaks with the realism of the previous works. All actions are presented in the form of the thoughts, dreams, and psychological perceptions of Daughter of Indra, a mysterious, luminous figure who seemingly descends from heaven. The play seems to foreshadow the many theories of Austrian psychoanalyst Sigmund FREUD about the separation of the conscious from the unconscious and the active role of the former in the formation of the individual psyche. Most critics rejected the play as absurd, although some realized the genius of Strindberg's work.

Between 1907 and 1908, Strindberg experimented with various forms of theater. He introduced chamber music as part of his plays, and he exchanged the traditional single protagonist for a small group of equally important characters. These and other innovations had a long-lasting and dramatic influence on traditional conceptions of theater.

During his life, August Strindberg wrote more than 70 plays in addition to numerous novels, short stories, and essays. Today, he is considered to be among the most influential playwrights and theoreticians of the modern period. The controversial subjects of his plays challenged audiences to question what was suitable for theater and how plays should be performed. Strindberg's works have been the single most important source of inspiration for the German EXPRESSIONIST movement and for many contemporary playwrights as well.

Other Works by August Strindberg

Five Plays. Translated by Harry Carlson. Riverside: University of California Press, 1996.

Inferno and from Occult Diary. New York: Penguin, 1988.

Miss Julie and Other Plays. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1999.

Works about August Strindberg

Lagercrantz, Olaf. August Strindberg. New York: Farrar, Straus, & Giroux, 1984.

Meyer, Michael. Strindberg: A Biography. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1987.

Suleri, Sara (Sara Suleri Goodyear)

(1953–) novelist, critic

Sara Suleri was born in Karachi, Pakistan. Her father, Ziauddin Ahmed, is Pakistani and an active political journalist. Her mother, Mair Jones, is Welsh and a professor of English literature. Suleri completed her master's degree at Punjab University and went on to Indiana University, where she received her doctorate degree in English in 1980. She became a professor at Yale University in 1981 and is the founder and editor of the Yale Journal of Criticism.

Her first novel, Meatless Days (1989), has several obvious similarities to her own life and is claimed by many critics to be an autobiographical memoir, though the author herself denies it. The narrator of the novel searches for her identity as it changes in time, memory, and space. Moving between Asia and America, the narrator depicts with longing what can be lost in transformations through cultural exchange and remembered relationships. Her search for her own identity, however, underlies the equally important search for Indian and Pakistani female identity in a history that has silenced them. Meatless Days is a personalized narrative on the search for women's presence and their voices.

Suleri is also the author of the critically distinguished work The Rhetoric of English India (1992). This book looks into the formation of colonial and postcolonial India and Pakistan through the English language by examining the works of authors such as Rudyard Kipling (1865–1936), E. M. Forster (1879–1970), V. S. NAIPAUL, and Salman RUSHDIE.

A Work about Sara Suleri

Smith, Sidonie, and Watson, Julia, eds. "Women Skin Deep: Feminism and the Postcolonial Condition." In Women, Autobiography, Theory: A Reader. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 1998.

Svevo, Italo (Ettore Schmitz) (1861–1928) novelist, short-story writer

Considered one of the pioneers of the Italian psychological novel, Italo Svevo was born Ettore Schmitz in the town of Trieste, then part of the Austrian Empire. The son of a German Jewish glassmaker and his Italian wife, Svevo was sent to Germany at age 12 to attend boarding school. He later returned to Trieste to continue his education, which was abruptly terminated when he was in his late teens as a result of his father's failure in business. Svevo took a position as a clerk but continued to spend much of his free time reading and, ultimately, writing as well.

Svevo published his first novel, Una Vita (A Life), (1892), when he was 31 years old, using his pseudonym for the first time. The work gained attention immediately for its revolutionary introspective, analytic style. Svevo continued to publish works in this style, which were later classified as psychological novels; at the time, however, the newness of his tone made his works difficult to comprehend, resulting in their being ignored by critics once their curiosity wore off. Svevo's second novel, As a Man Grows Older (1898), received a similar lack of attention, at which point he officially gave up writing to pursue a career in his father-in-law's business. (He continued to write short stories throughout this period.)

Svevo's business career required him to travel, and many of his trips were to England. To improve his command of English, he employed as a tutor the young writer James Joyce, who was living in Trieste and teaching at the Berlitz school. In spite of their age difference, they rapidly forged an enduring friendship. Joyce allowed Svevo to read portions of his work in progress, Dubliners, and, in his turn, Svevo gave Joyce both of his novels to read. Joyce found the works to be enthralling and encouraged Svevo to resume his writing endeavors. As a result, his best-known work, La Coscienza di Zeno (Confessions of Zeno), (1923), was published. Written in the first person, it represents an attempt by the narrator to discover through analysis the source of his nicotine addiction. Again, the work was ignored, but two years after publication, Joyce arranged for publication of a French translation. Svevo became famous in France, and his popularity slowly grew in Italy, helped by the support of Eugenio MONTALE, as the psychological novel gained acceptance.

Svevo was in the process of working on a sequel to Zeno when he was killed in an automobile accident on September 13. His contribution to Italian literature, however, included a stream-of-consciousness style, which was present in both Zeno and several posthumously published short stories, as well as his advancement of the genre of the psychological novel in Italy.

Another Work by Italo Svevo

Emilio's Carnival (Senilità). Translated by Beth Archer Brombert. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2001.

Works about Italo Svevo

Gatt-Rutter, John. Italo Svevo: A Double Life. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1988.

Svevo, Livia Veneziani. Memoir of Italo Svevo.

Translated by Isabel Quigly. London: Libris, 1989.
Weiss, Beno. Italo Svevo. Boston: Twayne, 1988.

symbolism

Predominant in France at the end of the 19th century, and evident in Belgium as well, the symbolist movement, strongly influenced by Charles BAUDELAIRE's essays on poetry and art, originated with the work of a group of French poets, including Paul VERLAINE, Stéphane MALLARMÉ, and Arthur RIMBAUD. It reached its peak around 1890, and the principles on which it was founded continued to influence MODERNIST movements of the early 20th century.

Symbolism began as a reaction against the prevailing literary trends of REALISM and NATURALISM. Because of the tendency of symbolist poets to focus on the artificial and grotesque as opposed to the natural, as well as their common thematic use of ruin and decay, the writers of this movement were also commonly associated with the subsequently emerging DECADENT movement.

Beginning in the 1830s, realism became the dominant form of literary expression in France. It was later followed by the similar but revised naturalist movement. Both schools of thought based their works entirely on factual observations of contemporary society and sought to portray life without glamorization or pretense. Toward the end of the century, particularly in Paris, symbolists began to challenge this style, believing that words and language as they currently existed were superficial. Therefore, they declared that to represent and transform the reality of modern life, the poet must recreate language. Through the use of symbols, poets could create patterns of meanings based on symbolic representation and allusion rather than direct statement. The symbolists affirmed the transcendent possibilities of the imagination.

There are a number of specific themes common to symbolist poetry, but the main focus is on the difficult role of the poet in modern urban life. The symbolist poets shared with the decadents a common FIN DE SIÈCLE sense of brooding melancholy and darkness.

Early symbolists experimented with form, resulting in the development of poetic free verse, poetry that, whether rhymed or unrhymed, disregards conventional rules regarding poetic meter. It often borrows patterns from natural speech in place of the more affected diction common to traditional poetry. This form is still the prevailing standard in modern poetry.

Another technique, which has existed since Homer but was exploited especially by French symbolists, is synesthesia, describing one sensation in terms of another (for example, describing sound with colors). Symbolist poets used synesthesia as a means of uncovering the correspondences between different sensory impressions, as in Baudelaire's famous "Correspondances" from Les Fleurs du mal (The Flowers of Evil, 1857).

While the symbolist movement had its origins in poetry, its influence eventually began to extend to fiction, drama, music, and the visual arts. The prominent members of the school, such as Rimbaud, Verlaine, and Mallarmé, can all trace their influence to the works of Charles Baudelaire, who was conversely influenced by Edgar Allan Poe, as their precursor; in turn, they influenced the writings of Paul CLAUDEL, Paul VALÉRY, Maurice MAETERLINCK, and others. Similar movements arose outside of France, and symbolism's effects reached as far as the United States in the works of writers such as Dylan Thomas and e.e. Cummings.

Russian Symbolism

Symbolism began in Russia a little later than in France and flourished until the Russian Revolution (1917). Deeply rooted themselves in mysticism, the Russian symbolists viewed themselves as a nexus between the Russian people and some higher spiritual realm. Like its French counterpart, Russian symbolism manifested itself in drama, poetry, prose, and graphic art; however, it achieved its full force almost exclusively in poetry. Like their French models, the Russian symbolists experimented with verse forms and especially with free verse.

The symbolists rejected realist notions about the social purposes of art. For the symbolists, the artist was a semidivine figure whose work would guide the Russian people to an ideal future. Symbolists often viewed the imagination as a different level of reality, and they used obscure images and strange metaphors to convey their feelings of detachment from the reality of everyday life.

Aleksandr Blok, Vladimir SOLOVYOV, and Andrey BELY were the leading figures of symbolism in Russia, but it is Solovyov who is considered the most important originator of the movement in Russia. Solovyov created a new form of mysticism based on the worship of the Eternal Feminine, dually identified as nature and as the muse that endowed poets with inspiration. Solovyov's work was the single most important foundation for the Russian symbolist movement.

The symbolist movement served an extremely important function in Russian literary history by bridging the gap between realism and ACMEISM. Although poets such as Anna AKHMATOVA later rejected symbolism, the movement was an extremely important early influence on her generation of poets and on later generations as well.

Works about Symbolism

Fowlie, Wallace. Poem and Symbol: A Brief History of French Symbolism. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press, 1990.

Frantisek, Deak. Symbolist Theater: The Formation of an Avant-garde. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1993.

McGuinness, Patrick, ed. Symbolism, Decadence and the Fin de Siècle: French and European Perspectives. Exeter, U.K.: University of Exeter Press, 2000.

Pyman, Avril. A History of Russian Symbolism. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1994.

Szymborska, Wislawa (1925–) poet

Wislawa Szymborska was born in Bnin, now a part of Kornik, in western Poland. In 1931, she moved with her family to Krakow where, during the German occupation of Poland in World War II, she attended classes illegally. After the war, she studied Polish literature and sociology at the Jagiellonian University. She worked as a poetry editor and columnist for the Krakow literary magazine Zycie Literackie until 1981.

Szymborska's first published poem was "Szukam słowa" ("I Am Looking for a Word," 1945). She finished her first collection of poetry three years later, but the Communist Party's strict cultural policy deemed the work to be too complex, and it was not published. As a result, Szymborska concentrated on making her work more political, and her first collection, Dlaczego Zyjemy, appeared in 1952.

Szymborska's early works conformed to the style of SOCIALIST REALISM. Later, she became disillusioned with Communism and expressed her pessimism about humanity's future in her poems. Her 1996 poem "Tortures," with the line "Nothing has changed" that opens each stanza, connects the cruelties of the 20th century with the entire human experience over the ages: "Tortures are as they were, it's just the earth that's grown smaller."

In 1996, Szymborska won the Nobel Prize in literature "for poetry that with ironic precision allows the historical and biological context to come to light in fragments of human reality" (Nobel Lectures). She is one of the few female poets ever to have received this prize. Szymborska has published 16 collections of poetry. Her poems have been translated into numerous languages and have also been published in multiple anthologies of Polish poetry.

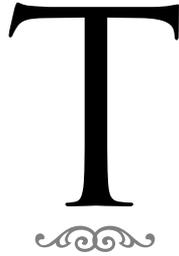

A private person by nature, Szymborska avoided public appearances but served as an inspiration for other female writers. In her acceptance speech for the Nobel Prize, she described her role not only as an artist but as a member of a larger humanity: ". . . inspiration is not the exclusive privilege of poets or artists generally. There is, has been, and will always be a certain group of people whom inspiration visits. It's made up of all those who've consciously chosen their calling and do their job with love and imagination. . . . Whatever inspiration is, it's born from a continuous 'I don't know.'" (Nobel Lecture, 1996)

Other Works by Wislawa Szymborska

Miracle Fair: Selected Poems of Wislawa Szymborska.

Translated by Joanna Trzeciak. New York: Norton, 2001.

Poems New and Collected. Translated by Stanislaw Baranczak and Clare Cavanagh. Orlando, Fla.: Harcourt Brace, 1998.

Tagore, Rabindranath (Rabindranath Thakur) (1861–1941) poet, novelist, dramatist, essayist

Rabindranath Tagore was born in Calcutta, India, into an affluent family that was also very invested in Indian politics. His great-grandfather Dwarakanath Tagore was a businessman; Tagore's father, Debendranath Tagore, however, was more involved in religion than in politics and revived an old religious movement called the Brahmo Samaj. Rabindranath Tagore combined his grandfather's visions for the country with his father's religious asceticism, and his works, therefore, represent a unique synthesis of powerful national politics and spiritual poeticism. Tagore is the author and composer of India's national anthem, as well as the lyrical composer of a song by Bankim CHATTOPADHYAY called "Vande Materam" (Hail Motherland), which was adopted as India's unofficial national anthem during its problems before independence from British rule.

In his memoir My Reminiscences (1911), Tagore calls his memory a "picture-chamber . . . a series of pictures [which] correspond, but are not identical." A pioneer in integrating East–West poetic, political, and even scientific structures, Tagore is one of the key figures in the intellectual movement called the Bengal renaissance. The Bengal renaissance consisted of a group of writers who took advantage of colonial education and Western culture while at the same time contributing to Indian literature for an Indian audience.

This attitude reflected Tagore's own belief that education is interdisciplinary, bringing together science with humanism and politics with spirituality, and it was realized in the foundation of Shantiniketan (Abode of Peace), a school on the outskirts of Calcutta. This place, under the guidance of Tagore, who also taught there, grew into a meeting place for national and international scholars of music, painting, singing, and languages. Today, it thrives as one of West Bengal's prominent educational institutions.

In 1921, Tagore also founded Shriniketan (Abode of Plenty), a school that sought to bring Western scientific progress to India. At the same time, the preservation of nature was very important to Tagore, and this was enhanced by the foundation of Shriniketan, whose objective was to bring agricultural progress to the countryside. Tagore's works reflect his deep concern and respect for nature, and the need to bridge the gap between human and natural existence. In one of his letters he says that "I feel . . . I was one with the rest of the earth, that grass grew green upon me, that the autumn sun fell on me and its rays . . . wafted from every pore of my far-flung evergreen body.” This is one of the most important themes in his poetry.

Tagore translated many of his own works into English. With the aid of W. B. Yeats and Thomas Sturge Moore, he brought out a translation of his religious and spiritual poetry called Gitañjalī (Offering of Songs, 1910). They were a huge success, and their publication caught the attention of renowned figures such as Albert Einstein, Ezra Pound, and André GIDE, with whom Tagore kept up regular correspondences. Their admiration of his work secured Tagore’s position as an international poet. Gitañjalī borrows from India’s ancient and traditional religious poetry. Written from a modern perspective, these poems take a new look at the conventional understanding of the relationships between nature, God, and spirituality. In these poems, the search for human spirituality goes beyond traditional religion.

Tagore’s most famous novel, The Home and the World (1915–16), is about rural politics, though its tone is extremely nonpolitical. As the title suggests, the novel delves into how the domestic and political realms of power overlap. In this story, the woman protagonist defies social norm by coming out of the inner rooms of the house to join the men in their discussion of politics in the living room. She also allows herself to act on the gallant advances made to her by her husband’s friend. The change in friendship between the two men is complicated through the female protagonist’s fluctuating romantic attachment to both men. As the two male friends become increasingly estranged due to politics, it is the woman of the home who reveals the true meaning of faithfulness, loyalty, and commitment. Her honesty and open curiosity humanizes the novel’s ruthless description of rural politics, and her story stresses the importance of domestic issues in the political struggles of the outside world.

By the time of his death, Tagore was idolized as one of India’s leading political figures, a national poet, a painter, and an educational visionary. He experimented with almost all literary genres and left behind a prodigious assortment of novels, short stories, songs, poetry, plays, essays, as well as correspondence with friends, family, and international contemporaries such as W. B. Yeats and Ezra Pound. In 1913, Tagore was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature for his translation of Gitañjalī. In 1919, he refused England’s offer of knighthood in protest against human-rights violations under British rule.

Other Works by Rabindranath Tagore

Nationalism. London: Macmillan Publishers, 1917.

Selected Poems. Translated by William Radice. London: Penguin, 1985.

The Broken Nest. Columbia: University of Missouri Press, 1971.

The Hungry Stones and Other Stories. New York: Macmillan, 1916.

A Work about Rabindranath Tagore

Kipalani, Krishan. Rabindranath Tagore: A Biography. London: Oxford University Press, 1962.

Takamura Kotarō (1883–1956) poet

Takamura Kotarō was born in Tokyo to sculptor Takamura Kōun and his wife, Waka. His father, hoping that his son would follow in his footsteps, sent Takamura to Tokyo Fine Arts School in 1897. Even so, Takamura was already demonstrating an interest in literature and had begun to write and publish haiku and tanka. In 1906, he left to study in the United States, England, and France. When he returned to Japan, he fell in with dissolute artists and writers. In 1914, he married Naganuma Chieko. During the war, he acted as the head of the Japanese Literature Patriotic Association. Takamura took defeat hard and retreated to a country cabin in Iwate Prefecture for seven years, some believe to come to terms with the guilt he expressed over having encouraged young soldiers to battle and thus their deaths.

Takamura’s first poems were written in traditional poetic forms. He began to write free verse, however, when he returned to Japan. His first poem of note, “The Lost Mona Lisa,” published in 1911, was about the disappearance of a prostitute. His first collection of poetry, The Road Ahead, published in 1914, challenged conceptions of poetry by using subjects and diction that were not traditionally considered appropriate. Chieko’s Sky, his second collection, was published in 1941 and consisted of love poems to his wife.

Takamura always considered himself first and foremost a sculptor, but he is more highly regarded as a poet who helped redefine the landscape of modern poetry. His most significant poetry is in free verse. In particular, his love poems to his wife garner the greatest praise for their moving emotional content and for their clear expression.

Other Works by Takamura Kotarō

A Brief History of Imbecility: Poetry and Prose of Takamura Kotarō. Translated by Hiroaki Sato. Honolulu: University Press of Hawaii, 1992.

Chieko and Other Poems of Takamura Kotarō. Translated by Hiroaki Sato. Honolulu: University Press of Hawaii, 1980.

Works about Takamura Kotarō

Keene, Donald. Dawn to the West: Japanese Literature in the Modern Era: Poetry, Drama, Criticism. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1984.

Rabson, Steve. Righteous Cause or Tragic Folly: Changing Views of War in Modern Japanese Poetry. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Center for Japanese Studies, University of Michigan, 1998.

Tanikawa Shuntaro (1931–) poet

Tanikawa Shuntaro was born in Tokyo, Japan, to Tanikawa Tetsuzo, a philosopher, and Tanikawa Taki (Osada), a pianist. Tanikawa began writing poetry in his teens after a high-school friend asked him to contribute to a poetry magazine. When his father asked him what he intended to do instead of entering college, Tanikawa handed him notebooks that he had filled with poems. Recognizing talent, his father gave the poems to Miyoshi Tatsuji, Japan’s leading poet at the time, who helped get them published in the Bungakkai (Literary World) magazine when Tanikawa was still in his teens. Tanikawa’s first book collection, Twenty Billion Light Years of Loneliness (1952), was published when he was 21.

Tanikawa says his early work was influenced by volumes of poetry from his father’s library, but his work breaks with the major traditions of Japanese verse. He does not write haiku, although his strong, startling imagery is similar to the form’s vivid word pictures. In a poem entitled “Colours,” he ends with this surprising image: “Despair is a simple colour / Pure white.” Many of his poems allude to icons of American popular culture, such as jazz musician Miles Davis and actor James Dean. His central theme is the isolation of the individual who stands alone facing an incomprehensible universe. In “The Isolation of Two Million Light Years,” he comments, “The human race, on its little ball, / Sleeps, wakes, and works, / Wishing at times for companionship with Mars.”

Tanikawa is Japan’s most popular poet. He has published more than 60 volumes of poetry; has written scripts for television and film, children’s books, song lyrics, and plays; and has translated Charles Schultz’s comic strip “Peanuts” into Japanese. He has won many Japanese literary awards as well as an American Book Award for the English translation of Floating the River in Melancholy (1988). According to Geoffrey O’Brien of the Village Voice, Tanikawa “receives praise and the kind of lavish editions reserved in America for the long deceased.”

Another Work by Tanikawa Shuntaro

Shuntaro Tanikawa: Selected Poems. Translated by William I. Elliott and Kazuo Kawamura. New York: Persea Books, 2001.

A Work about Tanikawa Shuntaro

Morton, Leith. “An Interview with Shuntaro Tanikawa,” Southerly 58, no. 1 (Autumn 1998): 6–31.

Tanizaki Jun'ichirō (1886–1965) novelist, short-story writer, playwright, essayist

Tanizaki Jun'ichirō was born in Tokyo to Tanizaki Kuragorō and Seki. While he was a boy, his father lost the family fortune, so when Tanizaki, a gifted student, gained entrance to the prestigious Metropolitan Middle School and the First Higher School, his family could not afford tuition. To continue his education, Tanizaki worked as a houseboy for a wealthy family until he had an affair with a maid and was dismissed. In 1908, he entered the Japanese literature department of Tokyo Imperial University but was expelled for failing to pay his fees. In 1915, he married Ishikawa Chiyo, whom he divorced 15 years later. He quickly married reporter Furukawa Tomiko. However, this marriage lasted less than a year because he had begun to court another woman, Nezu Matsuko, whom he eventually married.

While attending university, Tanizaki published his first short story, "The Tattooer" (1910), which won the acclaim of critics. It was not until 1924 that Tanizaki produced his first novel, Naomi, which depicts a man who makes an ill-fated attempt to turn his lover into a Western woman. Five years later, Tanizaki's focus shifted to traditional Japan in his novel Some Prefer Nettles (1929). In 1933 he crafted a chilling masterpiece, "The Story of Shunkin," a short story about a servant who blinds himself to preserve in his mind the image of his mistress, who has become disfigured in an attack.

During the war years, Tanizaki worked on his most lyrical novel, The Makioka Sisters (1948). In the last year of his life, he published Diary of a Mad Old Man, the story of a scheming, aging man who suffers a stroke during a liaison with a woman.

Tanizaki insisted that fiction should be artifice. His stories, while reflecting the issues and trends of the time, were entirely created worlds rather than fictionalized accounts of personal experiences or historical events. His stories typically revolve around male protagonists and their relationships with women. In 1949, Tanizaki received the Imperial Order of Culture.

Other Works by Tanizaki Jun'ichirō

The Key. Translated by Howard Hibbett. New York: Knopf, 1961.

Seven Japanese Tales. Translated by Howard G. Hibbett. New York: Knopf, 1963.

Works about Tanizaki Jun'ichirō

Gessel, Van C. Three Modern Novelists: Sōseki, Tanizaki, Kawabata. Tokyo: Kodansha International, 1993.

Ito, Ken K. Vision of Desire: Tanizaki's Fictional Worlds. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1991.

Tao-Lao, Alfonsina

See STORNI, ALFONSINA.

Thakur, Rabindranath

See TAGORE, RABINDRANATH.

Thammachot, Atsiri

See DHAMMACHOTI, USSIRI.

Theatre of the Absurd

Taking its name from the idea of the absurd as something not grounded in logic or reason, the Theatre of the Absurd is related to aspects of EXISTENTIALISM. The movement itself actually refers to a style of drama that began in Paris and flourished in the late 1940s and 1950s.

The roots of Theatre of the Absurd can be traced back as far as the morality plays of the Middle Ages, the Spanish religious allegories, the nonsensical writings of Lewis Carroll, and the macabre and grotesque drama of Alfred JARRY. It was anticipated by DADAISM and the surrealist movement of the 1920s and 1930s and gathers much of its theoretical accountability from Antonin ARTAUD's text The Theatre and its Double (1938; translated 1958). The term itself comes from the use of the word absurd by existentialist philosophers such as Albert CAMUS and Jean-Paul SARTRE in reference to the lack of a rational explanation for the human condition.

Although Alfred Jarry's Ubu Roi (1888) anticipates much of the foundation on which absurdist drama rests, the three playwrights most closely associated with the movement's popularity are Jean GENET, Eugène IONESCO, and Samuel BECKETT. Their works take on a nightmarish quality as they examine contemporary alienation and human anxiety over the absence of social coherence or transcendental meaning. Many playwrights, such as Beckett, wrote in French though it was not their native language, and communicated a sense of linguistic estrangement.

According to some sources, Beckett was the most influential writer of the period. His Happy Days expresses humanity's fear of death through the character of a woman who, in the first act, is buried up to her waist in a mound of dirt. By the second act, the mound has grown so that only her head remains visible, a metaphoric vision of the ultimate journey from life to death and burial.

Other playwrights of this school wrote of similar anxieties. Ionesco emphasizes the fear of mediocrity and the inability to communicate in The Bald Soprano (1950). Genet's works, on the other hand, fuse illusion with reality in an often violently erotic manner to exemplify the absurd roles that people play in daily existence.

The influence of Theatre of the Absurd, created by a group of international writers living in Paris, extends beyond France to the works of Czechoslovakian playwright Václav HAVEL, British writers Harold Pinter and Tom Stoppard, and U.S. dramatists Edward Albee and Sam Shepard.

A Work about Theater of the Absurd

Esslin, Martin. Theatre of the Absurd. New York: Overlook Press, 1969.

Theodorescu, Ion N.

See ARGHEZI, TUDOR.

Tian Jian (Tien Chien; Tong Tianjian)

(1916–1985) poet

Tong Tianjian was born on May 14 in Anhui province's rural Wuwei County, in China. He moved to Shanghai in 1933 and studied foreign languages at Guanghua University, where he edited the journals New Poetry and Literary Mosaic. He published poems written during his college years in Before Dawn in 1935.

Tian Jian's poetry was known as declamatory poetry because of its political nature and revolutionary ideas. Much of his work was influenced by the Japanese occupation of Nanking and the Sino-Japanese War and had a very nationalistic slant.

Before the Sino-Japanese War, Tian Jian focused on the lives of Chinese peasants, for whom he wrote two volumes of poetry, Pastoral Songs (1936) and Stories of the Chinese Countryside (1936). The latter is a long poem comprised of three parts: "Hunger," "On the Yangtze River," and "Go Ahead." Tian Jian used the river as a metaphor for China and depicted the hardships of peasant life and resistance against the old regime.

In the spring of 1937, Tian Jian traveled to Japan and returned to China after the Sino-Japanese War began later that year. He served as a war correspondent with the Service Corps on the Northwestern Battlefield. He wrote poems influential for their military fervor and rhythms during the war in two volumes, Odes to Soldiers on Patrol in a Sandstorm (1938) and Poems Dedicated to Fighters (1943).

Tian Jian joined the Chinese Communist Party in 1943. He held high-level information posts and participated in land reform. He also continued his literary pursuits. He began a drive for "street verse," edited a new party literary magazine called New Masses, and joined the Chinese Writers Association after its 1949 formation. He then taught at the Central Institute of Literature in Beijing.

During the Korean War, Tian Jian served again as a war correspondent and visited Eastern Europe and Africa in 1954. He produced many volumes of poetry and essays, including A Hero's Battle Song (1959), Travels in Africa (1964), and A Sketch on a Trip to Europe (1956), before the onset of the Cultural Revolution, when he was suppressed.

After the revolution ended, Tian Jian began to write poetry again in 1976. His work celebrated the new life of “liberated” peasants, such as China in her Prime (1986). Tian Jian died August 30 in Beijing.

Toer, Pramoedya Ananta (1925–) novelist

Pramoedya Ananta Toer was born in Blora, a small town on the north coast of Java, Indonesia. His father was a former teacher and an activist of the Blora branch of the PNI (Indonesian National Party). His mother was the daughter of a mosque official and a former student of his father. Toer was the eldest of nine children. He graduated from the Radiovakschool in Surabaya in 1941. To avoid conscription into the Dutch army, Toer fled back to Blora. During the first four months of the Japanese occupation, he looked after his ill mother and his younger siblings. When his mother died, the family moved to Jakarta.

Toer wandered over much of Java after he had been passed over for promotion. He returned to Jakarta after he learned about the declaration of independence by Sukarno, Indonesia’s former president, in August. Following the reorganization of the Indonesian army in late 1946, he became the editor of the journal Sadar, the Indonesian edition of The Voice of Free Indonesia.

Toer was imprisoned for two years for possessing anti-Dutch political documents and was one of the last men to be released in 1949. He was immediately given a position by the government literary bureau, Balai Pustaka, an appointment he temporarily postponed because of his father’s death. Between 1950 and 1951, Toer was an editor for the modern-literature department of Balai Pustaka and for the magazines, Indonesia and Kunang-Kunang (Firefly). He became a member of the Lekra (Institute for People’s Culture), an affiliated organization of the Indonesian Communist Party, and lectured in the Res Publica University in Jakarta. He also edited “Lentera,” the literary column in the daily paper Bintang Timur.

His sympathy for the despised Chinese in Indonesia landed him in trouble with Sukarno’s “Guided Democracy” government. He was arrested in 1969 and sent to Buru Island, where he spent 10 years in exile. He was released in 1979 but was placed under house arrest by the new-order government a few years later. Toer’s works had been banned in Indonesia since 1965, but they were extremely popular outside Indonesia, were printed in at least 28 languages, and won him international fame as a defender of truth and human rights. Finally in 1997, with the toppling of the Suharto regime, Toer was released from house arrest, and the ban on his works was lifted. Toer now travels around the world and gives talks at various universities.

Critical Analysis

Toer’s works are extremely valuable to the study of Indonesian history. In The Girl from the Coast, Toer tells the story of his grandmother, derived from his interactions with her, others’ perceptions of her, and his own imagination. Interwoven into the tale is a complex exploration of class conflict and gender relations at the village level. As in many of Toer’s works, he intersperses his story with references to historical events, such as Kartini’s death, enabling the reader to place episodes within a temporal context. Kartini was a princess of the Javanese royal family who was extremely influential in providing education for all. This story, which was first published in Indonesian in 1987, is the first in an untitled semiautobiography. Unfortunately, the second and third parts have been lost.

Toer’s voice clearly emerges in his works. He writes with an intensity that emanates emotions ranging from anguish and melancholy to soft compassion and harsh indignation. His writings appeal through their sheer reflection of lived experiences that are both real and sadly universal. Toer is able to draw his readers into his world by enabling them to live vicariously through his own experience and tragedy. In The Fugitive (1962), a novel of betrayal and bravery during the Japanese occupation of Indonesia during World War II, the plight of Raden Hardo, the hero of the tale, bears similarity to Toer's own experience during the war. His attachment to Javanese attitudes and cultural beliefs is also revealed. The characters in the story, such as Hardo and Dipo, clearly resemble heroic characters that can be found in the Javanese traditional art form, the wayang, a shadow-puppet theatrical medium of performance.

Toer's storytelling skill is best exemplified in his 1999 work, Tales from Djakarta: Caricatures of Circumstances and Their Human Beings. In this collection of short essays, he is able to paint with great accuracy and biting wit the scenes of daily life in 1950s Jakarta, the capital of Indonesia. Through his writing, the bustling city with its ironic contrast of the luxurious quarters of the rich and the simmering squatters of the poor comes to life. He narrates with sarcastic wit the plight of the common people, some of whom rise above their station and others who miserably fail. Toer's stories do not always end in tragedy; for instance, in "Maman and His World" (1999), Maman, a poor kampung boy is able to build and own his own factory through hard work and perseverance. Maman's kindness and generosity also enable him to enlarge his wealth. Toer's heroes are taken from a variety of backgrounds, but his most poignant ones are those who remain untouched by avarice and other vices.

Toer was first propelled to fame when he completed the novel Kranji-Bekasi Jatuh in 1947. During his imprisonment in the Bukit Duri jail from 1948 to 1949, he wrote the short-story collections Percikan Revolusi and Perburuan. The latter won him first prize from Balai Pustaka. His greatest works are Bumi Manusia, Anak Semua Bangsa, and Jejak Langkah.

Toer's popularity in the literary world bespeaks his power to write convincingly and realistically about the plight of the common person not only in Indonesia but all over the world. His characters are universal, and his use of historical contexts and periods enables readers to better understand Indonesia's past.

Other Works by Pramoedya Ananta Toer

Child of All Nations (Buru Quartet, Volume 2). Translated by Max Lane. New York: Penguin USA, 1996.

Footsteps (Buru Quartet, Volume 3). Translated by Max Lane. New York: Penguin USA, 1996.

House of Glass (Buru Quartet, Volume 4). Translated by Max Lane. New York: Penguin USA, 1997.

The Mute's Soliloquy: A Memoir. Translated by Willem Samuels. New York: Hyperion, 1999.

This Earth of Mankind (Buru Quartet, Volume 1). Translated by Max Lane. New York: Penguin USA, 1996.

Works about Pramoedya Ananta Toer

Hering, Bob, ed. Pramoedya Ananta Toer 70 Tahun: Essays to Honour Pramoedya Ananta Toer's 70th Year. Indonesia: Yayasan Kabar Seberang, 1995.

Koh, Young Hoon. Pemikiran Pramoedya Ananta Toer dalam Novel-novel Mutakhirnya. Kuala Lumpur: Dewan Bahasa dan Pustaka, 1996.

Tolstoy, Leo (Count Lev Nikolayevich Tolstoy) (1828–1910) novelist, short story writer, dramatist

Leo Tolstoy was born in the town of Yasnaya Polyana, Russia, in a landowning family. His mother, Princess Volkonskaya, died when he was two years old, and his father when he was nine. He and his siblings were raised by relatives and educated by private tutors. At 16, Tolstoy entered the University of Kazan, but after dabbling in oriental languages and law, he returned to the family estate in 1847. A restless and high-spirited youth, he soon tired of the country and spent the next several years in St. Petersburg and Moscow, living a profligate life and keeping a diary in which he recorded even the most outrageous of his adventures. In 1852, seeking adventure, he joined his brother in the army. He was cited for bravery in the defense of Sebastopol. He left the army in 1856 and returned to the family estate with the idea, radical for the time, of educating and emancipating his serfs.

Tolstoy's early education included grounding in several European languages and literatures, and he continued to enlarge this knowledge over the next several years with extensive travels. He read widely and was particularly taken with the ideas of the 18th-century French writer Jean Jacques Rousseau. He was also well acquainted with the English novelists Laurence Sterne and Charles Dickens, who helped form his approach to the novel, while Rousseau and the New Testament influenced his later religious and philosophical works.

Tolstoy had begun his literary career with the publication, while he was still in the army, of an autobiographical work, Childhood (1852), and this was followed by Boyhood in 1854 and Youth in 1857. Material for these works came from his prodigious memory, substantially abetted by reference to the detailed diary he had begun in 1847. Though the facts of Tolstoy's early life form the basis of these books, their rearrangement and modification show us the budding writer of fiction learning his craft. Other short stories, based on his army experiences, followed in 1855 and 1856. In 1862, Tolstoy married Sofiya Bers, with whom he would have 13 children. His obsessive honesty led him to give her his diaries to read, and the young bride was, at the least, startled. She later got even by giving Tolstoy her diary to read. But marriage had a settling influence, and in the next 15 years following that, Tolstoy produced his greatest works, War and Peace (1865–69) and Anna Karenina (1875–77).

Tolstoy's approach to his work of this period was to observe carefully even the most minute details of his characters' lives and to record them faithfully, building the story in the same way that real life reveals itself. The great English critic and essayist Matthew Arnold said that if life could write its own story, it would write like Tolstoy. The two novels are not led by preconceived literary ideas of how structure, plot, and narrative are to be delineated; they happen, as life happens.

Critical Analysis

War and Peace is the story of five aristocratic Russian families, their associates, and the effects of Napoleon's wars from 1805 to 1820. The novel also contains essays that reflect Tolstoy's philosophy of history. The central love story involves Natasha Rostova and Pierre Bezukhov. Natasha finds fulfillment in marriage and motherhood, serving as an example of the value of life's simple processes. Meanwhile, Pierre searches for the philosophical system that will explain to him the meaning of life, but he comes, for a while at least, to believe that no such system exists outside of the common routines of existence.

In the essays on history and in the novel's chaotic plots, Tolstoy repudiates the theory that great men make history and that events are shaped by human intention. He views Napoleon and the Russian emperor Aleksandr as pompous men whose bumbings cause great misery. The pretenses of noble society are shown to be hollow as well. The character Prince Andrey Bolkonsky eschews the false values and artificialities of social life, substituting for a while the values of heroism and bravery in battle. He is severely wounded at Austerlitz and, while attempting to recuperate, realizes that these values as well are worthless. Tolstoy's own values are exemplified by the less sophisticated characters. Critics often have noted that Tolstoy describes his characters' thinking and behavior in minute detail, like a painter adding small brushstrokes, until, through sheer accretion, a full portrait appears. As the novel proceeds through its many years, the characters age; Natasha, for instance, grows from a giddy and self-centered girl to a portly and concerned mother.

Anna Karenina, though set in the same aristocratic milieu as War and Peace, is not as panoramic in scope. Based on the true story of a young woman's suicide in Tolstoy's province, it tells of the aristocratic Anna, who conducts an adulterous love affair with the dashing army officer Aleksey Vronsky. For him, she leaves both her husband and her beloved little boy. In contrast to her self-defeating romantic attachment is the true love of Kitty and Konstantin Levin. Kitty is the sister of the unhappy Dolly Oblonsky, whose careless husband Stiva has been unfaithful to her.

Anna is Stiva's sister and in some ways is as careless as he; she wants romance and persuades herself that it is owed her. Society does not accept Anna's self-assertion in the face of convention, and she is ostracized. When she comes eventually to see the flaws in her lover, she has lost the love of her good but dull husband and sees no way out of her guilt-ridden life except suicide. Levin and Kitty meanwhile have bonded with a true love that accepts the daily limitations of being human.

Underlying both these works and the great changes that took place in Tolstoy's life soon after the publication of Anna Karenina are the philosophical musings of Jean Jacques Rousseau, apostle of what has come to be known as ROMANTICISM. Central to this doctrine is the idea of the noble savage, which holds that only those not infected with civilization's postures and deceptions are truly good. Civilization includes high society, secular and sacred institutions, commerce and money, legalisms and rank. Though Tolstoy used his reading of Rousseau to profound effect in his two great novels, when he tried to put these theories into practice, he ran into serious trouble, both artistic and personal. Among other things he was excommunicated from the Russian Orthodox Church, and he seriously alienated most of his family, particularly his wife, by repudiating the great novels and attempting to give away all his worldly goods. His writing suffered from his preoccupations, although his two later novellas, The Death of Ivan Ilyich (1886) and The Kreutzer Sonata (1891), are still widely read. A third long novel, Resurrection, was published in 1899, and at about this time he wrote a play, The Living Corpse.

Tolstoy proceeded into an ascetic and anarchistic old age. Although his philosophical meditations do not have the standing today they once had, his influence was profound, especially on the young Mohandas GANDHI: Passive resistance toward evil was a principle advocated by Tolstoy that Gandhi used with great effect to liberate India from foreign rule. Tolstoy's later convictions and behavior so contradicted his earlier ones that he sought literally to run away from them. Hounded by the demons of his own philosophy, he died while attempting to escape media attention in a provincial railroad station.

Works about Leo Tolstoy

- Berlin, Isaiah. The Hedgehog and the Fox: An Essay on Tolstoy's View of History. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1986.
- Bloom, Harold, ed. Leo Tolstoy: Comprehensive Research and Study Guide. Broomall, Pa.: Chelsea House, 2001.
- Gifford, Henry. Tolstoy. New York: Oxford University Press, 1982.
- Orwin, Donna Tussing, ed. The Cambridge Companion to Tolstoy. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2002.
- Shirer, William. Love and Hatred: The Stormy Marriage of Sonia and Leo Tolstoy. Upland, Pa.: DIANE Publishing Co., 1994.
- Troyat, Henri. Tolstoy. Translated by Nancy Amphoux. New York: Grove Press, 2001.

Tong Tianjian

See TIAN JIAN.

Tornimparti, Alessandra

See GINZBURG, NATALIA.

Torres Bodet, Jaime (1902–1974) novelist, poet

Jaime Torres Bodet was born in Mexico City. He was the son of Alejandro Torres Girbent, a theatrical producer, and Emilia Bodet. Torres Bodet believed it was important for a writer to work a "regular" job and to be involved in the world. He was an educator and would eventually be appointed minister of education for Mexico.

He and his literary group, the Contemporaneos, were seminal in bringing modern European literature to the attention of Mexican intellectuals in the first half of the 20th century. His novel Movie Star (1933) contrasts the world of psychology and imagination with the reality of everyday life in a modern style that brought intellectual vitality to the Mexican novel.

Later in his life, when he was involved in his political career, he dedicated himself almost exclusively to the writing of poetry. In 1965, he published a volume titled Poems by Jaime Torres Bodet, which included his own selection of his 50 most important poems. His poetry demonstrates his ideas about the importance of everyday life as a subject for literature. In it, he writes passionately about simple experiences.

Torres Bodet is remembered for his great expressive force in writing. He received the National Literature Award in 1966, and the Mexican government issued a commemorative stamp in his honor in 1975. Torres Bodet's poetry is considered thoughtful, sensitive, and humanistic.

Another Work by Jaime Torres Bodet

Selected Poems. A bilingual edition with translations by Sonja Karsen. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1964.

A Work about Jaime Torres Bodet

Karsen, Sonja. Jaime Torres Bodet: A Poet in a Changing World. Saratoga Springs, N.Y.: Skidmore College, 1963.

Trakl, Georg (1887–1914) poet

Georg Trakl was born in Salzburg, Austria, into a middle-class Protestant family. Although his early childhood was quite happy, Trakl began to show signs of trouble in his adolescence. In his youth, he was close to his sister Grete, so close that many have speculated about an incestuous relationship. In high school, Trakl frequented brothels, drank, and used opium heavily. After failing his courses in high school, he was forced to repeat a year and eventually dropped out.

He apprenticed to a local pharmacist, many believe, to have an easier access to drugs. By his early adulthood, he showed clear signs of mental illness and emotional disturbance.

Trakl moved to Austria, where he studied to be a pharmacist. In Vienna, he began to write his first serious poems, publishing them in several literary journals. He also met prominent artists of the expressionist movement (see EXPRESSIONISM), including Oskar KOKOSCHKA. Shortly before completing his degree, Trakl lost all financial support as a result of his father's death.

Trakl published only one collection of poetry during his lifetime, Poems (1913). The poems, permeated by dark themes of sorrow and decay, reveal his deep disgust with imperialist society. Two posthumous collections, The Autumn of the Lonely (1920) and Song of the Departed (1933), reveal similar themes, often distorting reality to amplify the disturbed emotional state of the poet. The bleak verses are pierced by nightmarish images of twilight, death, and somber religious symbolism.

At the outbreak of World War I, Trakl was recruited into the Austrian army in the capacity of a pharmacist. He was hospitalized on several occasions for depression, attempted suicide, and was released seemingly without any improvement. Three days after having witnessed several locals hanged from a tree by the Austrian army, Trakl intentionally overdosed on cocaine.

Although Trakl was by no means a prolific poet, he left a significant contribution for the expressionist movement. His poetry is widely read and appreciated in Germany, the United States, and Europe as a whole. Trakl's work has been translated into nine languages.

Other Works by Georg Trakl

Autumn Sonata: Selected Poems of Georg Trakl. Translated by Daniel Simko. London: Asphodel Press, 1998.

Poems and Prose. Translated by Alexander Stillmark. New York: Libris, 2001.

A Work about Georg Trakl

Williams, Eric, ed. The Dark Flutes of Fall: Critical Essays on Georg Trakl. Rochester, N.Y.: Camden House, 1991.

Tsushima Yūko (Tsushima Satoko)

(1947–) short-story writer, novelist

Tsushima Yūko was born in Tokyo to novelist Dazai Osamu and his wife, Michiko. Soon after her birth, her father committed suicide with his lover. Her mother raised her, her older sister, and an older brother, who was mentally handicapped, on her own. When Tsushima was very young, she attended a music school for children. In 1965, she began to study English literature at Shirayuri Women's College in Tokyo, graduated in 1969, and went on for one year of postgraduate study at Meiji University. She married in 1972 but later separated from her husband after having two children.

Tsushima's writing career began while she was still an undergraduate when she won a university prize for her story, "Requiem for a Dog and an Adult" (1969). Her first novel, The House Where Living Things Are Gathering, followed in 1973. She continued to write at a rapid rate, producing short-story collections that appeared almost annually, including A Bed of Grass in 1977. Her second novel, Child of Fortune (1978), is about a 36-year-old music teacher raising a child on her own. The novel Driven by the Light of Night (1986), about the efforts of a woman to retain the memories of her dead son, marked a new direction in Tsushima's writing. She picked up the theme of bereavement and memory again in To the Daylight (1988).

Tsushima's protagonists are generally single mothers who experience an awakening, and her novels typically explore the internal world of female protagonists. Tsushima herself has claimed that her writing stems from a desire to articulate herself, which was repressed during childhood because of her nonverbal relationship with her handicapped brother. She has won many literary prizes, including the Kawabata Yasunari Prize in 1982 and the Yomiuri Newspaper Prize in 1987.

Other Works by Yūko Tsushima

The Shooting Gallery and Other Stories. Translated by Geraldine Harcourt. New York: Pantheon Books, 1988.

Woman Running in the Mountains. Translated by Geraldine Harcourt. New York: Pantheon Books, 1991.

"Water's Edge." In Reexamination of Modern Subjectivity in Japanese Fiction. Saitama-ken Sakado-shi, Japan: Center for Inter-cultural Studies and Education, Josai University, 1994.

Tsvetaeva, Marina (1892–1941) poet

Born in Moscow, Marina Ivanovna Tsvetaeva grew up in an affluent family. Her father was an art-history professor at the University of Moscow, and her mother a talented pianist. Tsvetaeva's family frequently traveled abroad, and she attended schools in Italy, Switzerland, Germany, and France. In school, Tsvetaeva excelled in literature, history, and languages. She published her first collection of poems, "Evening Album" (1910), at the age of 18. The collection explored the themes of childhood and subsequent transition to adulthood. It was noticed and praised by Valery BRYUSOV.

In 1912, Tsvetaeva married Sergei Efron; two daughters were born, in 1912 and 1917. Tsvetaeva opposed the Bolshevik revolution of 1917, and Efron volunteered to serve in the oppositional forces of the White Army. Tsvetaeva remained in Moscow, where she suffered from poverty and hunger. Her daughter Irina died of starvation in 1920. In spite of all, Tsvetaeva wrote intensely, producing six verse dramas and several narrative poems including The Demesne of the Swans, an epic about the Russian civil war, and many lyrics. Eventually, Tsvetaeva and her family emigrated from Russia, spending time in Berlin and Prague and settling in Paris in 1925, the year her son Gyorgy was born.

During these years Tsvetaeva published five collections of poetry, the last—and the last published in her lifetime—being After Russia (1928), a collection that dealt with the themes of national identity and displacement. Tsvetaeva was the only source of income for her family in Paris, and she eventually turned to writing prose because it paid more than poetry. She wrote critical essays, memoirs, and short stories. Tsvetaeva's prose, however, never achieved the level of skill and literary genius found in her verse. Furthermore, Tsvetaeva did not identify herself with the Russian émigré community. After writing a friendly and admiring letter to the Soviet poet MAYAKOVSKY, Tsvetaeva was ostracized from the émigré community and found it virtually impossible to have her work published. Efron had become more sympathetic to the Soviets, as had their daughter Alya, and in 1937 Alya and Efron returned to Russia.

Tsvetaeva was never able spiritually and emotionally to separate from Russia, as her nostalgic and expressive poems "Homesick for Motherland" (1935) and "Motherland" (1936) indicate. Tsvetaeva's last collection of verse, Poems to the Czechs (1938–39), explored the anguish of the Nazi occupation of Czechoslovakia. Tsvetaeva returned to Russia in 1939, with Gyorgy, and soon found herself in the same predicament as she had been during the 1920s. Besides the occasional translation work that was provided to Tsvetaeva by Boris PASTERNAK, she was unable to find employment. Efron and Alya were arrested for espionage during the height of the Stalinist purges. Alone, impoverished, and in deep despair, Tsvetaeva committed suicide in 1941.

Tsvetaeva's use of traditional poetic diction and classical images went against the cultural politics of SOCIALIST REALISM. For Tsvetaeva, poetry was a personal rather than a social experience. Her contribution to Russian literature was not recognized until years after her death. Now, however, she generally ranked with Anna AKHMATOVA, Osip MANDLSTAM, and Boris PASTERNAK as one of the four greatest Russian poets of the 20th century.

Other Works by Marina Tsvetaeva

Earthly Signs. Translated by Jamey Gambrell. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2002.

Milestones. Translated by Robin Kemball. Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern University Press, 2002.

Poem of the End: Selected Narrative and Lyrical Poetry, with Facing Russian Text. Translated by Nina Kossman. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Ardis, 2000.

The Ratcatcher: A Lyrical Satire. Translated by Angela Livingstone. Evanston, Ill.: Northwestern University Press, 2000.

Selected Poems. Translated by Elaine Feinstein. New York: Penguin Books, 1994.

Works about Marina Tsvetaeva

Dinega, Alyssa E. A Russian Psyche: The Poetic Mind of Marina Tsvetaeva. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 2002.

Feiler, Lily B. Marina Tsvetaeva: The Double Beat of Heaven and Hell. Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 1994.

Schweitzer, Viktoria. Tsvetaeva. Translated by Peter Norman. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1993.

Turgenev, Ivan Sergeevich (1818–1883) novelist, dramatist, short-story writer

Ivan Turgenev was born in Orel, Russia, to Sergey and Varvara Turgenev, rich aristocratic landowners. Turgenev's childhood was defined by the domineering personality of his mother. In 1827, the family relocated to Moscow, and Turgenev, who up to that point had been educated by his mother, was now tutored by prominent intellectuals and writers of the period. A brilliant student, he was admitted to Moscow University at the age of 15. The family moved to St. Petersburg in 1834, where Turgenev continued his studies.

While studying in St. Petersburg, Turgenev met a number of important literary figures, among them Aleksandr PUSHKIN and Nikolay GOGOL. In 1838, he moved to Berlin to continue his studies of philosophy and literature. While in Germany, Turgenev developed a warm friendship with Mikhail Bakunin, a famous anarchist and social theoretician. Turgenev returned to Russia in 1841 and began work on short stories about the lives of peasants. He published his first story, "Khor and Kalinich,” in 1847. Many of these stories, depicting daily lives and suffering of common people, appeared together as A Hunter's Sketches in 1852. The collection revealed Turgenev's love of nature as well as his concern for the social conditions of common Russians. In A Hunter's Sketches, he criticized the institution of serfdom, in which the social status of peasants was equivalent to that of slaves. It was widely rumored that reading this story was what inspired Aleksandr II to emancipate the serfs.

In 1856, Turgenev traveled extensively throughout Europe. He had a following in French literary circles and developed friendships with such influential writers as FLAUBERT and ZOLA. After a hostile response to his novel Fathers and Sons (1862), Turgenev left Russia and settled in Paris. By 1870s, Turgenev was recognized as one of the world's leading writers.

The decade 1850–1860 was the most productive in Turgenev's career as a writer. Turgenev always concentrated on social and political issues in his work, as his novels Rudin (1856), A Nest of Gentlefolk (1859), and On the Eve (1860) readily attest. Turgenev often juxtaposes the daily struggles of the peasants with disruption in the social structure of country aristocrats. The parallel placement of spiritual and physical struggles in the narrative often plays an important role in his work. His most famous novel, Fathers and Sons, deals with nihilism and the role of the individual within a family and the social dynamics of the state. The work was widely criticized for its “social irresponsibility” and supposed “misrepresentation” of Russia's youth. Despite this criticism, Turgenev continued to examine social issues in his work. His novels Smoke (1867) and Virgin Soil (1877) deal with the transformation of Russian society and its subsequent effects on the peasantry and country gentry.

Turgenev also wrote a number of plays. A Month in the Country (1855) contained a number of dramatic innovations in style and subject matter. This play became a catalyst for the dramatic works of Anton CHEKHOV. In the comical play A Provincial Lady (1851), Turgenev satirically treats the moral and ethical beliefs of country aristocrats. Both plays demonstrate Turgenev's ability to illuminate a certain social issue without demonizing a certain class or social group. Turgenev's criticism is often intricately interwoven into the fabric of the segment of society represented on stage.

When Turgenev died in 1883, his contribution to world literature was already recognized, and his literary influence extended far beyond the borders of Russia. Henry James, for instance, considered Ivan Turgenev one of the greatest writers of the 19th century. Turgenev's work also inspired social changes in Russia and contributed to the development of liberal political thought.

Another Work by Ivan Turgenev

Three Novellas About Love. Translated by Tatiana Litvinov. Moscow: Raduga, 1990.

A Work about Ivan Turgenev

Knowles, Anthony Vere. Ivan Turgenev. Boston: Twayne Publishers, 1988.

Tuwim, Julian (1894–1953) poet

Julian Tuwim was born in Lodz, Poland. His father's family was strongly Jewish and included several Zionists. His mother was an assimilationist who insisted that Tuwim be educated in a strictly Polish manner. He never attempted to conceal his Jewish identity and upbringing; as a result, during the years preceding World War II, he was subjected to numerous brutal attacks by extreme Polish nationalists.

Tuwim lived in exile in France, South America, and the United States throughout the Nazi era. He was an active antifascist, and part of one of his poems became the anthem of the Polish resistance movement.

Tuwim was also one of the leaders of the Ska-mander group, a group of experimental poets. He became a major figure in Polish literature largely as a result of his collection Slowa we Krwi (Words Bathed in Blood, 1926). The poetry in this volume fervently expresses the sense of emptiness that accompanies the violence of urban life. Although Tuwim clearly sympathized with the poor and underprivileged, he did not become as actively involved in the proletariat revolutionary movement as he had in speaking out against fascism. Instead, his poems voiced the protest of an isolated intellectual. He used his works to illustrate the dangerous effects of capitalism.

In addition to Slowa we Krwi, Tuwim also wrote a collection of poems for children called Locomotive (1938; translated 1940) and published translations of PUSHKIN, for which he won the Pen Club Award in 1935, and of other Russian poets. Many of Tuwim's poems were also set to music and became extremely popular.

Another Work by Julian Tuwim

The Dancing Socrates, and Other Poems. Translated by Adam Gillon. Boston: Twayne Publishers, 1968.

Tzara, Tristan (Samuel Rosenstock)

(1896–1963) poet, essayist

Known primarily as one of the founders of DADA, Tristan Tzara was born in Moinesti, Romania, on April 16. While living in Zurich during World War I, he wrote La Première Aventure céleste de Monsieur Antipyrine (The First Heavenly Adventure of Mr. Antipyrine, 1916) and Twenty-Five Poems (1918). These two works are commonly considered to be the first dadaist texts. He also wrote the movement's manifesto, Seven Dada Manifestos (1924).

Tzara eventually moved to Paris, where he became involved with fellow writers André BRETON, Louis ARAGON, and Philippe Soupault. Together this group shocked readers and critics alike with their nihilistic works, which sought to subvert the conventional structures of language and society.

In the early 1930s, Tzara began to tire of nihilism and turned, instead, to the newly emerging surrealism as a more constructive form of artistic expression. In 1936, he joined the Communist Party and became actively involved in seeking ways to integrate surrealism with Marxist doctrine.

During World War II, Tzara joined the French resistance movement. His political activities brought him into close contact with the realities of oppression and made him brutally aware of human suffering. His later works, such as The Approximate Man (1931), Speaking Alone (1950), and The Inner Face (1953), reflect this new understanding of the human condition.

Tzara continued to be active as both a poet and an essayist until his death in Paris on December 24.

Another Work by Tristan Tzara

Approximate Man and Other Writings. Translated by Mary Ann Caws. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1973.

Works about Tristan Tzara

Lindsay, Jack. Meetings with Poets: Memories of Dylan Thomas, Edith Sitwell, Louis Aragon, Paul Eluard, Tristan Tzara. New York: Ungar, 1969.

Peterson, Elmer. Tristan Tzara: Dada and Surrealist Theorist. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 1971.

U

Ueda Fumi

See ENCHI FUMIKO.

Unamuno y Jugo, Miguel de

(1864–1936) novelist, playwright, poet, essayist

Miguel de Unamuno y Jugo was born in Bilbao, Spain. He grew up and was educated there until he was 16, absorbing the Basque culture and independent spirit of that city. At 16, he went to Madrid to study literature and philosophy at the university.

Unamuno went on to become a professor of Greek and Spanish literature at the University of Salamanca. Because he spoke out publicly against the dictatorship of Primo de Rivera in the 1920s, he was banished and fled to France. He lived just over the Spanish border in the town of Hendaye so that he could continue to express his views against the regime to his fellow Spaniards.

In 1930, he was able to return to Spain. During the Spanish civil war, he sided with Franco, although he eventually spoke out against the dictator. Unamuno was one of the most famous members of the group of Spanish writers known as the GENERATION OF 1898. Like other members of the movement, he sought to present a revitalized model of Spanish nationalist identity by expunging certain decadent cultural habits that had infiltrated Spanish culture. To this end, he was against bullfights and the veneration of the Hapsburg and Bourbon royalty that had ruled Spain for the past few centuries. He called for a return to the Spanish traditions of the Middle Ages before the Spanish Inquisition had homogenized Spanish culture.

He was the most versatile of the Generation of 98, writing novels, poetry, and philosophy with equal skill. In line with his political views, Unamuno's most important essays examine Spanish history and the potential roles the Spanish nation might play in the modern world.

His novels and poetry focus more on the plight of the modern individual. In Mist (1914), a typical novel and one of his most successful, Unamuno traces the life of Augusto Perez, a man who lacks a strong personality and any self-knowledge. Gradually, Unamuno depicts how Perez arrives at self-knowledge through the pain of unsuccessful romances. The mist of the title becomes a metaphor both for Perez's personality and the forces that obscure it.

Unamuno's most famous poem is "Atheist's Prayer," which portrays the irony of praying to a god whom one cannot truly believe exists. It is representative of Unamuno's typical blend of intensely spiritual feeling and skepticism.

Along with José ORTEGA Y GASSET, Unamuno is the member of the Generation of 1898 who has the largest international reputation. He is certainly the most internationally known novelist of his generation. His influence on later Spanish authors who followed his particularly open style of narrative structure and ideas was immense. He demonstrated a mode of philosophical literature that was particularly suited to the themes of existential philosophy and, along with Pío BAROJA Y NESSI, pioneered the modern Spanish novel.

Other Works by Miguel de Unamuno y Jugo

The Agony of Christianity; and, Essays on Faith. Translated by Anthony Kerrigan. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1974.

Our Lord Don Quixote: The Life of Don Quixote and Sancho, with Related Essays. Translated by Anthony Kerrigan. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1976.

A Work about Miguel de Unamuno y Jugo

Ilie, Paul. Unamuno; An Existential View of Self and Society. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 1967.

Undset, Sigrid (1882–1949) novelist, short-story writer, essayist

Born in Kalundborg, Denmark, Sigrid Undset grew up in Christiania (present-day Oslo), Norway. Her father Ingvald Undset was an archaeologist and a historian who encouraged her interest in history and literature. Her mother Anne Charlotte, the daughter of a Danish attorney, had to support the family after Ingvald died in 1893. To help her mother, Undset took a job as a secretary at age 16. She cultivated her literary talent during the 10 years she worked in offices. In 1909, she started to write full-time.

Undset's first novels and short stories drew from her work experience and portrayed women trying to decide between career and family. In the 1920s, she turned to historical novels and published her masterpiece, the Kristin Lavransdatter (1920–22) trilogy. Undset's next set of works on medieval Norwegian history, translated into English as The Master of Hestviken (1928–30), earned her the Nobel Prize in literature. In the 1930s, Undset returned to writing about modern concerns and became one of the first Norwegians to oppose fascism. During World War II, she fled to the United States to escape Nazi occupation.

Undset was a keen observer of contemporary events. Her works about women caught between public and private spheres deal with careers, love, marriage, and infidelity. Undset's historical novels display an impressively detailed knowledge of medieval Norway. Her search for ethics and religion led to her conversion to Catholicism in 1925. Although Undset's religious views offended some, her biographer Mitzi Brunsdale pointed out in Sigrid Undset (1988) that even Undset's critics praised her sincerity: "She assailed not only Norwegian social conditions but the dangerous materialism and sentimental humanitarianism that she felt threatened all Western civilization."

Other Works by Sigrid Undset

Gunnar's Daughter. Translated by Arthur B. Chater. New York: Penguin USA, 1998.

Kristin Lavransdatter: The Cross. Translated by Tina Nunnally. New York: Penguin USA, 2000.

Kristin Lavransdatter: The Wreath. Translated by Tina Nunnally. New York: Penguin USA, 1997.

Kristin Lavransdatter II: The Wife. Translated by Tina Nunnally. New York: Penguin USA, 1999.

A Work about Sigrid Undset

Brunsdale, Mitzi. Sigrid Undset: Chronicler of Norway. New York: Berg Publishers, Ltd., 1988.

Ungaretti, Giuseppe (1888–1970) poet

Giuseppe Ungaretti was born in Alexandria, Egypt. He spent his childhood in North Africa, however, where the nomadic culture influenced many of his future life choices as well as his writing. Educated in Paris, he lived a free-spirited life along with many other members of the emerging literary and artistic avant-garde. Their ideas, particularly those of the French symbolists, would eventually impact the direction of his poetry.

During World War I, Ungaretti served in the Italian infantry. He fought with the 3rd Army on the lower Isonzo front from 1915 to 1918. In the spring of 1918, he was transferred to the Western front where the Italian army fought with much distinction. It was this experience that gave the aspiring poet the background for his mature works, particularly his war poetry, such as Vigil (1915) and Brothers (1916).

Writing in the style of the symbolists, in which the works are reduced to their simplest and most essential elements, Ungaretti's major themes are love and the precarious and temporary nature of the human existence. This is particularly evident in I Am a Creature (1916). He chose each word carefully, stressing the musicality of language and avoiding elaborate structure within his poems. His style was so unique that it prompted an entire poetic movement that became known as hermeticism.

Ungaretti's poetry is collected in English translation in a series titled The Life of Man (1969). As well as writing poetry, he also translated the works of Shakespeare and Racine and held teaching posts in Brazil and Rome.

Another Work by Giuseppe Ungaretti

Selected Poems: Bilingual Edition. Translated by Andrew Frisardi. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 2002.

Valéry, Paul (1871–1945) poet, essayist

A writer who devoted his life and work to worshipping what he referred to as the “idol of intellect,” Paul Valéry was born in the small Mediterranean seaside town of Sète on October 30. The son of a customs clerk, he spent his childhood by the sea. He grew to be fascinated by the rhythmic quality of waves and the intrinsic natural beauty of water. This early childhood aesthetic delight translated itself into a later interest in both architecture and poetry.

As an adult, Valéry left the seacoast to travel to Paris, where he made the acquaintance of a small group of friends who shared his interests and encouraged his artistic endeavors, among whom was fellow writer André GIDE. The two became lifelong friends and influenced each other greatly. Valéry was also influenced by Stéphane MALLARMÉ and the symbolist poets. His earliest works were published in symbolist journals, where they were well received, but Valéry chose initially to place his artistic endeavors secondary to his study of mathematics and the sciences. He did, however, publish a collection of vignettes, such as Mr. Head (1895), depicting human intellect as distinct and segregated from the world as a whole. This theme would manifest itself in much of Valéry’s later work.

A failed romance prompted Valéry to withdraw completely from the arts, maintaining some of his artistic friendships but taking a job in the civil-service branch of the French war office and focusing solely on scientific pursuits. He wrote no poetry during this period. He wrote only his observations on the scientific aspects of language and consciousness and one substantial work on Leonardo da Vinci. He praised Leonardo as being a perfect example of man because of his ability to remain emotionally detached in his mastery of both science and the arts.

In 1912, 20 years after his retreat from poetry, Valéry was encouraged by André Gide to go back and revise some of his earlier works. Five years later, the poems were collected and published to widespread acclaim. Of particular interest both popularly and critically was the publication of his long poem The Youngest Fate (1917). The work details the awakening of human consciousness and intellect symbolically through the youngest fate, which represents the earliest stage of human development. This work solidly emphasizes Valéry’s idol of intellect, which he eventually defined as a state of pure reason existing separately from the emotional demands of society. He also stressed the conflict between the human desire to think and the human will to act.

The works produced in 1917 gained Valéry widespread fame as a poet. He continued to publish poetry throughout the rest of his life, but the majority of his work remained focused on the sciences, as well as cultural and political concerns. His interest in the sciences brought him into direct contact with many influential thinkers, including Einstein and Faraday. He became a prominent personality in Parisian high society where his wit and intelligence provided much entertainment at otherwise dry social functions. The degree to which he knew and understood politics also made him an extremely popular speaker on current events.

In 1925, Valéry was elected to the Académie Française, and the position of professor of poetry at the Collège de France was created specifically for him. He died soon after the liberation of France at the end of World War II. He was given a state funeral, in keeping with his honored place in French society.

Another Work by Paul Valéry

Sea Shells. Translated by Ralph Manheim. Boston: Beacon Press, 1998.

Works about Paul Valéry

Kluback, William. Paul Valéry: A Philosopher for Philosophers: The Sage. New York: Peter Lang, 2000.

Putnam, Walter. Paul Valéry Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1995.

Vallejo, César (1892–1938) poet, novelist

César Abraham Vallejo was the youngest of 11 children born to a family in Santiago de Chuco, a small Andean town north of Peru. His parents, Francisco de Paula Vallejo and María de los Santos Mendoza, were both children of Chimú Indian mothers and Spanish Catholic priests. Vallejo's family was very poor, and financial problems haunted the poet throughout his life.

In 1910, he enrolled in the University of Trujillo, but his studies were repeatedly interrupted due to financial hardship. Vallejo took different jobs, such as teaching and a clerical position in a sugar estate's accounting department, to survive. His job at the sugar estate showed him the poverty and poor working conditions of the workers, an experience that helped refine Vallejo's sense of solidarity with and empathy for those who suffer.

It was in Trujillo that Vallejo first came into contact with writers, and there he wrote his first poems, including the draft of his first book of poetry, The Black Heralds (1918). The poetry in this collection shows both MODERNIST and ROMANTIC tendencies and was well received. He received his master's degree in 1915 in Spanish literature and, in 1917, moved to Lima, where he became acquainted with many important Peruvian writers and intellectuals of the day, including the anarchist Manuel González Prada.

After the crushing loss of his mother in 1920, and having lost a teaching position, he returned home to visit. Disturbances broke out while he was there—an official was assassinated and a store was burned down—and he was accused of being an instigator. Even though there was an overwhelming supportive response in the form of letters by important intellectuals and newspaper editors, Vallejo still served 105 days in jail. This experience, as well as the changes occurring in European literature, affected his next collection of poetry, Trilce (1922), which marked a fundamental change in Hispanic-American literature. By separating himself from the more traditional models he had followed in the past, and by pursuing unexplored experiences of the human condition, Vallejo helped renovate poetic language and form.

Having lost yet another job and fearing being put back in jail, Vallejo moved to Paris in 1923. Although he met such important vanguard figures as Vicente Huidobro, Juan Gris, Pablo Picasso, Jean COCTEAU, and Antonin ARTAUD, Vallejo eventually abandoned his own experimental writings due to his readings in marxism. By 1927, he was engaged in the communist cause and became an intellectual and political activist. In 1930, he was arrested at a train station for producing communist propaganda and was ordered to leave France.

Vallejo went to Madrid where, in 1931, he joined the Spanish Communist Party and wrote his novel Tungsten (1931). He returned to Paris in 1933 via a resident permit that banned him from becoming involved in any type of political activities.

In 1934, he married Georgette Phillipart, with whom he had been living since 1929. In 1936, the fascist uprising in Spain sparked in Vallejo a period of unparalleled creativity. In 1937 he was voted Peruvian representative at the Second International Congress of Writers for the Defense of Culture, which took place in Spain. There he had a chance to see firsthand the horror of the civil war, and out of this experience in the next few months came a tragedy, La piedra cansada (The exhausted rock), and more than 80 poems, including the 15 poems that form Spain, Take This Cup from Me.

In his poem "Black Stone on Top of a White Stone" Vallejo wrote: "I shall die in Paris, in a rainstorm." These words were prophetic. His last words expressed his desire to go to Spain and fight against the fascist forces that were tearing through the country. At the time of his death, much of his work was still unpublished. In 1939, his Spain, Take This Cup from Me and Human Poems were published posthumously. His poetry is characterized by experimentation with language, which often makes it difficult to read; real historical elements; and intense images of human pain and connection. His poem "To My Brother Miguel In Memoriam," for example, poignantly draws a parallel between the brothers' childhood games of hide-and-seek and Miguel's death: "Miguel, you went into hiding . . . but, instead of chuckling, you were sad." Vallejo is remembered as being Peru's greatest poet, as well as one of the seminal voices of 20th-century Hispanic-American poetry, and one of the most original Spanish voices of all time.

Other Works by César Vallejo

Bly, Robert, ed. Neruda and Vallejo: Selected Poems. Translated by John Knoepfle and James Wright. Boston: Beacon Press, 1993.

César Vallejo: The Complete Posthumous Poetry. Translated by Clayton Eshleman and Jose Rubín García. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1992.

The Black Heralds (Discoveries). Translated by Richard Schaaf and Katherine Ross. Pittsburgh, Pa.: Latin American Literary Review Press, 1990.

Trilce. Translated by Rebecca Seiferle. New York: Sheep Meadow Press, 1992.

Tungsten. Translated by Robert Mezey. Syracuse, N.Y.: Syracuse University Press, 1989.

Works about César Vallejo

Niebylski, Dianna C. The Poem on the Edge of the Word: The Limits of Language and the Uses of Silence in the Poetry of Mallarmé, Rilke and Vallejo. New York: Peter Lang, 1993.

Sharman, Adam, ed. The Poetry and Poetics of César Vallejo: The Fourth Angle of the Circle. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 1997.

Vargas Llosa, Mario (1936–) novelist

Mario Vargas Llosa was born in Arequipa, Peru. Shortly after his birth, his father and mother separated, and his mother took him to live in Bolivia. His grandfather was the Peruvian consul there, and Vargas Llosa spent the next eight years in a privileged and happy atmosphere. He read adventure stories and, because he could not stand it when the books came to an end, he invented additional chapters.

When Vargas Llosa was 10 years old, his parents reconciled, and he returned to Peru. As a teenager, he began to write poems. His father, wishing to discourage his son from being a writer, sent him to the Leoncio Prado Military School. This traumatic experience had the opposite effect on Vargas Llosa: Forced to keep his literary interests secret, he became more committed to his writing and developed a strong need to rebel against conventional society.

When Vargas Llosa's first novel The Time of the Hero (1962) was published, it won several literary prizes and was highly praised. It also caused a great controversy at the Leoncio Prado Military School because of his harsh criticism of the military. A thousand copies were burned publicly on orders of the school administration.

The Time of the Hero focuses on sections of society and taboos frequently avoided by Peruvian writers. In the book, Vargas Llosa pays a great deal of attention to his character's fantasies, which become an active part of the plot. One of Vargas Llosa's main interests is how real life and fantasy combine to form a reality which would not exist without both of them.

In 1967 Vargas Llosa met Gabriel GARCÍA MÁRQUEZ in Caracas. The two men, both central figures in the MAGIC REALISM movement, held a series of public discussions on the art of fiction writing. At this time, Vargas Llosa was arriving at his mature conception of the purpose of the novel in society. He saw the novel as a mode for the writer to struggle with and attempt to change human reality. He viewed the novel both as a means to preserve moments of time from one's personal past and to exorcise personal demons.

Vargas Llosa became increasingly concerned with politics during the 1970s and, in 1981, wrote The War of the End of the World, which examines and harshly criticizes the tendency toward political fanaticism so prevalent in Latin-American history. Set in 19th-century Brazil, it blends an actual historical event with fantasy and the psychological exploration of its characters. The overall effect is to make visceral the atrocity of an event that otherwise might have been become a history remembered without emotion. Vargas Llosa's techniques emphasize that history is itself a kind of fiction and our view of it can change the future.

In 1990, Vargas Llosa took his political interests from the world of literary discourse and decided to put them into action. He ran for president of Peru against Alberto Fujimori. Unfortunately, he lost, and Fujimori went on to impose an authoritarian and corrupt government on the people of Peru.

Vargas Llosa continues to write. His novel The Feast of the Goat (2002) examines the reign of Dominican dictator Gen. Rafael Trujillo with Vargas Llosa's characteristic blend of history, fantasy, and political insight. His novel This Way to Paradise was published in 2003.

Other Works by Mario Vargas Llosa

Aunt Julia and the Scriptwriter. Translated by Helen R. Lane. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1982.

A Fish in the Water: A Memoir. Translated by Helen Lane. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1994.

Verga, Giovanni (1840–1922) novelist, dramatist

Giovanni Verga was born in Catania, Sicily. He intended initially to pursue a career in law; he abandoned his studies to concentrate on writing novels. His early works were romantic in tone, but his later and, subsequently, better-received novels beginning with The Malavoglia Family (1881) were written in the emerging Italian realist style known as VERISMO.

Modeled after ÉMILE ZOLA's Rougon-Macquart series, The Malavoglia Family was initially intended to be part of a larger sequence of novels collectively titled The Vanquished, dealing with the life of Sicilian fishermen. Although only one other novel was completed in the saga, Maestro Don Gesualdo (1884), the works firmly established Verga as a leading writer in the verismo school. His attention to detail in his faithful depictions of late 19th-century life in both Sicily and southern Italy gained him much praise.

Although Verga began his career writing novels, he is best known for his dramatic works. His first play was an adaptation of his short story Rustic Chivalry (1884). A tale of lust, love, and murder, the play, set in his native Sicily, gained popularity when it was further adapted as an opera by the composer Mascagni. Cavalleria Rusticana continues to be performed throughout the world.

Verga's second dramatic work, In Porter's Lodge (1885), again treats the themes of love and violence. This time, he moves the setting to the city of Milan, thus exemplifying the universality of his themes. In fact, the major criticism against Verga's dramas has been that he indulges in the violent nature of reality, focusing on murder, lust, adultery, suicide, and other crimes of passion at the expense of the poetry and humor of Sicily. This is equally true in several of his later plays including The She-Wolf (1896) and The Wolf Hunt (1902). However, it is his unsentimental depiction of reality that make his plays successful. Verga's one attempt at social drama, The Fox Hunt (1902), received little attention critically and was a failure in production.

Verga wrote his last play, an adaptation of his novel Dal tuo al Mio, in 1905. The remainder of his life, during which many translations of his works were produced internationally, passed quietly. He died in 1922, well remembered for his contributions to Italian realistic literature.

Other Works by Giovanni Verga

Appelbaum, Stanley, ed. Sicilian Stories/Novelle Siciliane: A Dual-Language Book. New York: Dover, 2002.

Little Novels of Sicily: Stories. Translated by D. H. Lawrence. South Royalton, Vt.: Steerforth Press, 2000.

The House by the Medlar Tree. Translated by Raymond Rosenthal. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1984.

verismo

Similar in form to other REALIST movements of the late 19th and early 20th centuries, the Italian verismo movement developed as a means of objectively presenting life in simple language, with vivid details and natural dialogue. In particular, writers of the movement focused on the social conditions and hardships of the lower classes, bringing to focus much of the tragedy of the dominant human condition.

Two primary novelists of the verismo movement were Luigi Capuana (1839–1915) and Giovanni VERGA. They were influenced by the French realist movement, especially the writings of Honoré de BALZAC, and, closer to home, the short-lived Milanese Bohemian movement SCAPIGLIATURA.

Capuana is actually credited with having begun the movement with his collection of short stories Studies of Women (1877), a work which was extremely psychologically motivated as well as objective in its depictions to the point of almost excluding all traces of human emotion. Verga's works, while also objective in nature, tended to be softer than Capuana's, lending a trace of emotional warmth to an otherwise dismal portrait of 19th-century Sicily and its social conditions.

As the movement grew, other writers also began to adopt some of its traits, generally focusing their works on the places they knew the best, such as their hometowns, and the prevailing social conditions faced by the lower-class residents. Minor writers of the movement who are worthy of note included Matilde Serao (1865–1927) and Grazia Deledda (1871–1936), who was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1926.

Verismo also found expression in opera. In the last decade of the 19th century, violence and melodrama found their way to the stage in the form of operatic works taken directly from everyday life. Here, the influence of the movement is felt most strongly. In particular, Puccini's Tosca (1900) shows strongly the impact of verismo.

A Work about Verismo

Sergio, Pacifici, ed. From Verismo to Experimentalism: Essays on the Modern Italian Novel. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1970.

Verlaine, Paul (1851–1896) poet

A leading poet of the French symbolist movement (see SYMBOLISM), Paul Verlaine was born in Metz. In 1881, he moved to Paris, where he attended school and read Charles BAUDELAIRE's Flowers of Evil, which influenced his decision to become a writer.

Verlaine studied law for two years but abandoned his studies to pursue writing. He befriended several young poets with whom he spent long hours in philosophical discussions. Excessive consumption of absinthe, the favored drink among writers and artists, eventually led to the demise of many of his relationships and to his own ultimate hospitalization.

Verlaine's father refused to support his son's bohemian way of life, but Verlaine managed to forge an existence based primarily on drinking and writing. His first published works, Poèmes saturniens (1866) and Fêtes Galantes (1869), echoed the emerging symbolist style.

In 1870, although he had already begun to display homosexual tendencies, Verlaine married Mathilde Maute de Fleurville. For her, he wrote La Bonne Chanson (1870), in which he expressed his darkest fears and hopes for happiness. The marriage ended when Verlaine began an affair with the younger French poet Arthur RIMBAUD. Verlaine left his wife to return to a bohemian existence with Rimbaud until, after a drunken argument, he shot Rimbaud in the wrist. Verlaine was sentenced to 18 months in prison, during which time he wrote what is arguably his finest collection, Songs Without Words (1874).

In 1873, Verlaine converted to Catholicism. He moved to England to teach French and began work on the collection Wisdom (1881). These poems reflect his new faith in God. He left his teaching post in 1889 and adopted his favorite student.

In 1883, Verlaine's student died of typhus. His mother's death followed in 1886. Again Verlaine sought refuge in alcohol. He continued to write but spent his royalties on prostitutes and constantly reflected on his loss of Rimbaud, whom he claimed to dream about every night.

Verlaine achieved great fame as a poet and was elected France's Prince of Poets in 1894. His way of life ultimately got the better of him, and he died two years later on January 8, in complete poverty.

Another Work by Paul Verlaine

Women and Men: Erotica. Translated by Philip Shirley. New York: Stonehill, 1980.

A Work about Paul Verlaine

Chadwick, Charles. Verlaine. London: Athlone Press, 1973.

Vigny, Alfred de (1797–1863) playwright, poet, novelist

Best known for his Chatterton (1835), one of the most influential plays of the French romantic period (see ROMANTICISM), Alfred de Vigny was born in Loches, Indre-et-Loire, to Leon Pierre de Vigny, a former officer of the king's army. As a student, he wrote several neoclassical tragedies based on the lives of such figures as Anthony and Cleopatra, but he destroyed these works and, at age 16, followed in his father's footsteps by entering the military. He soon became disillusioned with military life, however, finding it less glamorous than it is portrayed in fiction. He spent most of his time in the barracks reading classical texts and writing poetry.

Vigny met Victor HUGO in 1820 and became enamored of the new trend toward romanticism. He published a collection of poetry, Poèmes antiques et modernes (1826), and a historical novel, Cinq-Mars (1826), inspired by the works of Sir Walter Scott.

In 1827, Vigny resigned from military service and went to Paris to write. He wrote of his disappointment with the military experience in Servitude et grandeur militaires (The Military Necessity, 1835). In this work, he condemns the savage nature of war but praises the friendships that develop between soldiers.

Vigny planned to marry Delphine Gay who, 20 years later, became the inspiration for many of his poems, but his mother opposed the idea, and he married instead Lydia Bunbury. In 1827, after an English Shakespearean theater group came through France, he became interested in theater, writing adaptations of Shakespeare's plays. He wrote his first original play, La Maréchale D'Ancre (1831), based on Louis XIII.

His best-known work, Chatterton (1835), was written for his mistress, actress Marie Dorval. It describes the death of a young poet who was incapable of surviving in a brutal, materialistic world. Its success gained Vigny recognition as a literary rival to Hugo, with whom his friendship had declined. Although he remained successful in his literary career, the end of his life was difficult. His marriage and his affair both turned sour, and he was rejected by the French Academy five times before being accepted in 1845. He published only a few poems in later years, dying in Paris on September 17.

Other Works by Alfred de Vigny

Alfred de Vigny's "Chatterton". Translated by Philip A. Fulvi. New York: Griffon House, 1990.

Stello: A Session with Doctor Noir. Translated by Irving Massey. Montreal: McGill University Press, 1963.

Works about Alfred de Vigny

Dolittle, James. Alfred de Vigny. Boston: Twayne, 1967.

Shwimer, Elaine K. The Novels of Alfred de Vigny: A Study of Their Form and Composition. New York: Garland Press, 1991.

Villiers de L'Isle-Adam, Auguste (Mathias de Villiers) (1838–1889)

novelist, playwright

A believer in God as well as in the mysteries of the occult, Villiers was a visionary who anticipated SYMBOLISM, promoted idealism, lived his beliefs in spite of the harsh reality of the world around him, and remained proud of his heritage. Born in Brittany on November 28, he came from a family whose ancestors had defended and rebuilt France, fought in the Crusades, and exemplified what Villiers believed to be the true ideals of virtue. The temporary nature of physical existence, the importance and reality of the spirit world and its forbidden mysteries, as well as the beauty and nobility of intellect all find their way into his writing.

Villiers's works, influenced by the gothic elements of ROMANTICISM, are also commonly associated with the then-emerging symbolist movement. Although extremely prolific, he is most noted for the play Axel (1890), the short-story collection Sardonic Tales (1883; translated 1927), and the novel L'Eve Future (1886). In these works, Villiers turns to magic and the supernatural in a search for idealism that is lacking in the material world.

Loved and admired by fellow writers Paul VERLAINE and Maurice MAETERLINCK, Villiers was unknown to most of the world and scorned by many who did know him and believed him to be a madman. His early works, of which there were many, such as the spiritual romance Isis (1862) and the macabre Claire Lenoir (1867), went unnoticed by the public and the critics. L'Eve Future (1886), his parody of science and technology, finally gained him some measure of recognition in 1886.

Villiers died on August 19 while working on the final revisions to the posthumously published Axel. The recognition that had been denied him in life, as is often true for those individuals whose work is visionary, found him in death, and he paved the way for much of the emerging symbolist work that followed.

A Work about August Villiers de L'Isle-Adam

Conroy, William Thomas. Villiers de l'Isle-Adam. Boston: Twayne, 1978.

Voinovich, Vladimir (1932–) novelist

Vladimir Vladimirovich Voinovich was born in the city of Dushanbe, the capital of Tajikistan, in the Soviet Union. His father was a journalist, and his mother a mathematics teacher. Although his father wrote poetry and prose, virtually none of it was published. From an early age, Voinovich loved books and he later remarked about his childhood, "Our principal wealth was our books. . . ." Voinovich grew up during World War II and began to work at age 11. As he admits, he had little formal schooling and was principally educated by his father. He worked at various jobs, such as carpenter and metal worker, before starting to write.

Working with various composers, Voinovich began his writing career in 1960 by writing about 50 songs; he also wrote poetry and was published nearly at once. In 1961, his first short story, "We Live Here," was published in Novy Mir, a prestigious literary journal. Early in his career, the poignant realism of Voinovich's prose alarmed the Soviet government, which resulted in Voinovich being openly badgered in newspapers throughout the country. Voinovich emigrated from Russia in 1980. He was stripped of his Soviet citizenship in 1981 by decree of Leonid Brezhnev, the leader of the Soviet Union.

No longer restricted by censors, Voinovich was prolific and productive while he lived in Germany and the United States. His best-known novel, The Life and Extraordinary Adventures of Private Ivan Chonkin, was published in Paris in 1975. Combining political criticism and humor, the novel satirizes the absurdity of the Soviet regime. Voinovich experimented with various genres of fiction, ranging from striking realism to dystopian science-fiction visions of a communist future. Moscoe 2042 (1986) exaggerated and reflected the reality of the crumbling Soviet regime. In this novel, the narrator time-travels into 21st-century Moscow and discovers a culturally and socially degenerate society that supposedly achieved the theoretical goals of communism.

After the fall of the communist regime, the government returned Russian citizenship to Voinovich. He currently lives in Moscow and in Munich, Germany. Voinovich is a member of the prestigious Bavarian Academy of Arts and the Mark Twain society. His prose has been translated into 10 languages.

Another Work by Vladimir Voinovich

Fur Hat. Translated by Susan Brownberger. New York: Harvest Books, 1991.

Walcott, Derek (Alton) (1930–) poet, playwright, producer, teacher, journalist, painter

Derek Alton Walcott was born in Castries, St. Lucia, an ex-British colony. His grandmothers were slave descendants, and his grandfathers were English and Dutch. Both Walcott's father, Warwick, a Bohemian poet and artist, and his mother, Alix, who ran Castries' Methodist school and recited Shakespeare in the house, influenced the pursuits of Derek and his twin brother, Roderick, who later became a distinguished playwright. Walcott's mentor Harold (Harry) Simmons, a painter, folklorist, and family friend, gave the young man painting and drawing lessons, as well as access to his library of poetry and art books and his collection of classical records. By the age of eight, Walcott decided he wanted to become a poet.

Educated at St. Mary's College, a high school for boys in Castries, Walcott published his first poem at age 14 in The Voice of St. Lucia. As an 18 year old, he published his first volume of poetry, 25 Poems (1948), followed by his long poem Epitaph for the Young (1949). 25 Poems attracted the attention and encouragement of Frank COLLYMORE. Looking back at his earlier verse writing in "What the Twilight Says," a 1970 autobiographical essay, Walcott wrote that he strove to "legitimately [prolong] the mighty line of Marlowe and Milton."

In 1950, the British awarded Walcott a Colonial Development and Welfare Scholarship to the University College of the West Indies in Jamaica. While there, Walcott published a small collection of poetry, entitled Poems. He stayed at the University College of the West Indies to do graduate work in education after earning a B.A. in English, French, and Latin. Before leaving, Walcott designed and directed the student drama society's presentation of Henri Christophe (1950), Walcott's first and best-known play, previously produced in 1950 by the St. Lucia Arts Guild, which Walcott founded.

From 1953 to 1957, Walcott worked as a teacher at the Grenada Boys' School, St. Mary's College, and Jamaica College, and in 1956, he started working in journalism as a feature writer for Public Opinion, a Jamaican weekly in Kingston. Later, he became a feature writer and drama critic for the Trinidad Guardian. Sponsored by a Rockefeller Foundation theater fellowship, he went to New York in 1958 and studied directing and set design. Dissatisfied, he settled in Trinidad one year later. In 1960, he founded the Little Carib Theatre Workshop (which later became the Trinidad Theatre Workshop). There he trained actors and produced a number of his earlier plays, many on the myths and rituals of West Indian folk life.

Walcott's plays examine Caribbean identity and life by employing verse and prose, elements of pantomime, realism, fable, and fantasy. In "What the Twilight Says," Walcott wrote that he wanted to use "a language that went beyond mimicry," "which begins to create an oral culture, of chants, jokes, folk-songs, and fables." Of his many plays, Walcott's Dream on Monkey Mountain (1967) is among his most impressive. It won an Obie Award as the best foreign play of 1971 after being staged in New York. Three other plays—The Last Carnival, which looks at the recent decades of Trinidad's history; A Branch of the Blue Nile, about a conflict in the central character's mind between drama and the church, with characters partly based on the actors Walcott worked with at the Trinidad Theatre Workshop); and Beef, No Chicken, a comedy about the absurdities of postcolonial politics in the Caribbean—appear in Three Plays (1986).

In addition to playwriting, Walcott has worked with Galt MacDermott, known for the musical Hair, and has written musicals: The Joker of Seville (first performed in 1974; an adaptation of Tirso de Molina's El Burlador de Sevilla from Roy Campbell's English translation); and O Babylon! (first performed in 1976; a portrayal of Rastafarians in Jamaica that examines capitalism).

Drawing on various literary and dramatic traditions—classical and contemporary, African, Asiatic, and European—Walcott writes in standard English and West Indian dialect. His work uses imagery and traditional literary techniques to explore themes of exile, injustice, oppression, and identity formation while reconstructing history. In a Green Night (1962), his first widely distributed and commercially published volume of poetry, fuses traditional verse with examinations of Caribbean experiences. In a review cited in the Academy of American Poets Poetry Archive, Robert Graves asserted, "Derek Walcott handles English with a closer understanding of its inner magic than most (if not any) of his English-born contemporaries."

Since the 1970s, Walcott has periodically lived and worked in the United States, serving as a visiting lecturer at several universities, including Columbia, Rutgers, Yale, Princeton, Harvard, and Boston University.

Meanwhile, Walcott has continued to write prolifically. Between 1970 and 1974, he published essays on literary culture, including "What the Twilight Says: An Overture" (1970), "Meanings" (1970), and "The Muse of History" (1974). His publications consistently garner critical acclaim. They include Sea Grapes (1976) and The Star Apple Kingdom (1979), collections in which he turned from the lush celebrations of the Caribbean landscape that characterized his earlier poems to examine the cultural tensions of island life, and Midsummer (1984), which focuses on the poet's own situation, living in America and isolated from his Caribbean homeland. In his most ambitious work, the epic poem Omeros (1990), Walcott uses terza rima, a rhyme scheme of interlocking tercets most famously used by Dante in The Divine Comedy, and Creole idioms to retell the Homeric legends in a modern Caribbean setting.

In 1992, two years after Omeros's publication, Walcott received the Nobel Prize in literature. Rex Nettleford, a former classmate of Walcott's at the University of West Indies, vice-chancellor of the University of West Indies, and artistic director of Jamaica National Dance Theatre Company, said, in "1992, he's the West Indian writer most deserving of recognition. His work signifies the cultural integrity emerging from tremendous cross-fertilization in Caribbean life and history. It reminds us that we have no common mint of origin, only a common mint of relations." D. S. Izevbaye comments that his "skill in creating new meanings out of old, that is, the creation of a new language based on his commitment to standard English and a mythohistoric interpretation of West Indian identity, is a central part of Walcott's achievement."

Other Works by Derek Walcott

The Bounty. New York: Farrar, Straus, & Giroux, 1997.

Tiepolo's Hound. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 2000.

What the Twilight Says: Essays. New York: Farrar, Straus, & Giroux, 1999.

Works about Derek Walcott

Breslin, Paul. Nobody's Nation: Reading Derek Walcott. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2001.

Burnett, Paula. Derek Walcott: Politics and Poetics. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 2000.

Izevbaye, D. S. "The Exile and The Prodigal: Derek Walcott as West Indian Poet." Caribbean Quarterly 26 (March–June 1980).

King, Bruce. Derek Walcott, a Caribbean Life. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000.

Walker, Kath

See NOONUCCAL, OODGEROO.

White, Patrick (1912–1990) poet, novelist

Patrick Victor Martindale White was born in Knightsbridge, London, to Victor Martindale and Ruth Withycombe. He came to Australia as an infant and grew up in Kings Cross, Sydney. In 1925, he went to England to attend Cheltenham College and returned to Australia in 1929. White's interest in writing came early as a child, and he also wanted to be an actor. His mother encouraged him to write while in primary school, and when he was nine, he was published in the children's page of a newspaper.

White's collection of poems, The Ploughman (1935), gained prominence, and other of his poems were published in the London Mercury. He rewrote his novel The Immigrants, which was published as Happy Valley in 1939, for which he won the Australian Literature Society's gold medal. In 1939, he came to the United States and published The Living and the Dead (1941).

White's main themes are alienation, the Australian landscape, the cultures of Europe and Australia, and the Aborigines. His central theme is the search for meaning and value in life. He was influenced by the French poet Charles BAUDELAIRE and came to be known as a symbolist (see SYMBOLISM) writer. He uses symbolism to convey a sense of the splendor of Australia, which to many people seemed dull. White's narrative techniques include autobiographical elements, dramatization, symbolism, merging of his self with his characters, and flashbacks. For White, plot was not as important as character development.

White was also known to be a transcendentalist because of his portrayal of an Australia above the ordinary. He wrote the novel The Tree of Man (1955) with the goal of finding a secret core or purpose of Australia. In the novel, Stan and Amy long for a new beginning for their country, beyond ordinary politics. In The Aunt's Story (1948), White writes about the national homelessness of Theodora, who is placed between the two cultures of Britain and Australia. He also expresses his doubts about Europe because of nuclear armament and the Holocaust. Ellen in A Fringe of Leaves (1976) feels ill at ease in Europe. The Australian landscape is a major presence in this novel. As he writes of his own reaction to Europe in his autobiography, Flaws in the Glass (1981), "It was landscape that made me long to return to Australia."

In Voss (1957), we see a primitive picture of the Aborigines. Voss, the main character, communicates with the Aborigines in a language of nature, as if they were not human. In A Fringe of Leaves, we also read of Eliza Fraser, who is stranded on an island and is living with the Aborigines. She becomes one with them, and her cannibalism is a metaphor for European destruction of Aboriginal culture.

Patrick White won the Nobel Prize in literature in 1973, the only Australian to have this honor. In 1965, he won the Australian Literature Society's gold medal for Riders in the Chariot (1961). He received the Australia Day Councils' Australian of the Year Award for 1974. He is considered to be one of the most intellectual, original, and preeminent Australian novelists. White died in Sydney after a long illness.

Other Works by Patrick White

Selected Writings. Edited by Alan Lawson. St. Lucia: University of Queensland Press, 1994.

The Twyborn Affair. New York: Penguin, 1980.

Works about Patrick White

Marr, David. Patrick White: A Life. New York: Knopf, 1991.

Wolfe, Peter, ed. Critical Essays on Patrick White. Boston: G. K. Hall, 1990.

Wicomb, Zoë (1948–) short-story writer, novelist

Born near Cape Town, Wicomb was educated at universities in South Africa and in Great Britain. Although everyone in the rural town in which she was raised spoke Afrikaans, the dialect spoken by the Afrikaner descendants of South Africa's Dutch settlers, she taught herself to speak English by "copying the radio." She wanted to be a writer of English stories and, encouraged especially by her father, Robert, she wrote "horrible little poems." The dismantling of apartheid and the first truly free elections in South Africa's history (in 1992) have meant that the country's writers must look beyond apartheid for subjects. Wicomb is one of a wave of "new" South African authors whose work does not revolve around colonialism, in general, or apartheid issues, in particular. She writes feelingly and lyrically about personal identity and the connectedness, or lack of it, between and among people of color.

Wicomb has written two books. The first, You Can't Get Lost in Cape Town (1987), is a series of related short stories set in and around the strikingly beautiful Cape Province. The central character of this "novel in parts" is an educated, young, mixed-race ("coloured") woman. In the closing story in the collection, "A Trip to the Gifberg," Wicomb's first-person narrator details the occasionally difficult interaction with her Griqua (tribal African) mother as they journey to a mountain that her mother had always meant to visit. The older woman, uneducated and accustomed only to the old ways, had often looked up at the "unattainable blue of the mountain" from a seat on her porch. The personal relationship, especially when her mother is "genuinely surprised that our wishes do not coincide," speaks to the political and public lack of any real connection between even those whose "color" had previously defined them as a coherent group.

In both this work and in her second novel, David's Story (2001), Wicomb explores the various landscapes, physical and emotional, of her characters' existence as neither black nor white in the "new," postapartheid Africa. Like many other writers of contemporary South Africa, the overthrow of the racially based segregation policies of the apartheid-era government has compelled and allowed Wicomb to deal with increasingly difficult issues of personal identity. For example, the protagonist of David's Story has to come to grips with his self-identification as a political activist when his opponent, apartheid, has been defeated. David confronts the power of an unpleasant past in a present where all is supposed to be "better."

As of July 2002, Wicomb was a finalist for a new and prestigious fiction award sponsored by the South Africa Times. She is one of a group of South African writers who speaks to issues beyond the sociological and the political, and her growing status among critics and writers outside of South Africa attests to her power and reach.

Another Work by Zoë Wicomb

"Shame and Identity: The Case of the Coloured in South Africa" (pp. 91–107). Writing South Africa: Literature, Apartheid, and Democracy, 1970–1995. Edited by Derek Attridge and Rosemary Jolly. Cambridge, England: Cambridge University Press, 1998.

Wiesel, Elie (1928–) novelist, nonfiction writer

Elie Wiesel was born in Sighet, Transylvania. When he was 15, his family was sent to Auschwitz, a Nazi death camp. His mother and younger sister died there, but his two older sisters survived, and Wiesel and his father were transferred to Buchenwald, where his father perished shortly before the liberation of the camps in 1945.

When World War II was over, Wiesel lived in a French orphanage until 1948 when he began to study journalism at the Sorbonne in Paris. The French writer and Nobel laureate François Mauriac persuaded Wiesel to break his silence and write about his time in the concentration camps. The resulting memoir, Night (1958), established Wiesel as a writer. A passage from the book recalls his shattered childhood: "Never shall I forget the little faces of the children, whose bodies I saw turned into wreaths of smoke beneath a silent blue sky. Never shall I forget those flames which consumed my faith forever."

Wiesel has written more than 40 works on the Holocaust and humanity's responsibility to fight racism and genocide. These works include several novels and two additional volumes of memoirs.

Wiesel became an American citizen in 1963 and, in 1978, was appointed chairman of the President's Commission on the Holocaust. He has since founded the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, received more than 100 honorary degrees, and defended causes ranging from those of the Soviet Jews to Cambodian refugees, famine and apartheid victims in Africa, and victims of war in Yugoslavia. He has received numerous awards for his literary and human-rights activities, including the Nobel Peace Prize in 1986.

Other Works by Elie Wiesel

And the Sea Is Never Full: Memoirs. Translated by Marion Wiesel. New York: Knopf, 1999.

The Fifth Son. Translated by Marion Wiesel. New York: Schocken Books, 1998.

The Testament. Translated by Marion Wiesel. New York: Schocken Books, 1981.

A Work about Elie Wiesel

Kolbert, Jack. The Worlds of Elie Wiesel: An Overview of his Career and Major Themes. Selinsgrove, Pa.: Susquehanna University Press, 2001.

Williams, Ella Gwendolyn Rees

See RHYS, JEAN.

Wittig, Monique (1935–2003) poet, novelist, essayist

A prominent name in feminist and lesbian literature, Monique Wittig was born in France. She earned a degree in languages from the University of Paris and published her first novel, L'opopomax (1964) shortly thereafter. In the late 1960s, she became increasingly outspoken about women's rights, helping to organize the separatist group Féministes Révolutionnaires, for which she became the spokeswoman in 1970. She also took part in numerous organized protests and published a second novel, Les Guérillères (1970).

In 1973, Wittig became increasingly unable to reconcile her own goals as a writer with the idea of separatism. Although she understood its importance for some women, she also felt that oppression, whether based on gender differences or sexual orientation, exists primarily as a result of the preconceived concept that heterosexuality is inherently at the foundation of society. The way to negate discrimination, therefore, is to negate this belief, an idea that became major theme in Wittig's writing.

In 1976, Wittig moved to the United States and began working on the journal Questions Féministes with Simone de BEAUVOIR. She received her Ph.D. in 1986 and took a position on the faculty at the University of Arizona at Tucson in 1990.

Wittig's works, including the well-known pieces One Is Not a Woman Born (1981) and The Lesbian Body (1973), speak of gender equality and rights for women. She believed in expressing her views in her works as a means of abolishing gender distinctions in society.

Other Works by Monique Wittig

Lesbian People: Material for a Dictionary. New York: Avon Books, 1979.

The Straight Mind and Other Essays. Boston: Beacon Press, 1992.

A Work about Monique Wittig

Gray, Nancy. Language Unbound: On Experimental Writing by Women. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1992.

Wolf, Christa (Christa Ihenfeld)

(1929–) novelist, short-story writer, essayist
Christa Wolf was born in Landsberg an der Warthe, Germany (today Gorzów Wielkopolski, Poland). During World War II, her father Otto Ihenfeld, a salesman, was forced to move the family to Mecklenburg. After completing grammar school in 1949, Wolf studied literature at the Universities of Leipzig and Jena. She joined East Germany's Socialist Unity Party (SED) and worked as a journal editor and reader for publishing houses. In 1951, she married essayist Gerhard Wolf.

In the 1950s, Wolf began to write essays and coedited two anthologies on East German literature with her husband. Her first major literary success Der Geteilte Himmel (The Divided Heaven, 1963) dealt with the issue of divided Germany and made her the best-known writer in East Germany. Wolf followed the SED's call for writers to work in factories and incorporate working themes into their books. However, she later wrote novels that were critical of East Germany. In 1976, Wolf lost her membership in the East German Writers' Union for protesting the revocation of singer Wolf Biermann's citizenship. Wolf continued writing and, in 1980, won the prestigious Büchner Prize. She frequently addressed political topics in her numerous essays and, in 1989, joined writer Volker BRAUN in opposing German reunification.

Wolf's important influences include Anna Seghers and Ingeborg BACHMANN. She writes with frankness and believes that literature should help the reader grow personally. Wolf combines elements of pessimism with resourceful approaches to feminism and individualism. She addresses contemporary concerns but does not allow East Germans to escape dealing with their Nazi past. In 1997, scholar Marit Resch wrote in Understanding Christa Wolf (1997) that "one of Wolf's most important messages to all German citizens today is that it is imperative to discuss and honestly examine the totality of GDR [East German] history, not just politically expedient excerpts of it."

Other Works by Christa Wolf

Accident: A Day's News. Translated by Heike Schwarzbauer and Rick Takvorian. London: Virago, 1989.

Cassandra: A Novel and Four Essays. Translated by Jan van der Heurck. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1984.

A Work about Christa Wolf

Resch, Margit. Understanding Christa Wolf: Returning Home to a Foreign Land. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1997.

Wolff, Kurt

See BENN, GOTTFRIED.

Woruk, Kona

See HARRIS, WILSON.

Wright, Judith (1915–2000) poet

Judith Wright was born to Philip Arundel Wright and Ethel Wright in Thalgarrah Station in Australia. Wright's mother died in 1927, and a governess educated Wright. From 1929 to 1933, she attended the New England Girls' School in Armidale. She started writing poems when she was very young, and her first poems appeared in 1933. In 1934, she attended the University of Sydney.

Many of Wright's poems appeared in leading journals including the Sydney Morning Herald, Bulletin, and Meanjin Papers. Significant themes of her poetry include relationships with nature, Australian culture, Aboriginal culture, human rights, and reverence for life. The Moving Image (1946), her first collection of poems written during World War II, considers death and evil.

Wright writes in lyric form, as in Woman to Man (1949), which compares poetic imagination to the love between a man and woman: "Then all worlds I made in me: / all the world you hear and see." The Two Fires contains poems on the threat to humanity by humanity itself by means of nuclear weapons. There is also an emphasis on the exploration of language and the importance of myth. Her poetry is influenced by T. S. Eliot, Wallace Stevens, and W. B. Yeats, as can be seen in the wasteland images and prosaic language of Phantom Dwelling (1985).

Wright is renowned as poet, short-story writer, environmentalist, and children's writer. Going-on Talking: Tales of a Great Aunt (1998), her last book, was for children. She has received several honors: In 1949 she won the Grace Leven Prize for Poetry; she was elected to the Australian Literature Council; she won the Robert Frost Memorial award in 1976; she won the World Prize for Poetry in 1984; and, her greatest honor, she received the Queen's gold medal for poetry. Wright has published more than 56 volumes of poetry and short stories. She is acclaimed as one of Australia's greatest writers.

Another Work by Judith Wright

Collected Poems, 1942–1985. Sydney: Angus & Robertson, 1994.

Works about Judith Wright

Strauss, J. Judith Wright. Melbourne: Oxford University Press, 1995.

Walker, S. P. Flame and Shadow: A Study of Judith Wright's Poetry. St. Lucia, B.W.I.: University of Queensland Press, 1991.

Xie Wanying
See BING XIN.

Yacine, Kateb (1929–1989) novelist, poet, playwright

Kateb Yacine was born in Condé-Smendou, near Constantine, Algeria. Kateb means “writer” in Arabic, which designates Yacine’s family as highly literate. Yacine was raised on both tales of Arab achievements and Algerian legends. These childhood memories had an important influence on his writings. Yacine’s father sent him to a French high school rather than a Qur’anic school when he was a young boy. In 1945, he participated in a nationalist demonstration in Sétif, which led to his expulsion from the Collège de Sétif. He was sent to prison without trial for a few months. During this time, he discovered his love for poetry and revolution. In 1950, he moved to France after paying several short visits to the country. His involvement in the Algerian revolution forced him to leave France in 1955, shortly after he had been offered a job at a publishing company. Yacine lived in many countries including Germany, the Soviet Union, Tunisia, and Vietnam, before returning finally to Algeria in 1970. He formed a theatrical company after his return and began to write plays. Yacine died in Grenoble, France.

At age 17, Kateb published his first book, Soliloques (1946), a collection of poems, and in 1948, he published the long poem “Nedjma ou le poème ou le couteau,” in which the character of Nedjma (the name means “star”), a mysterious woman, first appears. Kateb used the figure of Nedjma in many later poems and plays.

Revolution constitutes an important theme in Yacine’s works. His visits to different countries greatly enhanced his determination to spearhead the Algerian nationalist struggle for independence. In the love story, Nedjma (1956), which recounts a tale of intraclan struggle set against the background of French colonial Algeria, the main protagonist Nedjma is loved by four revolutionaries. Nedjma, the name of the cousin with whom Yacine fell in love, is a mysterious character, obviously influenced by early childhood fantasies that were resurrected from his memories of Algerian legends.

Yacine’s writings explore other important themes as well, such as change and the resilience of Algerian traditional values. Yacine’s heroes are often Marxist revolutionaries, including historical characters in other cultures and societies, such as Ho Chi Minh and Mao Zedong. Ho Chi Minh is featured in Yacine’s play, L’Homme aux sandales de caoutchouc (The Man in the Rubber Sandals) (1970).

Until his death, Yacine believed it was the responsibility of the writer to educate the public that the constant struggle between the proletariat (the working class) and the bourgeoisie (the upper and middle classes) was unceasing. Yacine wrote all his works in French.

A Work about Kateb Yacine

Salhi, Gamal. The Politics and Aesthetics of Kateb Yacine: From Francophone Literature to Popular Theatre in Algeria and Outside. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 1999.

Yamada Eimi (Yamada Futaba)

(1959–) novelist, short-story writer, cartoonist

Yamada Eimi was born in Tokyo. As a high school student, she became a devoted reader and chose Japanese literature as her area of study when she attended Meiji University in 1978. However, she never graduated, having already begun writing in her junior year manga (narrative comics) for high-school girls. Yamada soon tired of producing manga and decided to take up fiction writing. She adopted a sensational lifestyle as a bar hostess, a nude model, and a “queen” of a sado-masochists’ club. She began to write seriously when her relationship soured with an African-American soldier based in Japan.

Her first work, the autobiographical novella Bedtime Eyes, published in 1985, was about a relationship between a Japanese woman and an African-American soldier based in Japan. A year later, Yamada produced eight stories, including “Jessie’s Spine,” about a Japanese woman’s difficult relationship with her African-American lover’s son. Increasing her rate of production even more, she published another eight short stories and three novels in 1987. One of the novels, A Foot-bound Butterfly, is a story about the experiences of a young girl as she navigates adolescent pressures.

Yamada is a prolific writer whose stories revel in the exotic. Her characters are generally young women living on the edge and often involved in relationships with African Americans. She incorporates an unusually large amount of slang English into her stories to evoke vivid imagery. As such, Yamada’s stories represent a new voice in Japanese literature. She has won the Bungei Award and the Naoki Prize and been nominated for the Akutagawa Prize.

Other Works by Yamada Eimi

“Kneel Down and Lick My Feet.” Translated by Terry Gallaher. In Alfred Birnbaum and Elmer Luke, eds., Monkey Brain Sushi: New Tastes in Japanese Fiction. New York: Kodansha International, 1993.

Trash. Translated by Sonya L. Johnson. New York: Kodansha International, 1995.

A Work about Yamada Eimi

Cornyetz, Nina. “Power and Gender in the Narratives of Yamada Eimi.” In Paul Gordon Schalow and Janet A. Walker, eds., The Woman’s Hand: Gender and Theory in Japanese Women’s Writing. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1996.

Yáñez, Mirta (1947–) poet, screenwriter, critic

Mirta Yáñez was born in Havana, Cuba, and attended the University of Havana, where she later taught. Considered to be one of Cuba’s best contemporary poets who has written for Cuban film and television, she is also one of Cuba’s foremost literary critics and has written extensively about feminism in Cuban literature.

In 1996, she assembled a collection of writing by Cuban women, and in 1998, it was released in the United States with the title Cubana. This collection of 16 stories and an introductory essay by Yáñez gives the reader a moving glimpse into the difficult social situation of Cuban woman today.

Yáñez lives in Havana where she writes and lectures.

Yathay Pin (1944–) novelist

Yathay Pin was born in Oudong, a village about 25 miles north of Phnom Penh, Cambodia. Yathay’s father, Chhor, was a small trader, and his family, though not impoverished, was poor.

Yathay was the eldest of five children. His father had high expectations of him: Knowing that Yathay was an excellent student, Chhor sent him to a good high school in Phnom Penh. Yathay received a government scholarship after completing high school, and he went to Canada to further his studies. In 1965, Yathay graduated from the Polytechnic Institute in Montreal with a diploma in civil engineering. He went back to Cambodia and joined the Ministry of Public Works. He married his first wife soon after, and they had one son. His first wife and second baby died in childbirth in 1969. Afterward, Yathay married his wife's sister, Any, and they had two sons. In 1975, the Khmer Rouge overthrew the Lon Nol government in Phnom Penh and began a regime of terror. The communist Khmer Rouge persecuted educated professionals and intellectuals and accused them of being bourgeois capitalists. Yathay and his family, consisting of eight members, were sent to work as unpaid agricultural workers in the countryside. By 1977, most of his family members had perished from malnutrition, overwork, or sickness. Yathay, who had managed to disguise his educated background for a few years, was finally betrayed by an acquaintance. Fearing execution, he made a run for freedom by walking over the mountains that separated Cambodia from Thailand. Yathay safely reached Thailand two months later; he had, however, lost his wife in a forest fire. From his Cambodian past, Yathay has one surviving son whom he fears is already dead. Yathay now works as a project engineer in the French Development Agency in Paris. He has also remarried and now has three sons.

Yathay's best and only known work is Stay Alive, My Son (1987), which is an acrid account of his hellish experience in Cambodia under the terror of the Khmer Rouge regime. His harrowing tale of anguish and distress is one among many voices that have since emerged from the writings of Cambodian refugees who have lived to tell about the horrors. Stay Alive, My Son is a remarkable book not merely because it is a moving tale but also because it is a true story. Only the late Haing Ngor's memoir, A Cambodian Odyssey (1987), can rival its poignant reality.

Yesenin, Sergey (Esenin, Sergei) (1895–1925) poet

Born in Konstantinovo, Russia, in a peasant family, Sergey Aleksandrovich Yesenin was raised by his maternal grandparents. He vigorously engaged in all the physical activities afforded by the countryside, such as swimming, hunting, and riding horses. He began to compose verse when he was only nine. After finishing grammar school in 1909, he was sent to a seminary to be trained as a teacher. While in seminary, he became serious about writing poetry and, upon the advice of a teacher, left for Moscow to pursue writing as a career.

After an unsuccessful marriage that lasted only a year, Yesenin moved to St. Petersburg in 1914. His first poetry collection, Radunitsa (Mourning for the Dead) was published in 1916. The poems were composed in the traditional lyrical style, emphasizing rhyme, meter, and metaphor. Yesenin focused on his personal experience with nature, family relationships, and love. To the disapproval of the exponents of SOCIALIST REALISM, Yesenin's poetry continued to stress image rather than message. His fame spread quickly, and he even read his poetry for the empress and her daughters. Nonetheless, he welcomed the October Revolution of 1917, seeing it as a vindication of the peasant values he celebrated in his collection Inoyiya (Otherland, 1918). But before long he was disillusioned with Bolsheviks, criticizing them in poems such as "The Stern October Has Deceived Me." Yesenin's application to join the Communist Party was rejected in 1919, supposedly due to his lack of political discipline.

In 1922, Yesenin published Pugachev, a tragic epic poem about an 18th-century peasant rebellion. The same year, he married American dancer Isadora Duncan, who had opened a ballet school in Moscow. Duncan and Yesenin traveled together in Europe and the United States and had spectacular public quarrels. After their 1923 separation, Yesenin returned to Moscow where he gave poetry recitals in cafes and drank heavily, sober only when he was actually composing verse.

The collections published in 1924 and 1925 demonstrate a major shift in Yesenin's poetry. Moscow of the Taverns (1924) and Soviet Rus (1925) comment on social and cultural changes in Communist Russia. Although Yesenin's diction remains lyrical and imaginative, he has moved away from the solipsistic study of the individual.

Subdued by alcoholism, Yesenin developed major psychological problems during the last year of his life. His marriage to Sofia Tolstoy, granddaughter of Leo TOLSTOY, was essentially unsuccessful. Yesenin committed suicide by hanging himself. His suicide note was a poem written in his own blood. His works, popular though they were, were banned under Stalin but were republished in Russia in 1966.

Other Works by Sergey Yesenin

Confessions of a Hooligan: Fifty Poems. Translated by Geoffrey Thurley. Manchester, U.K.: Carcanet Press, 1973.

The Collected Poems of Yesenin. Translated by Gregory Brengauz. Tallahassee: Floridian Publisher, 2000.

Works about Sergey Yesenin

McVay, Gordon. Isadora and Esenin: The Story of Isadora Duncan and Sergei Esenin. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Ardis, 1978.

Visson, Lynn. Sergei Esenin, Poet of the Crossroads. Wurzburg: Jal-Verlag, 1980.

Yevtushenko, Yevgeny (1933–) poet, dramatist

Yevgeny Yevtushenko was born in Irkutsk, Russia. When he was 11, his family moved to Moscow. From an early age, he loved literature and decided to pursue a career in a literary field. He studied at the Gorky Institute of Literature from 1951 to 1954. He was closely attached to his father and sometimes accompanied him on geological expeditions. In 1948, they traveled to distant regions of Kazakhstan and Altai. The experiences of this trip appear in Yevtushenko's first published collection of verse, Zima Junction (1956).

Yevtushenko became internationally renowned with the publication of Babi Yar, a long narrative poem that denounces Nazi anti-Semitism and memorializes victims of the Holocaust. The poem also criticizes actions of the Russian people toward the Jews. For this reason, the poem did not appear in Russia until 1984. Yevtushenko proceeded to publish verse of a more political nature. In Heirs of Stalin (1961), he warns readers about the dangers that Stalinism poses even after Stalin's death. In 1963, Yevtushenko published A Precocious Autobiography in English. The work was criticized by the government for its open criticism of Soviet policies, and he was not allowed to leave the country for two years.

In 1972, Yevtushenko shifted his artistic interests from poetry and produced a hugely successful play, Under the Skin of the Statue of Liberty. Yevtushenko is a prolific artist and expanded his artistic scope to directing, acting, and photography. He also edited poetry for Ogonek, a journal that published many previously repressed writers and poets.

Yevgeny Yevtushenko has achieved enormous success during his lifetime. He was appointed as an honorary member of American Academy of Arts and Sciences in 1987. In 1989, he was elected as a member of the Congress of People's Deputies, and he has served as vice president of an organization of Russian writers (PEN). After the collapse of the Soviet Union, Yevtushenko played a central role in the erection near the former KGB headquarters of a monument to the victims of Stalinism.

Other Works by Yevgeny Yevtushenko

Don't Die Before You're Dead. Translated by Antonina W. Bouis. New York: Random House, 1995.

The Collected Poems, 1952–1990. Translated by James Ragan. New York: Henry Holt, 1991.

Yevgeny Yevtushenko: Early Poems. Translated by George Reavey. New York: Marion Boyars, 1989.

Yosano Akiko (Shō Hō) (1878–1942)poet, essayist, critic, children's story writer

Yosano Akiko was born in the city of Sakai near Osaka, Japan, to a merchant family. When she was young, she helped out with the family business, reading Japanese classical literature from her father's library in her spare time. After she completed a junior-high-school education, she began to write poetry. During this time, she wrote a letter to Tokyo poet Tekkan Yosano (1873–1935), to establish a professional relationship. She later married him. In an effort to further education for women, Yosano helped establish a high school for women in 1921. Seven years later, she started a poetry magazine called Tōhaku (Cameria-Camelia). She died of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Yosano's first poem was published in an anthology of Osaka-area poets in 1896. She continued to work with these local poets until she met Tekkan, who published a literary magazine Myōjō (Morning Star). In 1901, she left Osaka for Tokyo and began to publish poems, novels, and essays at a rapid rate. During this period, she published her most famous collection of poetry, Midaregami (Tangled Hair, translated 1987). She also wrote essays on social and political issues, translated The Tale of Genji into modern Japanese, and created a collection of children's stories.

Yosano primarily wrote tanka and free verse that expressed honest emotions. To develop honesty in her writing, she based her poems on her personal experiences and feelings, notably her love for Tekkan. Her style challenged traditional poetry themes and methods of expression, thereby establishing her own modern poetic style. By the time of her death, Yosano had written approximately 50,000 tanka.

Other Works by Yosano Akiko

River of Stars: Selected Poems of Yosano Akiko. Translated by Keiko Matsui Gibson. Boston: Shambhala Publications, 1997.

Tangled Hair: Love Poems of Yosano Akiko. Translated by Dennis Maloney. Fredonia, N.Y.: White Pine Press, 1991.

Travels in Mongolia and Manchuria. Translated by Joshua A. Fogel. New York: Columbia University Press, 2001.

Works about Yosano Akiko

Rodd, Lauren Rasplica. "Yosano Akiko and the Taisho Debate over the 'New Woman.'" In Gail Lee Bernstein, ed., Recreating Japanese Women, 1600–1945. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1991.

Ueda, Makoto. Modern Japanese Poets and the Nature of Literature. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1983.

Yourcenar, Marguerite (Marguerite de Crayencour) (1903–1987) novelist, poet, essayist

Born to an aristocratic family in Brussels, Belgium, Yourcenar spent much of her childhood traveling with her father. After his death, she became independently wealthy and was able to pursue writing, a passion that had begun to manifest itself when she was a teenager. Her historical novels, which deal with modern themes such as the psychological manifestations of homosexuality and deviant behavior, gained her international fame and recognition.

Chinese legend fascinated Yourcenar in her early works, as did the role and life of the artist. In her early short story collection, Oriental Tales (1938), she draws from Chinese and Sanskrit legend to write about art and the artist's frustration. In one particular piece, "How Wang-Fo Was Saved," she recounts the tale of an aging painter who is imprisoned by a ruler who fears the power of art.

Memoirs of Hadrian (1951) is among the best known of Yourcenar's works. Detailing the reflections of a dying man and set on the eve of Hadrian's death, the emperor recounts his memories in a letter addressed to the person who will take his place. The novel took 15 years to complete and was published shortly after Yourcenar moved to the United States at the start of World War II.

Yourcenar took a position in New York at Sarah Lawrence College as professor of French literature and began to live with her translator Grace Frick. The two remained partners for the duration of Yourcenar's life. She continued to write, publishing Le Coup de grâce (1939), the story of a Prussian officer who, because he secretly loves her brother, decides to kill the woman who has fallen in love with him. She also published The Abyss (1976), in which she creates a fictional Renaissance man who is essentially a combination of the historical figures Da Vinci, Paracelsus, Copernicus, and Giordano Bruno. Like many of the male characters she presents, he is depicted as a homosexual.

Yourcenar wrote only one work with a contemporary setting. The novel, Denier du rêve (A Coin in Nine Hands, 1934), revolves around the attempted assassination of Mussolini. The novel is also unique in that it revolves around several female characters and examines the female psyche. The majority of Yourcenar's characters in her works are men who are trapped between the demands of society and the desire for passion.

Yourcenar also wrote two volumes of family memoirs, Souvenirs Pieux (Dear Departed, 1974) and Archives du Nord (Northern Archives, 1977), as well as a number of essays, poems, and plays. As a translator, she worked to translate English and American novels as well as Negro spirituals into her native French. In 1980, Yourcenar became the first woman ever to be elected to the Académie Française. She died seven years later on December 17 in Maine.

Other Works by Marguerite Yourcenar

Dreams and Destinies. Translated by Donald Flanell Friedman. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1999.

How Many Years. Translated by Maria Louise Ascher. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1995.

Mishima: A Vision of the Void. Translated by Alberto Manguel. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2001.

Works about Marguerite Yourcenar

Horn, Pierre L. Marguerite Yourcenar. Boston: Twayne, 1985.

Saint, Nigel. Marguerite Yourcenar: Reading the Visual. Oxford: Legenda, 2000.

Yu Guangzhong (Yü Kwang-chung)

(1928–) poet, essayist

Yu Guangzhong was born in Nanjing, China, the capital of Fukien Province. He studied foreign languages at Ginling and Xiamen Universities in China before moving to Hong Kong with his family in 1948.

In 1950, Yu Guangzhong fled to Taiwan as a student refugee. He attended Taiwan's most prestigious institution, the National Taiwan University, where he began to write poetry. He graduated in 1952 and that same year published his first collection of poems, Blues of a Sailor. Highly sentimental and nostalgic, it was very popular.

Yu Guangzhong worked as an army interpreter until 1956 when he turned to teaching. Eventually, he decided to pursue a graduate degree in the United States. He earned a Masters of Fine Arts from the University of Iowa in 1959. He returned to Taiwan in 1959 and taught at Taiwan Teachers University and the Political University of Taiwan. Later, he taught at the Chinese University in Hong Kong.

Yu Guangzhong remained committed to literature, however, and formed the Blue Star Poetry Society with a friend, Qin Zihao. In the 1960s, he moved away from the sentimental style of his past writing and studied both traditional Chinese and modern forms of poetry. He published an article, "Good-bye, Mr. Nothingness!" on this subject, advocating change but discouraging the complete Westernization of Chinese literature.

Yu Guangzhong continued to teach English literature at National Taiwan Normal University until 1972 when he became the chair of the Department of Western Languages and Literature at National Chengchi University. Since then, he has lived in the United States twice as a Fulbright scholar and is the author of many volumes of poetry, including Stalactite (1960), Associations of the Lotus (1964), and A Bitter Gourd Carved in White Jade (1974). He is also a prolific translator of poetry and a prominent literary critic and essayist. Today, he is considered one of Taiwan's premier men of letters.

Yun Tongju (Yun Hae-hwan) (1917–1945)

poet

Yun Hae-hwan was born on December 30 in Myongdong, North Kando province of Korea. He regularly published children's poems while studying literature at Yonhui College and wrote poems for a volume he hoped to publish later. After graduating in 1941, he chose to continue his studies in English literature.

Like many students in Japanese-occupied Korea, Yun Tongju traveled to Japan, first enrolling at Rikkyo University in 1942 and then transferring to Doshisha University in Kyoto. At the time, resistance to Japanese colonial rule was high, and restrictions on Koreans in Korea and Japan were increasingly stringent. Yun Tongju was forced to take a Japanese name and read, write, and speak in Japanese. He wrote secretly in his native language.

Yun Tongju actively participated in the Korean independence movement. As a result, in July 1943, he was arrested for subversive activity by the Japanese government. It is thought he was mistreated and abused in Japan's Fukuoka prison, where he died under unknown circumstances at the age of 28.

His one volume of poetry, Sky, Wind, Stars and Poetry, was published posthumously in 1948. The poems closely reflected Yun Tongju's feelings as a subject of Japanese colonialism. Particularly because he studied in Japan, he had to deal with a marked isolation from his native country and culture. His poems capture his displacement and resentment. "Counting the Stars" is replete with melancholic remembrances of the past, while "Awful Hour" examines the depths of the narrator's sense of alienation, perhaps in a period of intense solitude.

Yun Tongju's writing is the poetry of an exile. He searched for spiritual integrity and a Korean identity under an oppressive foreign regime. As he was battling outward influences of oppression, his inner struggle manifested itself in tortured, anguished, highly personal poems that seem to document both his individual struggle between self-love and self-hate and Korea's national crisis to articulate its independence. Because his writing is a testament to Korea's struggle against colonialism and provides a moving portrait of a young person's inner struggles, they were extremely popular, especially among younger readers.

Yun Tongju did not live to see Korea's liberation in 1945. In 1968, his alma mater, Yonhui College, erected a monument in his honor.

Z

Zamyatin, Yevgeny (1884–1937) novelist
Yevgeny Ivanovich Zamyatin was born in the small provincial town of Lebedyan, Russia. His father was a priest, and his mother an extremely well-educated woman who loved music. As a young child, Zamyatin read Dostoevsky and Turgenyev. Zamyatin graduated Voronezh Gymnasium in 1902 with the Gold Medal (the highest academic honor in Russia, equivalent to a valedictorian), which he pawned for 25 rubles some months later. He moved to St. Petersburg and worked in the shipyards. Zamyatin joined the Bolsheviks, and his political beliefs got him into trouble. He was beaten by the police, placed in solitary confinement for several months, and was finally banished from St. Petersburg by the czar's police force.

Zamyatin's literary debut in 1908 was a subversive short story "Alone," for which he was briefly exiled to Lakhta. In 1914, he was tried for political subversion and expression of antimilitarist sentiments on the basis of his short story "At the End of the World." He was eventually acquitted. In 1917, Maxim GORKY offered Zamyatin a position with Vsemirnaya Literatura, a journal specializing in world literature. Zamyatin was in charge of the English and American sections in the journal. Throughout this period, he continued to publish short stories.

Zamyatin described his literary works as neorealism, a style according to Zamyatin that concentrates on the grotesque and brutal aspects of life. Zamyatin's most famous work, We (1924), is one of the earliest dystopias of science fiction. The setting of the novel is a future One State, governed by perfect laws of mathematics. All citizens have numbers instead of names, and their consumption (including sex) is completely regulated by the state. We comments on the structure of Soviet society, as well as the role of an individual within this social matrix. After the publication of We, Zamyatin could no longer publish his work in the Soviet Union. He moved to Paris in 1931. Zamyatin was readmitted to the Writers' Union but died in 1937 before returning to Russia.

Zamyatin never received proper recognition for his work during his lifetime. His style was an enormous influence on many writers, including George Orwell and Ursula Le Guin. Zamyatin's work has been translated into more than a dozen languages.

Another Work by Yevgeny Zamyatin

The Dragon: Fifteen Stories. Translated by Mirra Ginsburg. New York: Random House, 1967.

Zhao Zhenkai

See BEI DAO.

Zhou Shuren

See LU XUN.

Zola, Émile (1840–1902) novelist, essayist

Noted both as the founder of the naturalist movement (see NATURALISM) and for his active participation in the Dreyfus affair, Émile Zola was born in Paris, France. His father died when he was seven years old, leaving the family with severe financial problems. He spent his childhood in the south of France, in Aix-en-Provence, returning with his mother to Paris at age 18. He befriended French painter Paul Cézanne and, influenced by ROMANTICISM, began to write. His mother had great hopes that he would pursue a career in law and ease the family's financial burdens, but he failed his exams. Popular legend holds that there were times in which Zola's family was so poor that he would capture birds on his windowsill to provide meat for the supper table.

Unable to pursue law, Zola secured employment first as a clerk for a shipping firm, then at the Louis-Christophe-François-Hachette publishing house, all the while working toward his goal of becoming a published author. His journalistic writings included art criticism and literary reviews as well as political articles in which he openly expressed his animosity toward Napoleon III.

Zola's earliest published works of fiction include Contes à Ninon (Stories for Ninon, 1864) as well as several essays, plays and short stories. He attracted little attention for his work until the publication of his scandalous and sordid autobiographical work La Confession de Claude (Claude's Confession, 1865). This attention, however, came not so much from the public as it did from the authorities. As a result, Zola was fired from his job at the publishing firm, but he gained recognition as an emerging author.

Thérèse Raquin (1867), Zola's first novel to be considered a major work, was published two years later and was a moderate success. He followed it immediately with the first of a series of works collectively referred to as the Rougon-Macquart cycle (1871–93), which revolves around the life of a family living under Napoleon III and the Second Empire. Zola initially presented this idea to his publisher in 1868. The family is split into two branches: the working-class Rougons, and the Macquarts, who are alcoholics and smugglers. In the course of time, some would rise to the highest levels of society, and others would fall victim to the evils of society and the malformations of their own character. The series reached 20 volumes, each one slightly different in theme but all of them sharing a common element of detailed research. Zola conducted interviews and attempted to experience as much as he could firsthand to understand and present his characters fully. He was particularly interested in the effects of heredity and social determinism. This marked the beginning of the new naturalist period of French literature.

The novel that brought him fame was L'Assommoir (The Drunkard, 1877). After its publication, he bought property and continued to compile detailed notes about all aspects of life. Germinal (1885) was written based on notes compiled on labor conditions for coal miners. Having centered his novel on a worker's strike, Zola again attracted the attention of the authorities, who viewed his work as advocating and encouraging revolution.

On January 13, 1898, Zola became even more openly involved in controversy. He published an open letter entitled J'accuse in which he defended Albert Dreyfus, a Jewish officer who had been sent to prison for allegedly giving military secrets to Germany. This letter was ultimately instrumental in gaining Dreyfus a new trial and his eventual release, but not until Zola was forced to flee to England to escape imprisonment for writing it. He returned in 1899, after Dreyfus was released.

On September 28, 1902, Zola was found dead in his home of carbon monoxide poisoning. Strong evidence points to the possibility that this was not an accident but a murder, carried out by those who disagreed with his views.

Other Works by Émile Zola

The Masterpiece. Translated by Thomas Walron. New York: Oxford University Press, 1993.

Pot Luck. Translated by Brian Nelson. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999.

A Work about Émile Zola

Brown, Frederick. Zola: A Life. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1995.

Zynger, Icek-Hersz

See SINGER, ISAAC BASHEVIS.

SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Abrahams, Cecil. Alex La Guma. Boston: Twayne, 1985.
- Abrahams, C., ed. The Tragic Life: Bessie Head and Literature in Southern Africa. Lawrenceville, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1990.
- Abramson, Glenda. The Writing of Yehuda Amichai: A Thematic Approach. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1989.
- Adams, Ian M. Three Authors of Alienation: Bombal, Onetti, Carpentier. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1975.
- Adereth, Max. Elsa Triolet and Louis Aragon: An Introduction to Their Interwoven Lives and Works. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 1994.
- Adler, Jeremy. Franz Kafka. New York: Overlook Press, 2002.
- Adler, Laure. Marguerite Duras: A Life. Translated by Anne-Marie Glasheen. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2000.
- Aichinger, Isle. The Bound Man and Other Stories. Translated by Eric Mosbacher. New York: Noonday Press, 1956.
- Akutagawa Ryunosuke. Tales Grotesque and Curious. Translated by Glen W. Shaw. Tokyo: Hokuseido, 1948.
- Alberti, Rafael. The Owl's Insomnia: Poems Selected and Translated by Mark Strand. New York: Atheneum, 1973.
- Alcalay, Ammiel. Keys to the Garden, New Israeli Writing. New York: City Light Books, 1996.
- Alexander, Peter F. Alan Paton: A Biography. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1994.
- Alldrige, James C. Ilse Aichinger. Chester Springs, Pa.: Dufour Editions, 1969.
- Alpers, Antony. The Life of Katherine Mansfield. New York: Viking Press, 1980.
- Amoia, Alba della Fazia. Feodor Dostoevsky. New York: Continuum Press, 1993.
- Anand, Mulk R. Anthology of Dalit Literature. Columbia, Mo.: South Asia Books, 1992.
- Anastasia, Olga, ed. Isak Dinesen: Critical Views. Athens: Ohio University Press, 1993.
- Anderson, Marston. Limits of Realism. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1989.
- Angulo, Maria-Elena. Magic Realism: Social Context and Discourse. New York: Garland, 1995.
- Anyidoho, Kofi, Abena Busia, and Anne V. Adams, eds. Beyond Survival: African Literature and the Search for New Life. Lawrenceville, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1998.
- Arenas, Reinaldo. The Ill-Fated Peregrinations of Fray Servando. Translated by Andrew Hurley. New York: Avon, 1987.
- Arghezi, Tudor. Poems: Tudor Arghezi. Translated by Andrei Bantas. Bucharest: Minerva Publishing House, 1983.

- . Selected Poems of Tudor Arghezi. Translated by Michael Impey and Brian Swann. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1976.
- Arico, Santo L. Oriana Fallaci: The Woman and the Myth. Carbondale: Southern Illinois University Press, 1998.
- Arnold, James A., ed. A History of Literature in the Caribbean. Philadelphia: Benjamins, 1994.
- Assouline, Pierre. Simenon: A Biography. Translated by Jon Rothschild. New York: Knopf, 1997.
- Atkins, Angela. Vikram Seth's "A Suitable Boy": A Reader's Guide. New York: Continuum International Inc., 2002.
- Attridge, Derek, and Rosemary Jolly, eds. Writing South Africa: Literature, Apartheid, and Democracy, 1970–1995. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1998.
- Atwell, David. J. M. Coetzee: South Africa and the Politics of Writings. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1993.
- Auslander, Rose. Selected Poems of Rose Auslander. Translated by Ewald Osers. London: London Magazine Editors, 1977.
- Babcock, Arthur E. The New Novel in France: Theory and Practice of the Nouveau Roman. Boston: Twayne, 1997.
- Bachelard, Gaston. Lautreamont. Translated by Robert S. Dupree. Dallas, Tex.: Dallas Institute of Humanities and Culture, 1986.
- Bahti, Timothy, and Marilyn Sibley Fries. Jewish Writers, German Literature: The Uneasy Examples of Nelly Sachs and Walter Benjamin. Ann Arbor: The University of Michigan Press, 1995.
- Bair, Dierdre. Samuel Beckett: A Biography. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1978.
- Baker, Gary. Understanding Uwe Johnson. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1999.
- Barbour, Douglas. b. p. Nichol and His Work. Toronto: ECW Press, 1992.
- . Michael Ondaatje. Boston: Twayne, 1993.
- Barbour, Sarah. Nathalie Sarraute and the Feminist Reader: Identities in Process. Lewisburg, Pa.: Bucknell University Press, 1993.
- Barker, Christine. Erich Maria Remarque. New York: Barnes and Noble, 1980.
- Barlow, Tani E., and Gary J. Bjoge, eds. I Myself Am a Woman: Selected Writings of Ding Ling. Boston: Beacon Press, 1990.
- Barnes, Christopher. Boris Pasternak: A Literary Biography. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1998.
- Barnett, Ursula. A Vision of Order: A Study of Black South African Literature in English (1914–1980). Amherst: University of Massachusetts Press, 1983.
- Barnstone, Alik, and Willis Barnstone, eds. A Book of Women Poets from Antiquity to Now. New York: Schocken Books, 1980.
- Barnstone, Willis, ed. Borges at Eighty: Conversations. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1982.
- Barnstone, Willis, and Tony Barnstone, eds. Literature of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. Upper Saddle River, N.J.: Prentice Hall, 1999.
- Barron, Stephanie, and Wolf-Dieter Dube, eds. German Expressionism: Art and Society. New York: Rizzoli, 1997.
- Bassanese, Fiora A. Understanding Luigi Pirandello. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1997.
- Baudelaire, Charles. Baudelaire: Poems. Translated by Laurence Lerner. London: J. M. Dent, 1999.
- Bauer, Nancy. Simone de Beauvoir, Philosophy and Feminism. New York: Columbia University Press, 2001.
- Bauermeister, Erica, Jesse Larsen, and Holly Smith, eds. 500 Great Books by Women. New York: Penguin, 1994.
- Beasley, W. G., ed. Modern Japan: Aspects of History, Literature and Society. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1975.
- Becker, Lucille F. Louis Aragon. Boston: Twayne, 1971.
- Beichman, Janine. Masaoka Shiki. New York: Kodansha International, 1986.
- Bell-Villada, Gene H. Borges and His Fiction. Arlington: University of Texas Press, 1999.
- Bellos, David. Georges Perec: A Life in Words. London: Harvill, 1993.
- Benn, Gottfried. Prose, Essays, Poems. New York: Continuum, 1987.

- Berlin, Isaiah. The Hedgehog and the Fox: An Essay on Tolstoy's View of History. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1986.
- Bermel, Albert. Artaud's Theatre of Cruelty. New York: Taplinger, 1977.
- Bernstein, Gail L., ed. Recreating Japanese Women, 1600–1945. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1991.
- Bertram, James. Charles Brasch. Wellington: Oxford University Press, 1976.
- Besser, Gretchen Rous. Germain de Stael Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1994.
- Birbalsingh, Frank, ed. Frontiers of Caribbean Literatures in English. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1996.
- . Indo-Caribbean Resistance. Toronto: TSAR, 1993.
- Birch, Cyril, ed. Chinese Communist Literature. New York: Frederick A. Praeger, 1963.
- Birnbaum, M. D., and R. Trager-Verchovsky, eds. History, Another Text. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1988.
- Bishop, Lloyd. The Poetry of Alfred Musset: Styles and Genres. New York: Peter Lang, 1997.
- Bisztray, George. Marxist Models of Literary Realism. New York: Columbia University Press, 1978.
- Blackwell, Jeannine, and Susanne Zantop, eds. Bitter Healing: German Women Writers: 1700–1830. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1990.
- Bloom, Harold, ed. Isaac Babel: Modern Critical Views. Broomall, Pa.: Chelsea House, 1987.
- Boeschentein, Hermann. A History of Modern German Literature. New York: Peter Lang, 1990.
- Bohn, William. Apollinaire and the International Avante-Garde. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1997.
- Bondanella, Peter. Umberto Eco and the Open Text: Semiotics, Fiction, Popular Culture. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1997.
- Bonifaz, Oscar C. Remembering Rosario: A Personal Glimpse into the Life and Works of Rosario Castellanos. Translated by Myralyn F. Allgood. Madrid: Scripta Humanistica, 1990.
- Bouchard, Norma, and Veronica Pravadelli, eds. Umberto Eco's Alternative. New York: Peter Lang, 1998.
- Boullata, Issa. Critical Perspectives on Modern Arabic Literature. Washington, D.C.: Three Continents Press, 1980.
- Bower, Kathrin M. Ethics and Rememberance in the Poetry of Nelly Sachs and Rose Auslander. Rochester, N.Y.: Camden House, 2000.
- Brasch, Charles. Indirections: A Memoir 1909–1947. Edited by James Bertram. Wellington, N.Z.; New York: Oxford University Press, 1980.
- Breslin, Paul. Nobody's Nation: Reading Derek Walcott. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2001.
- Brewer, Maria M. Claude Simon: Narratives Without Narrative. Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1995.
- Brock, Peggy, ed. Women, Rites and Sites: Aboriginal Women's Cultural Knowledge. Boston: Allen and Unwin, 1990.
- Brod, Max. Franz Kafka: A Biography. New York: Da Capo Press, 1995.
- Brodsky, Patricia. Rainer Maria Rilke. Boston: Twayne, 1988.
- Bronner, Stephen E. Camus: Portrait of a Moralizer. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1999.
- Brotherson, Gordon. Manuel Machado: A Reevaluation. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1968.
- Brown, Frederick. Zola: A Life. New York: Farrar, Strauss & Giroux, 1995.
- Brown, Lloyd W. Women Writers in Black Africa. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1981.
- Brown, Stewart, ed. The Art of Kamau Brathwaite. Bridgend, Mid Glamorgan, Wales: Seren, 1995.
- Brown, Stewart, et al. Voiceprint: An Anthology of Oral and Related Poetry from the Caribbean. Essex, England: Longman Group UK Limited, 1989.
- Brunsdale, Mitzi. Sigrid Undset: Chronicler of Norway. New York: Berg Publishers, Ltd., 1988.
- Burness, Donald. Fire: Six Writers from Angola, Mozambique and Cape Verde. Washington, D.C.: Three Continents Press, 1977.
- Burnett, Paula. Derek Walcott: Politics and Poetics. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 2000.
- Buruma, Ian, ed. India: A Mosaic. New York: New York Review of Books, 2000.

- Buxton, John. The Grecian Taste: Literature in the Age of New-Classicism 1740–1820. New York: Barnes and Noble, 1978.
- Bynum, Brant B. The Romantic Imagination in the Works of Gustavo Adolfo Bécquer. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina, Department of Romance Languages, 1993.
- Cady, Andrea. Measuring the Visible: The Verse and Prose of Philippe Jaccottet. Atlanta, Ga.: Rodopi, 1992.
- Calvocaressi, Richard, and Katharina Schultz. Oskar Kokoschka, 1886–1980. New York: Solomon R. Guggenheim Foundation, 1986.
- Camber, Richard. On Camus. Belmont, Calif.: Wadsworth/Thompson Learning, 2002.
- Caranfa, Angelo. Claudel: Beauty and Grace. Lewisburg, Pa.: Bucknell University Press, 1989.
- Carlyle, Thomas. The Life of Friedrich Schiller: Comprehending and Examination of His Works. Portland, Ore.: University Press of the Pacific, 2001.
- Cate, Curtis. André Malraux: A Biography. London, England: Hutchinson, 1995.
- Cavafy, Konstantin. Before Time Could Change Them: The Complete Poems of Constantine P. Cavafy. Translated by Theoharis Constantine Theoharis. Orlando, Fla.: Harcourt Brace, 2001.
- Caws, Mary Ann. René Char. Boston: Twayne, 1977.
- Celan, Paul. Selected Poetry and Prose of Paul Celan. Translated by John Felsteiner. New York: Norton, 2000.
- Chadwick, Charles. Verlaine. London, England: Athlone Press, 1973.
- Chagnon, Jacqui, and Don Luce, eds. Quiet Courage: Poems from Viet Nam. Washington, D.C.: Indochina Mobil Education Project, 1974.
- Chambers, Helen. The Changing Image of Theodor Fontane. Columbia, S.C.: Camden House Inc., 1997.
- Champagne, Roland A. Georges Bataille. Boston: Twayne, 1998.
- Chapman, Michael. South African Literatures. London, England: Longman, 1996.
- Chartier, Armand B. Barbey d'Aurevilly. Boston: Twayne, 1977.
- Cheung, Dominic. Feng Chih. Boston: Twayne, 1979.
- Chevalier, Tracy, ed. Contemporary World Writers. Detroit: St. James Press, 1993.
- Chung, Chong-wha, ed. Modern Korean Literature, An Anthology, 1908–1965. New York: Kegan Paul International, 1995.
- Cixous, Helene. Reading with Clarice Lispector. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1990.
- Cliff, Michelle. The Land of Look Behind: Prose and Poetry. Ithaca, N.Y.: Firebrand Books, 1985.
- Clurman, Harold. Ibsen. New York: Da Capo Press, 1989.
- Cobb, Carl. Antonio Machado. Boston: Twayne, 1971.
- Coghlan, Brian. Hofmannsthal's Festival Dramas. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1964.
- Cohen, Georg. Henrik Ibsen, A Critical Study. With a 42-Page Essay on Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson. New York: Classic Books, 1964.
- Cohen, Joseph. Voices of Israel: Essays on and Interview with Yehuda Amichai, A. B. Yehoshua, T. Carmi, Aharon Applefeld, and Amos Oz. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1990.
- Cohn, Robert G. The Poetry of Arthur Rimbaud. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1999.
- Collins, John, ed. Noonuccal and Her People: Perspectives on Her Life's Work. St. Lucia, B.W.I.: University Queensland Press, 1996.
- Collymore, Frank. The Man Who Loved Attending Funerals and Other Stories. Edited by Harold Barratt and Reinhard Sander. Portsmouth, N.H.: Heinemann, 1993.
- Conde, Maryse. Tales from the Heart: True Stories from My Childhood. Translated by Richard Philcox. New York: Soho, 2001.
- Conroy, William T. Villiers de L'Isle-Adam. Boston: Twayne, 1978.
- Cooke, Miriam. War's Other Voices. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988.
- Cooke, Nathalie. Margaret Atwood: A Biography. Toronto: ECW Press, 1998.
- Copeland, Rebecca L. Lost Leaves: Women Writers of Meiji Japan. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 2000.
- Cornwell, Neil. Vladimir Nabokov. Plymouth, Mass.: Northcote House Publishers, 1999.

- Cook, David, and Michael Okenimkpe. Ngugi wa Thiong'o: An Exploration of His Writings. London, England: Heinemann, 1983.
- Couste, A. Julio Cortázar. South America: Oceano Group, 2002.
- Coutinho, Edilberto. Gilberto Freyre. Rio de Janeiro, Brazil: Agir, 1994.
- Cox, Brian, ed. African Writers. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1997.
- Crane, Ralph J. Ruth Praver Jhabvala. Boston: Twayne, 1992.
- Crichfield, Grant. Three Novels of Madame de Duras. The Hague: Mouton, 1975.
- Crockett, Roger A. Understanding Friedrich Dürrenmatt. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1998.
- Cronin, Anthony. Samuel Beckett: The Last Modernist. London, England: HarperCollins, 1996.
- Csaire, Aime. Lyric and Dramatic Poetry, 1946–82. Translated by Clayton Eshleman and Annette Smith. Charlottesville: University Press of Virginia, 1990.
- . Aimé Césaire: The Collected Poetry. Translated by Clayton Eshleman and Annette Smith. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1983.
- Cuomo, Glenn R. Career at the Cost of Compromise: Gunter Eich's Life and Work in the Years 1933–1945. Atlanta, Ga.: Rodopi, 1989.
- Currie, William. Metaphors of Alienation: The Fiction of Abe, Beckett and Kafka. Ann Arbor, Mich.: University Microfilms, 1973.
- Curtis, J. A. E. Mikhail Bulgakov: A Life in Letters and Diaries. New York: Overlook Press, 1992.
- Czeslaw, Milosz. Who Is Gombrowicz? New York: Penguin, 1986.
- Daglarca, Fazıl H. Secme Siirler. Selected Poems. Translated by Talat Sait Halman. Pittsburgh: University of Pittsburgh Press, 1969.
- Dana, Doris, ed. Selected Poems of Gabriela Mistral. Translated by Doris Dana. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1971.
- Dance, Daryl C., ed. Fifty Caribbean Writers: A Bio-Bibliographical Critical Sourcebook. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1986.
- Daniels, Barry V. Revolution in the Theatre: French Romantic Theories of Drama. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1983.
- Danly, Robert L. In the Shade of Spring Leaves: The Life and Writings of Higuchi Ichiyo, a Woman of Letters in Meiji Japan. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1981.
- Davies, Carole B., and Anne Adams Graves, eds. Nagambika: Studies of Women in African Literature. Lawrenceville, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1986.
- Davies, Carole B., and Elaine Savory Fido, eds. Out of the Kumbla: Caribbean Women and Literature. Lawrenceville, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1990.
- Davis, Gregson. Aimé Césaire. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1997.
- Dawes, Kwame, ed. Talk Yuh Talk: Interviews with Anglophone Caribbean Poets. Charlottesville: University Press of Virginia, 2001.
- Day, A. Grove, and Edgar C. Knowlton, Jr. Vicente Blasco Ibáñez. Boston: Twayne, 1972.
- Del Principe, David. Rebellion, Death, and Aesthetics in Italy: The Demons of Scapigliatura. Madison, Wis.: Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1996.
- Demetz, Peter. After the Fires: Recent Writing in the Germanies, Austria, and Switzerland. New York: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1986.
- . Postwar German Literature: A Critical Introduction. New York: Pegasus, 1970.
- Dever, Aileen. Radical Insufficiency of Human Life: The Poetry of R. de Castro and J. A. Silva. Jefferson, N.C.: McFarland, 2000.
- Dharwakder, Vinay, and A. K. Ramanujan, eds. The Oxford Anthology of Modern Indian Poetry. London, England: Oxford University Press, 1994.
- Dhqwán, R. K. The Novels of Amitav Ghosh. New York: Prestige Books, 1999.
- DiGaetani, John L., ed. A Companion to Pirandello Studies. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1991.
- Dodiya, Jaydipsinh, ed. The Fiction of Rohinton Mistry: Critical Studies. London, England: Sangam, 1998.
- Dodiya, Jaydipsinh. The Plays of Girish Karnad: Critical Perspectives. New Delhi: Prestige Books, 1999.

- Doherty, Justin. The Acmeist Movement in Russian Poetry: Culture and the Word. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1995.
- Doi, Takeo. The Psychological World of Natsume Soseki. Translated by William Jefferson Tyler. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1976.
- Dolezelova-Velingerova, M., ed. The Chinese Novel at the Turn of the Century. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1980.
- Dolittle, James. Alfred de Vigny. Boston: Twayne, 1967.
- Dollenmayer, David. The Berlin Novels of Alfred Doblin. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1988.
- Donahue, Thomas J. The Theater of Fernando Arrabal: A Garden of Earthly Delights. New York: New York University Press, 1980.
- Dooling, Amy D., and Kristina M. Torgeson. Writing Women in Modern China: An Anthology of Women's Literature from the Early Twentieth Century. New York: Columbia University Press, 1998.
- Edstrom, Vivi Bloom. Selma Legerlof. Boston: Twayne, 1982.
- Ehre, Milton. Isaak Babel. Boston: Twayne, 1986.
- Eich, Gunter. Pigeons and Moles: Selected Writings of Günter Eich. Translated by Michael Hamburger. Columbia, S.C.: Camden House, 1990.
- Eilersen, Gillian. Bessie Head: Thunder Behind Her Ears: Her Life and Writing. Cape Town, Claremont: David Philip, 1995.
- El-Enany, Rasheed. Naguib Mahfouz: The Pursuit of Meaning. New York: Routledge, 1993.
- Ellis, Keith. Critical Approaches to Rubén Darío. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1974.
- Ellison, David R. Ethics and Aesthetics in Modernist Literature: From the Sublime to the Uncanny. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2001.
- Ellison, Fred P. Brazil's New Novel: Four Northeastern Masters. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1954.
- Elytis, Odysseus. The Collected Poems of Odysseus Elytis. Translated by Jeffrey Carson and Nikos Sarris. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1997.
- Erickson, John D. Dada: Performance, Poetry and Art. Boston: Twayne, 1984.
- Ermolaev, Herman. Mikhail Sholokhov and His Art. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1982.
- Erwin, Edward. The Freud Encyclopedia: Theory, Therapy, and Culture. New York: Garland, 2002.
- Espinet, Ramabai, ed. Creation Fire: A CAFRA Anthology of Caribbean Women's Poetry. Toronto: Sister Vision, 1990.
- Esslin, Martin. Brecht, a Choice of Evils: A Critical Study of the Man, His Works, and His Opinions. New York: Methuen Drama, 1984.
- . Theatre of the Absurd. New York: Overlook Press, 1969.
- Ezenwa-Ohaeto. Chinua Achebe: A Biography. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1997.
- Falb, Lewis W. Jean Anouilh. New York: Frederick Unger, 1977.
- Falk, Thomas. Elias Canetti. Boston: Twayne, 1993.
- Faurot, Jeannette L., ed. Chinese Fiction from Taiwan: Critical Perspectives. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1980.
- Fekkema, Douwe, and Elrud Ibsch. Modernist Conjectures: A Mainstream in European Literature 1910–1940. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1988.
- Felsteiner, John. Paul Celan: Poet, Survivor, Jew. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2001.
- Ferguson, Robert. Enigma: The Life of Knut Hamsun. New York: Noonday Press, 1988.
- Ferre, Rosario. Sweet Diamond Dust and Other Stories. New York: Plume, 1996.
- Feuerwerker, Yi-tsi Mei. Ding Ling's Fiction: Ideology and Narrative in Modern Chinese Literature. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1982.
- Fioretos, Aris. The Solid Letter: Reading of Friedrich Holderlin. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 2000.
- Firda, Richard. Peter Handke. Boston: Twayne, 1993.
- Fishburn, Katherine. Reading Buchi Emecheta: Cross-Cultural Conversations. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1995.
- Flores, Angel. Spanish American Authors. New York: H. W. Wilson Company, 1992.

- Flores, Angel, and Kate Flores, eds. The Defiant Muse: Hispanic Feminist Poems from the Middle Ages to the Present. New York: The Feminist Press, 1986.
- Fong, Gilbert C. F. The Other Shore: Plays by Gao Xingjian. Hong Kong: The Chinese University Press, 1999.
- Fortescue, William. Alphonse de Lamartine: A Political Biography. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1983.
- Fowlie, Wallace. Poem and Symbol: A Brief History of French Symbolism. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press, 1990.
- Franco, Jean. An Introduction to Spanish-American Literature. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994.
- Frank, Joseph. Dostoevsky: The Seeds of Revolt, 1821–1849. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1976.
- . Dostoevsky: The Years of Ordeal, 1850–1859. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1984.
- . Dostoevsky: The Years of Liberation, 1860–1865. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1986.
- . Dostoevsky: The Miraculous Years, 1865–1871. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1996.
- . Dostoevsky: The Mantle of the Prophet, 1871–1881. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 2002.
- Frantisek, Deak. Symbolist Theater: The Formation of an Avant-Garde. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1993.
- Freedman, Ralph. Life of a Poet: Rainer Maria Rilke. Chicago: Northwestern University Press, 1998.
- Frey, John A. A Victor Hugo Encyclopedia. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1999.
- Friedman, Lawrence. Understanding Isaac Bashevis Singer. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1988.
- Friedrich, Pia. Pier Paolo Pasolini. Boston: Twayne, 1982.
- Fusso, Susanne, ed. Essays on Karolina Pavlova. Chicago: Northwestern University Press, 2001.
- Garrard, John. Mikhail Lermontov. Boston: Twayne, 1982.
- Gatt-Rutter, John. Italo Svevo: A Double Life. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1988.
- . Oriana Fallaci: The Rhetoric of Freedom. Washington, D.C.: Berg, 1996.
- George, Stefan. The Works of Stefan George. Translated by Olga Marx and Ernst Morwitz. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1974.
- Gessel, Van C., and Tomone Matsumoto, eds. The Showa Anthology: Modern Japanese Short Stories. Tokyo: Kodansha International, 1985.
- Giergielewicz, Mieczyslaw. Henryk Sienkiewicz: A Biography. New York: Hippocrene, 1991.
- Gifford, Henry. Tolstoy. New York: Oxford University Press, 1982.
- Gifford, Paul, and Johnnie Gratton, eds. Subject Matters: Subject and Self in French Literature from Descartes to the Present. The Netherlands: Rodopi, 2000.
- Gikandi, Simon. Writing in Limbo: Modernism and Caribbean Literature. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1992.
- Giles, James, ed. French Existentialism: Consciousness, Ethics and Relations with Others. Atlanta: Rodopi, 1999.
- Goldberg, Anatol. Ilya Ehrenburg, Revolutionary, Novelist, Poet, War Correspondent, Propagandist: The Extraordinary Epic of a Russian Survivor. New York: Viking Press, 1984.
- Goldblatt, Howard, ed. Worlds Apart: Recent Chinese Writing and Its Audiences. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1990.
- Goldman, Merle. Modern Chinese Literature in the May Fourth Era. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1977.
- Gonzalez, Roberto E. Alejo Carpentier, The Pilgrim at Home. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1977.
- Goodwin, K. L. Understanding Poetry: A Study of Ten Poets. London, England: Heinemann, 1982.
- Gordon, Haim, ed. The Dictionary of Existentialism. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1999.
- Gordon, Haim. Naguib Mahfouz's Egypt: Existential Themes in his Writings. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1990.

- . Sartre's Philosophy and the Challenge of Education. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 2001.
- Gordon, Lois. The World of Samuel Beckett. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1996.
- Gotlieb, Vera, and Paul Allain, eds. The Cambridge Companion to Chekhov. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2000.
- Graham, Robb. Balzac: A Biography. New York: Norton, 1994.
- Grant, Judith S. Robertson Davies: Man of Myth. New York: Viking, 1994.
- Gray, Nancy. Language Unbound: On Experimental Writing by Women. Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1992.
- Green, Mary Jean, ed. Postcolonial Subjects: Francophone Women Writers. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1996.
- Greider, Jerome B. Hu Shih and the Chinese Renaissance: Liberalism in the Chinese Revolution, 1917–1937. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1970.
- Gross, John, ed. The Modern Movement. London: Harvill, 1992.
- Grossman, Joan. Valery Bryusov and the Riddle of Russian Decadence. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1985.
- Guibert, Rita. Seven Voices: Seven Latin American Writers Talk of Rita Guibert. Translated by Frances Partridge. New York: Knopf, 1972.
- Guicharnaud, Jacques. Raymond Queneau. Translated by June Guicharnaud. New York: Columbia University Press, 1965.
- Guignon, Charles and Derk Pereboom, eds. Existentialism: Basic Writings. Indianapolis, Ind.: Hackett, 2001.
- Guillen, Jorge. Guillen on Guillen: The Poetry and the Poet. Translated by Reginald Gibbons. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1979.
- Gupla, Suman. V. S. Naipaul. Plymouth, New Zealand: Northcote House in Association with the British Council, 1999.
- Haberly, David. Three Sad Races: Racial Identity and National Consciousness in Brazilian Literature. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1983.
- Hadda, Janet. Issaac Bashevis Singer: A Life. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997.
- Hale, Thomas, ed. Critical Perspectives on Aimé Césaire. Washington, D.C.: Three Continents Press, 1992.
- Hanrahan, Gene Z. Heavensent. London: J. M. Dent and Sons, 1951.
- Harris, Jane G. Osip Mandelstam. Boston: Twayne, 1988.
- Harris, Wilson. Selected Essays of Wilson Harris: The Unfinished Genesis of the Imagination. New York: Routledge, 1999.
- Harss, Luis, and Barbara Dohmann. Into the Mainstream: Conversations with Latin-American Writers. New York: Harper & Row, 1969.
- Hasek, Jaroslav. The Bachura Scandal and Other Stories and Sketches. Translated by Alan Menhennet. London, England: Angel, 1991.
- Hasluck, Nicholas. Anchor and Other Poems. Fremantle, Australia: Fremantle Arts Center Press, 1976.
- Hassall, Anthony J. Dancing on Hot MacAdam: Peter Carey's Fiction. St. Lucia, B.W.I.: University of Queensland Press, 1998.
- Hawley, John C., ed. Writing the Nation: Self and Country in the Postcolonial Imagination. The Netherlands: Rodopi, 1996.
- Havel, Václav. The Garden Party and Other Plays. New York: Grove Press, 1993.
- Hayman, Ronald. Eugène Ionesco. New York: Frederick Ungar, 1976.
- Head, Bessie. A Woman Alone: Autobiographical Writings. Oxford: Heinemann, 1990.
- Heilbut, Anthony. Thomas Mann: Eros and Literature. Riverside: University of California Press, 1997.
- Hemingway, Maurice. Emilia Pardo Bazan: The Making of a Novelist. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983.
- Herdan, Innes. The Pen and the Sword: Literature and Revolution in Modern China. London: Zed Books Ltd., 1992.
- Hermold, Joest. Heinrich Heine's Contested Identities: Politics, Religion, and Nationalism in Nineteenth Century Germany. New York: Peter Lang, 1999.

- Heron, G. A. The Poetry of Okot p'Bitek. London: Heinemann, 1976.
- Hettinga, Donald. The Brothers Grimm: Two Lives, One Legacy. London: Clarion Books, 2001.
- Hewitt, Nicholas. The Life of Celine: A Critical Biography. Malden, U.K.: Blackwell, 1999.
- Heywood, Christopher, ed. Aspects of South African Literature. New York: Africana, 1976.
- Higgonnet, Margaret R., and Joan Templeton, eds. Feminist Explorations of Literary Space. Amherst: University of Massachusetts Press, 1994.
- Hintz, Suzanne S. Rosario Ferre, A Search for Identity. New York: Peter Lang, 1995.
- Hsia, C. T. A History of Modern Chinese Literature. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1961.
- Hofmannsthal, Hugo von. The Lyrical Poems of Hugo von Hofmannsthal. Translated by Charles Wharton Stark. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1918.
- . Selected Plays and Libretti. Edited by Michael Hamburger. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000.
- Hogsett, Charlotte. The Literary Existence of Germain de Stael. Carbondale: Southern Illinois University Press, 1987.
- Holman, Martin. The Book of Masks. London: Readers International, 1976.
- Holub, Robert. Friedrich Nietzsche. Boston: Twayne, 1995.
- Hopwood, Mererid, and David Basker, eds. Sarah Kirsch. Cardiff: University of Wales Press, 1997.
- Horn, Pierre L. Marguerite Yourcenar. Boston: Twayne, 1985.
- Howells, Christina, ed. The Cambridge Companion to Sartre. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1992.
- Howells, Coral A. Alice Munro. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1998.
- Huggan, Graham. Peter Carey. Oxford, England: Oxford University Press, 1997.
- Hulme, Peter, and William H. Sherman. The Tempest and Its Travels. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2000.
- Hyslop, Lois B. Charles Baudelaire Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1992.
- Idema, Wilt L., and Lloyd L. Haft. A Guide to Chinese Literature. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Center for Chinese Studies, 1997.
- Ilie, Paul. Unamuno; An Existential View of Self and Society. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 1967.
- Indyk, Ivor. David Malouf. New York: Oxford University Press, 1993.
- Innes, C. L. Chinua Achebe. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1992.
- Ito, Ken K. Vision of Desire: Tanizaki's Fictional Worlds. Stanford: Stanford University Press, 1991.
- Ivask, Ivar. The Perpetual Present: The Poetry and Prose of Octavio Paz. Norman: University of Oklahoma Press, 1973.
- Jack, Belinda E. George Sand: A Woman's Life Writ Large. London: Chatto and Windus, 1999.
- Janecek, Gerald. Andrey Bely: A Critical Review. Lexington: Kentucky University Press, 1978.
- Jeannet, Angela M., and Giuliana Sanguinetti Katz, eds. Natalia Ginzburg: A Voice of the Twentieth Century. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2000.
- Ji-Moon, Suh, and Julie Pickering. The Descendants of Cain. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, Inc., 1997.
- Jolly, Rosemary. Colonization, Violence, and Narration in White South African Writing: André Brink, Breyten Breytenbach, and J. M. Coetzee. Athens: Ohio University Press, 1996.
- Jonsson, Stephen. Subject Without a Nation: Robert Musil and the History of Modern Identity. Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 2001.
- Jrade, Cathy. Rubén Darío and the Romantic Search for Unity: The Modernist Recourse to Esoteric Tradition. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1983.
- Kain, Geoffrey R., ed. R. K. Narayan. Contemporary Critical Perspectives. East Lansing: Michigan State University Press, 1993.
- Kalb, Jonathon. The Theater of Heiner Müller. Munich, Germany: C. H. Beck, 1984.
- Kamber, Richard. On Sartre. Belmont, Calif.: Wadsworth, 1999.
- Kanes, Martin. Père Goriot: Anatomy of a Troubled World. Boston: Twayne, 1993.

- Kanes, Martin, ed. Critical Essays on Honoré de Balzac. Boston: G. K. Hall, 1990.
- Kanik, Orhan V. I. Orhan Veli: Poems by Orhan Veli. Translated by Murat Nemet-Nejat. Brooklyn, N.Y.: Hanging Loose Press, 1989.
- Karsen, Sonja. Jaime Torres Bodet; A Poet in a Changing World. Saratoga Springs, N.Y.: Skidmore College, 1963.
- Kaschnitz, Marie L. Selected Later Poems of Marie Luise Kaschnitz. Translated by Lisel Mueller. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1980.
- . Circe's Mountain: Stories by Marie Luise Kaschnitz. Translated by Lisel Mueller. Minneapolis: Milkweed Editions, 1990.
- Katrak, Ketu. Wole Soyinka and Modern Tragedy: A Study of Dramatic Theory and Practice. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1986.
- Keats, Jonathan. Stendhal. London: Sinclair-Stevenson, 1994.
- Keeley, Edmund. Cavafy's Alexandria. Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1995.
- Keene, Donald. Dawn to the West: Japanese Literature of the Modern Era: Fiction. New York: Columbia University Press, 1998.
- Keene, Donald, ed. Modern Japanese Literature. New York: Grove Press, 1956.
- Kemp-Welch, A. Stalin and the Literary Intelligentsia, 1928–1939. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1991.
- Ketchian, Sonia I. The Poetic Craft of Bella Akhmadulina. University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press, 1993.
- Keys, Roger. The Reluctant Modernist: Andrei Belyi and the Development of Russian Fiction. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1996.
- Khan, Md. Akhtar Jamal. V. S. Naipaul: A Critical Study. New Delhi: Creative Books, 1998.
- Killam, G. D. An Introduction to the Writings of Ngugi. London: Heinemann, 1980.
- King, Bruce. Derek Walcott, a Caribbean Life. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000.
- . V. S. Naipaul. London: Macmillan, 1993.
- King, Michael. Wrestling with the Angel: A Life of Janet Frame. Washington, D.C.: Counterpoint Press, 2000.
- Kipalani, Krishan. Rabindranath Tagore: A Biography. London: Oxford University Press, 1962.
- Kirsner, Robert. The Novels and Travels of Camilo Jose Cela. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 1964.
- Klein, Leonard S. Latin American Literature in the 20th Century. New York: Frederick Ungar, 1986.
- Kluback, William. Paul Valery: A Philosopher for Philosophers: The Sage. New York: Peter Lang, 2000.
- Knapp, Bettina L. Jean Cocteau. Boston: Twayne, 1989.
- . Maurice Maeterlinck. Boston: Twayne, 1975.
- . Nathalie Sarraute. Atlanta, Ga.: Rodopi, 1994.
- . Paul Claudel. New York: Frederick Ungar, 1982.
- Knight, Kelton W. Anne Hebert: In Search of the First Garden. New York: Peter Lang, 1998.
- Knowles, Anthony V. Ivan Turgenev. Boston: Twayne, 1988.
- Knowlson, James. Damned to Fame: The Life of Samuel Beckett. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1996.
- Knox, Bernard. Backing into the Future: The Classical Tradition and Its Renewal. New York: Norton, 1994.
- Kobler, J. F. Katherine Mansfield: A Study of the Short Fiction. Boston: Twayne, 1990.
- Koepke, Wulf. Understanding Max Frisch. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1991.
- Kolbert, Jack. The Worlds of Elie Wiesel: An Overview of His Career and Major Themes. Selinsgrove, Pa.: Susquehanna University Press, 2001.
- Kolinsky, Eva, and Wilfried van der Will, eds. The Cambridge Companion to Modern German Culture. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1998.
- Kossoff, Philip. Valiant Heart: A Biography of Heinrich Heine. London: Cornwall Books, 1983.
- Kostalevsky, Marina. Dostoevsky and Soloviev: The Art of Integral Vision. New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 1997.
- Kourilsky, Françoise, and Catherine Temerson. Plays by Women: An International Anthology. New York: Ubu Repertory Theatre Publications, 1989.

- Kremer, Roberta S., ed. Memory and Mastery: Primo Levi as Writer and Witness. Albany: State University of New York Press, 2001.
- Kriseova, Eda. Václav Havel: The Authorized Biography. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1993.
- Krispyn, Egbert. Gunter Eich. Boston: Twayne, 1971.
- Kunene, Mazisi. The Ancestors and the Sacred Mountain. London: Heinemann, 1982.
- Kuo, Helena. The Quest for Love of Lao Lee. New York: Reynal and Hitchcock, 1948.
- Kurahashi Yumiko. The Woman with the Flying Head and Other Stories of Kurahashi Yumiko. Translated by Atsuko Sakaki. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1998.
- Kurpershoek, P. M. The Short Stories of Yusuf Idris: A Modern Egyptian Author. Leiden, The Netherlands: Brill, 1981.
- Lacoue-Labarthe, Philippe, ed. The Literary Absolute: The Theory of Literature in German Romanticism. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1988.
- Lagercrantz, Olaf. August Strindberg. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1984.
- Lahusen, Thomas. How Life Writes the Book: Real Socialism and Socialist Realism in Stalin's Russia. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1997.
- Larson, Wendy. Women and Writing in Modern China. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1998.
- Last, Rex W. German Dadaist Literature: Kurt Schitlers, Hugo Ball, Hans Arp. Boston: Twayne, 1973.
- Lau, Joseph S. M., and Howard Goldblatt, eds. The Columbia Anthology of Modern Chinese Literature. New York: Columbia University Press, 1995.
- Lawrie, Steven W. Erich Fried: A Writer Without a Country. New York: Peter Lang, 1996.
- Leatherborrow, William J. Fedor Dostoevsky: A Reference Guide. Boston: G. K. Hall, 1990.
- Lederer, Wolfgang. The Kiss of the Snow Queen: Hans Christian Andersen and Man's Redemption by Woman. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1990.
- Lednicki, Waclaw. Adam Mickiewicz in World Literature. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1956.
- Lee, Leo Ou-fan. Voices from the Iron House: A Study of Lu Xun. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1987.
- Lee, Mabel. Soul Mountain. New York: HarperCollins, 1999.
- Lee, Peter H., ed. The Silence of Love: Twentieth-Century Korean Poetry. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1980.
- Le Gassick, Trevor, ed. Critical Perspectives on Naguib Mahfouz. Washington, D.C.: Three Continents Press, 1991.
- Lennon, Nigey. Alfred Jarry: The Man with the Axe. Los Angeles: Panjandrm Books, 1984.
- Lerner, Michael G. Maupassant. New York: G. Braziller, 1975.
- Lindfors, Bernth. Dem-Say: Interviews with Eight Nigerian Authors. Austin, Tex.: African and Afro-American Studies and Research Center, 1974.
- . Conversations with Chinua Achebe. Jackson: University Press of Mississippi, 1997.
- Linn, Rolf N. Heinrich Mann. Boston: Twayne, 1967.
- Lippit, Noriko, and Kyoko Selden, eds. Stories by Contemporary Japanese Women Writers. New York: M. E. Sharpe, 1982.
- Lloyd, Rosemary. Mallarmé: The Poet and His Circle. Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1999.
- Lokke, Kari. Gerard de Nerval: The Poet as Social Visionary. Lexington, Ky.: French Forum, 1987.
- Lombard, Charles M. Lamartine. Boston: Twayne, 1973.
- Long, J. J. The Novels of Thomas Bernhard: Form and Its Function. Rochester, N.Y.: Camden House, 2001.
- Loose, Gerhard. Ernst Junger. Boston: Twayne, 1974.
- Luce, Jacqui, and Don Luce. Quiet Courage: Poems from Viet Nam. Washington, D.C.: Indochina Mobile Education Project, 1974.
- Lukacs, Georg. The Theory of the Novel. Translated by Anna Bostock. Cambridge, Mass.: MIT Press, 1974.
- Lutzeler, Paul M. Hermann Broch: A Biography. Translated by Janice Fureness. London: Quarter, 1987.

- Lyell, William A. Cat Country: A Satirical Novel of China in the 1930s. Columbus: Ohio State University Press, 1970.
- . Lu Hsun's Vision of Reality. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1976.
- Lykiard, Alexis. Jean Rhys Revisited. Exeter, U.K.: Stride Publications, 2000.
- MacDonald, Paul S., ed. The Existentialist Reader: An Anthology of Key Texts. New York: Routledge, 2001.
- Magidoff, Robert, ed. Russian Science Fiction: An Anthology. Translated by Doris Johnson. New York: New York University Press, 1964.
- Magill, Frank N. Masterpieces of Latino Literature. New York: HarperCollins, 1994.
- Magnarelli, Sharon. Understanding Jose Donoso. Columbia: University of South Carolina, 1993.
- Makward, Edris, et al. The Growth of African Literature. Lawrenceville, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1998.
- Malik, Hafeez, ed. Iqbal, Poet-Philosopher of Pakistan. New York: Columbia University Press, 1971.
- Malti-Douglas, Fedwa. Men, Women, and God: Nawal El Saadawi and Arab Feminist Poetics. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1995.
- Mandel, Siegfried. Group 47: The Reflected Intellect. Edwardsville: Southern Illinois University Press, 1973.
- Mann, Heinrich. Henry, King of France. Translated by Eric Sutton. New York: Knopf, 1939.
- Mao, Chen. Between Tradition and Change: The Hermeneutics of May Fourth Literature. Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1997.
- Marable, Manning, ed. Dispatches from the Ebony Tower. New York: Columbia University Press, 2000.
- Marcus, Marvin. Paragons of the Ordinary: The Biographical Literature of Mori Ogai. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1993.
- Marinetti, F. T. The Futurist Cookbook. Translated by Suzanne Brill, edited and introduction by Lesley Chamberlain. San Francisco: Bedford Arts, 1989.
- Maron, Monika. Silent Close No. 6. Translated by David Newton Marinelli. Columbia, La.: Reader's International, 1993.
- Marr, David. Patrick White: A Life. New York: Knopf, 1991.
- Martin, Helmut, and Jeffrey Kinkley, eds. Modern Chinese Writers: Self-Portrayals. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1992.
- Masaoka Shiki. Masaoka Shiki: Selected Poems. Translated by Burton Watson. New York: Columbia University Press, 1997.
- Massardier-Kenney, Françoise. Gender in the Fiction of George Sand. Atlanta: Rodopi, 2000.
- Mathy, Frances. Shiga Naoya. Boston: Twayne, 1974.
- Matthews, J. H. Theatre in Dada and Surrealism. Syracuse, N.Y.: Syracuse University Press, 1974.
- McBride, William. Sartre's Life, Times and Vision-du-Monde. New York: Garland, 1997.
- McDougall, Bonnie S., and Kam Louie. The Literature of China in the Twentieth Century. New York: Columbia University Press, 1997.
- McGlatheery, James. E. T. A. Hoffmann. Boston: Twayne, 1997.
- McGuinness, Patrick, ed. Symbolism, Decadence and the Fin de Siècle: French and European Perspectives. Exeter, U.K.: University of Exeter Press, 2000.
- McLaughlin, Martin. Italo Calvino. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 1998.
- McRae, Robert. Resistance and Revolution. Ottawa: Carleton University Press, 1997.
- Meeks, Brian. Voiceprint: An Anthology of Oral and Related Poetry from the Caribbean. Essex, England: Longman Group UK Limited, 1989.
- Mellown, Elgin W. Jean Rhys: A Descriptive and Annotated Bibliography of Works and Criticism. New York: Garland, 1984.
- Merini, Rafika. Two Major Francophone Women Writers: Assia Djebar and Leila Sebbar: A Thematic Study of Their Works. New York: Peter Lang, 1999.
- Metzger, Michael M., and Erika A Metzger. Stefan George. Boston: Twayne, 1972.
- Meyer, Michael. Strindberg: A Biography. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1987.

- Mileck, Joseph. Hermann Hesse: Life and Art. Riverside: University of California Press, 1981.
- Miller, Yvette E., and Charles Rossman. Gabriel García Márquez. Pittsburgh, Pa.: University of Pittsburgh, 1985.
- Milosz, Czeslaw. The History of Polish Literature. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1983.
- Mistral, Gabriela. Selected Poems. Translated Doris Dana. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1971.
- Misurrella, Fred. Understanding Milan Kundera: Public Events, Private Affairs. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1993.
- Mitchell, Stephen. Freud and Beyond: A History of Modern Psychoanalytical Thought. New York: Basic Books, 1996.
- Mitler, Louis. Contemporary Turkish Writers: A Critical Bio-Bibliography. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1988.
- Moon, Vasant. Growing up Untouchable in India: A Dalit Autobiography. Translated by Gail Omvedt. New Delhi: Vistaar Publishing, 2002.
- Moore, Gerald. Twelve African Writers. London: Hutchinson University Library for Africa, 1980.
- Moosa, Matti. The Early Novels of Naguib Mahfouz: Images of Modern Egypt. Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 1994.
- Moran, Dominic. Questions of the Liminal in the Fiction of Julio Cortázar. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001.
- Mortimer, Armine K. Writing Realism: Representations in French Fiction. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2000.
- Mortimer, Mildred P. Journeys Through the French African Novel. Westport, Conn.: Heinemann, 1990.
- Mortimer, Mildred P., ed. Maghrebian Mosaic: A Literature in Transition. Boulder, Colo.: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2001.
- Moses, Claire G. Feminism, Socialism and French Romanticism. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1993.
- Mueller, Heiner. A Heiner Muller Reader: Plays, Poetry, Prose. Translated by Carl Weber. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2001.
- Mulhern, Chieko I., ed. Japanese Women Writers: A Bio-critical Sourcebook. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1994.
- Munsterer, Hanns Otto. The Young Brecht. Concord, Mass.: Paul and Company Publishers Consortium, 1992.
- Naess, Harald. Knut Hamsun. Boston: Twayne, 1984.
- Naipaul, V. S. Between Father and Son: Family Letters. New York: Vintage Books, 2001.
- . Half a Life. New York: Knopf, 2001.
- Nantell, Judith. Rafael Alberti's Poetry of the Thirties: The Poet's Public Voice. Athens: University of Georgia Press, 1986.
- Napier, Susan. Escape from the Wasteland: Romanticism and Realism in the Fiction of Mishima Yukio and Ōe Kenzaburō. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1991.
- Naughton, John. The Poetics of Yves Bonnefoy. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1984.
- Naravane, Vishwanath S. Sarojini Naidu: An Introduction to Her Life, Work, and Poetry. New Delhi: Orient Longman Ltd., 1996.
- Nasta, Sheila, ed. Motherlands: Black Women's Writing from Africa. New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 1992.
- Nathan, John. Mishima: A Biography. New York: Da Capo Press, 2000.
- Nathan, Leonard, and Arthur Quinn. The Poet's Work: An Introduction to Czeslaw Milosz. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1991.
- Nathan, Robert L. The Dreamtime. Woodstock, N.Y.: Overlook Press, 1975.
- Nelson, Emmanuel S., ed. Contemporary African American Novelists: A Bio-Bibliographical Critical Sourcebook. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1999.
- Nevin, Thomas. Ernst Junger and Germany: Into the Abyss, 1914–1945. Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 1997.
- Niebylski, Dianna C. The Poem on the Edge of the Word: The Limits of Language and the Uses of Silence in the Poetry of Mallarmé, Rilke and Vallejo. New York: Peter Lang, 1993.
- Nieh, Hauling. Literature of the Hundred Flowers. New York: Columbia University Press, 1981.

- Nugent, Robert. Paul Éluard. Boston: Twayne, 1974.
- Oba Minako. Stories by Contemporary Japanese Women Writers. Translated by Noriko Mizuta Lip-pit and Kyoko Irye Selden. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1982.
- O'Ceallachain, Eanna. Eugenio Montale: The Poetry of Later Years. Oxford: Legenda, 2001.
- O'Healey, Aine. Cesare Pavese. Boston: Twayne, 1988.
- O'Neil, Patrick. Günter Grass Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1999.
- Osbourne, John. Gerhart Hauptmann and the Naturalist Drama. London: Routledge, 1999.
- Painter, George D. Chateaubriand: A Biography. New York: Knopf, 1978.
- Pandurang, Mala. Vikram Seth: Multiple Locations, Multiple Affiliation. New Delhi: Rawat, 2001.
- Panny, Judith D. I Have What I Gave: The Fiction of Janet Frame. New York: George Braziller, 1993.
- Paperno, Irina. Chernyshevsky and the Age of Realism. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1988.
- Paravisini-Gerber, Elizabeth. Jamaica Kincaid: A Critical Companion. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1999.
- Parrot, Cecil. The Bad Bohemian: The Life of Jaroslav Hašek, Creator of the Good Soldier Svejk. London, England: Bodley Head, 1978.
- Partridge, Monica. Alexander Herzen. Paris: Unesco, 1984.
- Patt, Beatrice P. Pío Baroja y Nessi. Boston: Twayne, 1971.
- Paul, Georgina, and Helmut Schmitz, eds. Entgegenkommen: Dialogues with Barbara Kohler. Atlanta, Ga.: Rodopi, 2000.
- Peixoto, Marta. Passionate Fictions: Gender, Narrative, and Violence in Clarice Lispector. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1994.
- Peled, Mattityahu. Religion My Own: The Literary Works of Najib Mahfuz. New Brunswick, N.J.: Transaction Books, 1983.
- Pelensky, Olga A. Isak Dinesen: Critical Views. Athens: Ohio University Press, 1993.
- Penrod, Lynn. Hélène Cixous. Boston: Twayne, 1996.
- Peretz, Isaac L. Selected Stories. Translated by Eli Katz. New York: Zhitlowsky Foundation for Jewish Culture, 1991.
- Peterman, Michael. Robertson Davies. Boston: Twayne, 1986.
- Peterson, Thomas E. Alberto Moravia. Boston: Twayne, 1996.
- Petro, Peter, ed. Critical Essays on Milan Kundera. New York: G. K. Hall, 1999.
- Pfaff, Francoise. The Cinema of Ousmane Sembene, a Pioneer of African Film. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1984.
- Pilarde, Jo-Ann. Simone de Beauvoir Writing the Self: Philosophy Becomes Autobiography. Westport, Conn.: Praeger, 1999.
- Piore, Nance K. Lightning: The Poetry of René Char. Boston: Northeastern University Press, 1981.
- Plunka, Gene A., ed. Antonin Artaud and the Modern Theatre. Madison, N.J.: Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1994.
- Polcari, Stephanie. Abstract Expressionism and the Modern Experience. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993.
- Popkin, Michael, ed. Modern Black Writers. New York: Frederick Ungar, 1978.
- Porter, Laurence M. Victor Hugo. Boston: Twayne, 1999.
- Preston, Paul. Salvador de Madariaga and the Quest for Liberty in Spain. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1987.
- Proffer, Ellendea. A Pictorial Biography of Mikhail Bulgakov. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Ardis, 1984.
- Prokushev, Yuri. Sergei Yesenin: The Man, the Verse, the Age. Moscow: Progress Publishers, 1979.
- Pulver, Elsbeth. Marie Luise Kaschnitz. Munich, Germany: C. H. Beck, 1984.
- Putnam, Walter. Paul Valéry Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1995.
- Rabson, Steve. Righteous Cause or Tragic Folly: Changing Views of War in Modern Japanese Poetry. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan, Center for Japanese Studies, 1998.
- Rai, Amrit. Premchand: His Life and Times. New York: Oxford University Press, 2002.
- Rayfield, Donal. Anton Chekhov: A Life. Chicago: Northwestern University Press, 2000.
- Reddick, John. Georg Büchner: The Shattered Whole. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1994.

- Redwitz, Eckenbert. The Image of the Woman in the Works of Ingeborg Bachmann. New York: Peter Lang, 1993.
- Reeder, Roberta. Anna Akhmatova: Poet and Prophet. New York: Picador, 1995.
- Reid, J. H. Narration and Description in the French Realist Novel: The Temporality of Lying and Forgetting. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993.
- Reiss, Timothy J. For the Geography of a Soul: Emerging Perspectives on Kamau Brathwaite. Lawrenceville, N.J.: Africa World Press, 2001.
- Resch, Margit. Understanding Christa Wolf: Retuning Home to a Foreign Land. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1997.
- Rhys, Jean. The Collected Short Stories. New York: Norton, 1978.
- Ribbans, Geoffrey. History and Fiction in Galdós's Narratives. London, England: Oxford University Press, 1993.
- Rice, Martin P. Valery Bruisov and the Rise of Russian Symbolism. Ann Arbor, Mich: Ardis, 1975.
- Richardson, Angelique, and Chris Willis, eds. The New Woman in Fiction and in Fact: Fin de Siècle Feminisms. New York: Palgrave, 2001.
- Richardson, Joanna. Baudelaire. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1994.
- Ridge, George R. Joris-Karl Huysmans. Boston: Twayne, 1968.
- Rimer, John T. Mori Ōgai. Boston: Twayne, 1975.
- Ritchie, J. M. Gottfried Benn: The Unreconstructed Expressionist. London: Oswald Wolff, 1972.
- Robb, Graham. Arthur Rimbaud. New York: Norton, 2000.
- Robbe-Grillet, Alain. For a New Novel: Essays on Fiction. Translated by Richard Howard. New York: Grove Press, 1966.
- Robin, Regine. Socialist Realism: An Impossible Aesthetic. Translated by Catherine Porter. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1991.
- Robinson, Roger, and Nelson Wattie, eds. The Oxford Companion to New Zealand Literature. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998.
- Robson, Clifford. Ngugi wa Thiong'o. London: Macmillan, 1979.
- Rojas, Sonia R., and Edna Aguirre Rehbeim, eds. Critical Approaches to Isabel Allende's Novels. New York: Peter Lang, 1991.
- Rose, Henry. Henrik Ibsen: Poet, Mystic, and Moralist. New York: Haskell, 1972.
- Roumani, Judith. Albert Memmi. Philadelphia: Celfan, 1987.
- Rowley, Hazel. Christina Stead: A Biography. New York: Henry Holt & Company, 1995.
- Rubin, Jay, ed. Modern Japanese Writers. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 2001.
- Russell, Ralph. Ghālib. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1969.
- Sachs, Nelly. The Seeker, and Other Poems. Translated by Ruth Mead, Matthew Mead, and Michael Hamburger. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1970.
- Safransky, Rudiger. Nietzsche: A Philosophical Biography. New York: Norton, 2001.
- Saint, Nigel. Marguerite Yourcenar: Reading the Visual. Oxford: Legenda, 2000.
- Salma, Jayyusi. Trends and Movements in Modern Arabic Poetry. Leiden, The Netherlands: Brill, 1977.
- Samson, Earl. Nikolai Gumilev. Boston: Twayne, 1979.
- Samuel, Maurice. The World of Sholom Aleichem. New York: Dramatists Play Series, 1948.
- San Juan, E. Aimé Césaire: Surrealism and Revolution. Bowling Green, Ohio: Bowling Green State University Press, 2000.
- . From the Masses, to the Masses: Third World Literature and Revolution. Minneapolis: MEP Publications, 1994.
- Savory, Elaine. Jean Rhys. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1999.
- Scammell, Michael. Solzhenitsyn: A Biography. New York: Norton, 1984.
- Schalow, Paul G., and Janet A. Walker, eds. The Woman's Hand: Gender and Theory in Japanese Women's Writing. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1996.
- Schierbeck, Sachiko. Japanese Women Novelists in the Twentieth Century: 104 Biographies 1900–1993. Copenhagen: Museum Tusulanum Press, 1994.

- Schiff, Stacy. Saint-Exupéry: A Biography. New York: Knopf, 1995.
- Schoolfield, George C. Edith Sodergran: Modernist Poet in Finland. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1984.
- Scholtz, Sally. On de Beauvoir. Belmont, Calif.: Wadsworth/Thomson Learning, 2000.
- Schulte-Sasse, Jochen, ed. Theory as Practice: An Anthology of Early German Romantic Writings. Indianapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1997.
- Schulze, Julia. Rigoberta Menchu Tum: Champion of Human Rights. New York: Burke, John Gordon Publisher, Inc., 1997.
- Schwarz, Roberto. Misplaced Ideas: Essays on Brazilian Culture. New York: Verso, 1992.
- Schwartz, Ronald. Spain's New Wave Novelists, 1950–1974. Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 1976.
- Schwartz-Bart, Simone. Between Two Worlds. Translated by Barbara Bray. New York: Harper & Row, 1981.
- . The Bridge and Beyond. Translated by Barbara Bray. New York: Atheneum, 1974.
- Schweitzer, Victoria. Tsvetaeva. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1993.
- Schwertfeger, Ruth. Else Lasker-Schuler: Inside This Deathly Solitude. Oxford: Berg Publishers, Ltd., 1991.
- Scott-Stokes, Henry. The Life and Death of Yukio Mishima. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1974.
- Seifert, Jaroslav. The Early Poetry of Jaroslav Seifert. Translated by Dana Loewy. Evanston, Ill.: Hydra Books, 1997.
- Sergio, Pacifici, ed. From Verismo to Experimentalism: Essays on the Modern Italian Novel. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1970.
- Shaked, Gershon. Shmuel Yosef Agnon: A Revolutionary Traditionalist. Translated by Jeffery M. Green. New York: New York University Press, 1989.
- Sharman, Adam, ed. The Poetry and Poetics of César Vallejo: The Fourth Angle of the Circle. Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 1997.
- Sharpe, Lesley. Friedrich Schiller: Drama, Thought, and Politics. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991.
- Shava, Piniel. A People's Voice: Black South African Writing in the Twentieth Century. London: Zed Books, 1989.
- Sheridan, Susan. Christina Stead. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1988.
- Silva, A. J. Simoes da. The Luxury of Nationalist Despair: George Lamming's Fiction as Decolonizing Project. Atlanta, Ga.: Rodopi, 2000.
- Simms, Norman. Silence and Invisibility: A Study of the New Literature from the Pacific. Washington, D.C.: Three Continents Press, 1986.
- Simons, Margaret. A. Beauvoir and the Second Sex: Feminism, Race and the Origins of Existentialism. Boston: Lanham, Rowman and Littlefield, 1999.
- Simpson, Michael, and John Untfreckner. Dreams of the Rainbow: Poems by Kauraka Kauraka. Honolulu: University of Hawaii at Manoa, East-West Center, 1986.
- Singh, Amritjit, Joseph T. Skerrett, Jr., and Robert E. Hogan, eds. Memory and Cultural Politics: New Approaches to American Ethnic Literatures. Ann Arbor, Mich.: Edwards Brothers, 1996.
- Singh, G. Leopardi and the Theory of Poetry. Lexington: University of Kentucky Press, 1964.
- Smart, Ian I. Nicolas Guillen, Popular Poet of the Caribbean. Columbia: University of Missouri Press, 1990.
- Smethurst, Colin. Chateaubriand, Atala and René. London: Grant and Cutler, 1995.
- Smith, Roch C. Understanding Alain Robbe-Grillet. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 2000.
- Snyder, Stephen, and Philip Gabriel, eds. Ōe and Beyond: Fiction in Contemporary Japan. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1999.
- Sodergran, Edith. Love and Solitude: Selected Poems, 1916–1923. Translated by Stina Katchadourian. Seattle: Fjord Press, 1985.
- Sole, Carlos A. Latin American Writers. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1989.
- Solecki, Sam. Prague Blues: The Fiction of Josef Skvorecky. New York: Ecco Press, 1990.
- Soto, Francisco. Reinaldo Arenas. Boston: Twayne, 1998.

- Spector, Robert D. Pär Lagerkvist. Boston: Twayne, 1973.
- Spivak, Gayatri. In Other Worlds: Essays in Cultural Politics. New York: Routledge, 1987.
- Stafford, Helene. Mallarmé and the Poetics of Everyday Life: A Study of the Concept of the Ordinary in His Verse and Prose. Atlanta, Ga.: Rodopi, 2000.
- Standish, Peter. Understanding Julio Cortázar. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 2001.
- Stavans, Ilan. Julio Cortázar: A Study of the Short Fiction. Boston: Twayne, 1996.
- Stead, C. K. In the Glass Case: Essays on New Zealand Literature. Auckland, N.Z.: Auckland University Press, 1981.
- . Kin of Place: Essays on New Zealand Writers. Auckland, N.Z.: Auckland University Press, 2002.
- Stephan, Halina. Translating the Absurd: Drama and Prose of Slawomir Mrozek. The Netherlands: Rodopi, 1997.
- Sterling, Richard L. The Prose Works of Saint-John Perse: Towards an Understanding of His Poetry. New York: Peter Lang, 1994.
- Stevens, Shelley. Rosalía de Castro and the Galician Revival. London: Tamesis Books Ltd., 1986.
- Stilman, Leon. Gogol. New York: Columbia University Press, 1990.
- Stratton, Florence. Contemporary African Literature and the Politics of Gender. New York: Routledge, 1994.
- Strauss, J. Judith Wright. Melbourne: Oxford University Press, 1995.
- Strong-Boag, Veronica J., and Carole Gerson. Paddling Her Own Canoe: The Times and Texts of E. Pauline Johnson. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2000.
- Sucher, Laurie. The Fiction of Ruth Praver Jhabvala: The Politics of Passion. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1989.
- Suk, Jeannie. Postcolonial Paradoxes in French Caribbean Writing: Césaire, Glissant, Condé. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 2001.
- Szyborska, Wislawa. Miracle Fair: Selected Poems of Wislawa Szymborska. Translated by Joanna Trzeciak. New York: Norton, 2001.
- Talbot, Emile J. Stendhal Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1993.
- Tam Kwok-kan. Soul of Chaos: Critical Perspectives on Gao Xingjian. Hong Kong: The Chinese University Press, 2001.
- Tanaka, Yukiko, ed. To Love and to Write: Selections by Japanese Women Writers 1913–1938. Seattle: Seal Press, 1987.
- Tapia, John R. The Indian in the Spanish-American Novel. Durango, Colo.: University Press of America, 1981.
- Tarabishi, George. Woman Against Her Sex: A Critique of Nawal El-Saadawi, with a Reply by Nawal El-Saadawi. London: Al-Saqi Books, 1988.
- Terras, Victor. Vladimir Mayakovsky. Boston: Twayne, 1983.
- Thomas, H. Elias Canetti. Boston: Twayne, 1993.
- Thurman, Judith. Isak Dinesen: The Life of a Storyteller. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1982.
- . Secrets of the Flesh: A Life of Colette. New York: Knopf, 1999.
- Tisdall, Caroline, and Angela Bozolla. Futurism. Oxford, England: Oxford University Press, 1978.
- Tollerson, Marie. Mythology and Cosmology in the Narratives of Bernard Dadie and Birago Diop. Washington, D.C.: Three Continents Press, 1984.
- Tomalin, Claire. Katherine Mansfield: A Secret Life. New York: Knopf, 1988.
- Tong-gyu Hwang. Strong Winds at Mishu Pass. Groveport, Ohio: White Pines Press, 2001.
- . Wind Burial: Selected Poems of Hwang Tong-gyu. Laurenberg, N.C.: St. Andrew's Press, 1990.
- Treat, John W., ed. Contemporary Japan and Popular Culture. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 1996.
- Treece, David. Exiles, Allies, Rebels: Brazil's Indianist Movement, Indigenist Politics, and the Imperial Nation-State. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 2000.
- Trump, Martin. Rendering Things Visible: Essays on South African Literary Culture. Athens: Ohio University Press, 1990.
- Tsatsos, Ioanna. My Brother George Seferis. Translated by Jean Demos. St. Paul, Minn.: North Central, 1982.
- Tuwim, Julian. The Dancing Socrates, and Other Poems. Translated by Adam Gillon. Boston: Twayne, 1968.

- Ueda Makoto. Modern Japanese Writers. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1976.
- Umeh, Marie, ed. Emerging Perspectives on Flora Nwapa. Lawrenceville, N.J.: Africa World Press, 1998.
- Unger, Richard. Friedrich Holderlin. Boston: Twayne, 1984.
- Uraizee, Joya F. This Is No Place for a Woman: Nadine Gordimer, Nayantara Sahgal, Buchi Emecheta, and the Politics of Gender. Lawrenceville, N.J.: Africa World Press, 2000.
- Vernon, Victoria V. Daughters of the Moon: Wish, Will and Social Constraint in Fiction by Modern Japanese Women. Berkeley: University of California Press, Institute of East Asian Studies, 1988.
- Viain, Robert. The Poetry of Hugo von Hofmannsthal and French Symbolism. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000.
- Vohra, Ranbir. Lao She and the Chinese Revolution. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, East Asian Research Center, 1974.
- Vucinich, Wayne, ed. Ivo Andric Revisited: The Bridge Still Stands. Berkeley: University of California Regents, 1996.
- Wade, Michael. Peter Abrahams. London: Evans Bros., 1972.
- Wagner, Irmagard. Goethe. Boston: Twayne, 1999.
- Wagner, Rudolf G. Inside a Service Trade: Studies in Contemporary Chinese Prose. Cambridge, Mass.: Council on East Asian Studies, Harvard University, 1992.
- Wall, Cheryl, ed. Changing Our Own Words: Essays on Criticism, Theory, and Writing by Black Women. Piscataway, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 1989.
- Watts, Jane. Black Writers from South Africa: Towards a Discourse of Liberation. New York: St. Martin's Press, 1989.
- Weimar, Karl S., ed. German Language and Literature: Seven Essays. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice Hall, 1974.
- Weiss, Beno. Italo Svevo. Boston: Twayne, 1987.
- . Understanding Italo Calvino. Columbia: University of South Carolina Press, 1995.
- Weiss, Timothy F. On the Margins: The Art of Exile in V. S. Naipaul. Boston: University of Massachusetts Press, 1992.
- Wellington, Beth. Reflections on Lorca's Private Mythology: Once Five Years Pass and the Rural Plays. New York: Peter Lang, 1993.
- Welsh, David J. Adam Mickiewicz. Boston: Twayne, 1966.
- White, Clement A. Decoding the Word: Nicolas Guillen as Maker and Debunker of Myth. Miami, Fla.: Universal, 1993.
- Whitford, Frank. Oskar Kokoschka: A Life. New York: Atheneum, 1986.
- Whitmore, Katherine P. R. The Generation of 1898 in Spain as Seen Through Its Fictional Hero. Northampton, Mass.: Smith College, 1936.
- Willbanks, Ray. Australian Voices: Writers and Their Work. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1991.
- Williams, Eric, ed. The Dark Flutes of Fall: Critical Essays on Georg Trakl. Rochester, N.Y.: Camden House, 1991.
- Williams, John. Goethe: A Critical Biography. Oxford, England: Blackwell Publishers, 2001.
- Williams, Raymond L. The Writings of Carlos Fuentes. Austin: University of Texas Press, 1996.
- Wilson, Machiko N. The Marginal World of Ōe Kenzaburō: A Study in Themes and Techniques. Armonk, N.Y.: M. E. Sharpe, 1986.
- Wisse, Ruth R. I. L. Peretz and the Making of Modern Jewish Culture. Seattle: University of Washington Press, 1991.
- Wolf, Christa. Cassandra: A Novel and Four Essays. Translated by Jan van Heurck. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1984.
- Wolfe, Peter, ed. Critical Essays on Patrick White. Boston: G. K. Hall, 1990.
- Wolpert, Stanley. Gandhi's Passion: The Life and Legacy of Gandhi. New York: Oxford University Press, 2001.
- Wright, Derek. Wole Soyinka Revisited. Boston: Twayne, 1993.
- Wright, Edgar, ed. The Critical Evaluation of African Literature. London: Heinemann, 1973.
- Wullschlager, Jackie. Hans Christian Andersen: The Life of a Storyteller. New York: Knopf, 2001.

Yamada Eimi. Monkey Brain Sushi: New Tastes in Japanese Fiction. Translated by Terry Gallagher. New York: Kodansha International, 1991.

Yang, Winston L. Y., and Nathan K. Mao, eds. Modern Chinese Fiction: A Guide to Its Study and Appreciation; Essays and Bibliographies. Boston: G. K. Hall, 1981.

Yip Wai-Lim, ed. Modern Chinese Poetry: Twenty Poets from the Republic of China, 1955–1965. Iowa City: University of Iowa Press, 1970.

Yourcenar, Marguerite. Mishima: A Vision of the Void. Translated by Alberto Manguel. New York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 1986.

Yu Beongsheon. Akutagawa: An Introduction. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1972.

———. Han Yong-un and Yi Kwang-su: Two Pioneers of Modern Korean Literature. Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1992.

Zeidan, Joseph. Arab Women Novelists. Binghamton: State University of New York Press, 1995.

Zhao, Henry Y. H. Towards a Modern Zen Theatre: Gao Xingian and Chinese Theatre Experimentalism. London, England: School of Oriental and African Studies, 2000.

Ziolkowski, Theodore. Herman Broch. New York: Columbia University Press, 1964.

INDEX

Boldface page references refer to main entries in the encyclopedia.

A

Abbas, K(hawaja) A(hmad) 1
The Abbey of Bliss (Ānandamāth)
 (Cattopadhyay) 81
The Abbot C. (Bataille) 40
An Abbreviated History (Ryakureki)
 (Ishigaki) 223
 Abe Kimifusa. See Abe Komacronbomacron
 Abe Kōbō 1–2
Abeng (Cliff) 95–96
 Aboriginal Arts Board of the Australian
 Arts Council 4
 Aboriginal Center 4
 Aboriginal movement 3–4
 Aboriginal Publications Foundation 3, 4
 Abrahams, Peter Henry 4–5
Absolute Signal (Gao) 158
The Abyss (Yourcenar) 459
 Academy Awards 180, 226
 Academy of Arts (West Berlin) 229
 Academy of Letters of Quebec Medal 294
 A.C. Benson Award 313
Accents (Akzente) (journal) 209
Accidental Death of an Anarchist (Fo) 149
 Achebe, Chinua 5–7, 353
 acmeism 7, 11, 185, 279
The Acolyte (Astley) 31
Actuelles III (Camus) 74
Adelchi (Manzoni) 284
Adieux: A Farewell to Sartre (Beauvoir) 43
Adolphe (Constant de Rebecque) 102
 Adonis 7–8
 Adunis. See Adonis

The Adventures of the Last of the Abencérages (Les Aventures du dernier des Abencérages) (Chateaubriand) 87
The Adventures of Sumiyakist Q.
 (Kurahashi) 247
Adventurous Heart (Jünger) 230
 “Africa” (D. Diop) 120
 African Diaspora 71, 101, 133
 African literature. See also specific countries
 Aidoo in 9–10
 Anyidoho in 22 in English 142
 Laing in 252
 Ndebele in 316–317
 Neto in 320
 Ngugi in 322
 Nwapa in 328–329
 Ogot in 332–333
 p’Bitek in 345
 Sembène in 395
 Senghor in 396
 “African Storm” (Laing) 252
L’Afrique fantôme (Leiris) 260
The Afternoon of a Faun (Mallarmé) 276
After Russia (Tsvetaeva) 431–432
 “Again a Meeting” (Yevtushenko) 125
Against Marriage (Marinetti) 285
Against Nature (À rebours) (Huysmans)
 113, 213–214
The Age of Suspicion (L’Ère de soupçon)
 (Sarraute) 387
Aglavaïne et Sélvysette (Maeterlinck) 270
 Agnon, Samuel Joseph 8–9
 “Agonique Life” (Miron) 294
The Agony of the West (Dağlarca) 108
Agostino (Moravia) 302–303
 “Agwhee the Sky Monster” (‘e) 332
 Aichinger, Ilse 9, 131, 183

Aidoo, Christina Ama Ata 9–10
Airs (Jaccottet) 224
Ake: The Years of Childhood (Soyinka) 409
 Akhmadulina, Izabella Akhatovna 10–11
 Akhmatova, Anna 7, 10, 11–12, 185
 Akutagawa Prize 2, 199, 330, 331
 Akutagawa Ryūnosuke 12–13
Akzente (Accents) (journal) 208
Aladdin’s Lamp (Cocteau) 96
Aladine et Palomides (Maeterlinck) 270 À la recherche du temps perdu (In Search of Lost Time) (Proust) 48, 356–357
 Alberti, Rafael 13
Alcools (Alcohols) (Apollinaire) 23
 Aleichem, Shalom 14
 Alencar, José Martiniano, de 14–15, 219
 Alepoudelis, Odysseus. See Elytis,
 Odysseus
Alias Grace (Atwood) 32
 Allende, Isabel 15–16, 271
Alle Vögel all (All the Birds) (Höllerer) 209
 Allfrey, Phyllis 16–17
All Quiet on the Western Front (Remarque)
 367–368
All Said and Done (Beauvoir) 42
All the Beauties of the World (Seifert) 394
All the Birds (Alle Vögel all) (Höllerer) 209
All the Family Are Blessed (Lao) 256
All You Who Sleep Tonight (Seth) 398
Alléluia pour une femme-jardin (Hallelujah for a Garden-Woman) (Dépestre) 114
 al-Malaika, Nazik. See Mala’ika, Nazik al-“Alone” (Zamyatin) 461
 al-Sa’dawi, Nawal. See Sadawi, Nawal
Altar of Victory (Bryusov) 67
 Amado, Jorge 17
La Ama Joven (Pardo Bazán) 340
 Amalrik, Andrey 18

- Ambedkar, Bhimrao Ramji, Dr. 109
Ambulando (Brasch) 57
 American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters 313
 American Academy of Arts and Literature 11, 34, 112
 American Book Award 423
American Day by Day (Beauvoir) 43
 American Library Association Notable Book Award 57
Amers (Seamarks) (Perse) 348
 Amichai, Yehuda 18–19
Among Single Women (Pavese) 343
Among the Believers: An Islamic Journey (Naipaul) 312
L'amour, la fantasia (Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade) (Djebar) 121
L'Amour, la poésie (Éluard) 131
Amphitryon 38 (Giraudoux) 169
Anabasis (Perse) 348
Anak Semua Bangsa (Toer) 427
 Anand, Mulk Raj 19, 109
Anandamāth (The Abbey of Bliss) (Cattopadhyay) 81
 “Anchor” (Hasluck) 195
 Andersch, Alfred, in Gruppe 47 183
 Andersen, Hans Christian 20–21
And Quiet Flows the Don (Sholokhov) 400
Der Andere Gast (The Other Guest) (Höllerer) 209
 Andrézel, Pierre. See Dinesen, Isak
 Andric, Ivo 21
And Suddenly It's Evening (Quasimodo) 361
And the Dish Ran Away with the Spoon (Laird) 253
And They Put Handcuffs on the Flowers (Arrabal) 29
 “And You” (Han) 191
 “Andy's Gone with Cattle” (Lawson) 259
L'Ange Heurtebise (Cocteau) 96
An Angel at My Table (Frame) 151
The Angel at the Gate (Harris) 194
An Angel's Fall (La Chute d'un Ange) (Lamartine) 253
Ångest (Anguish) (Lagerkvist) 250
 Angolan literature, Neto in 320
An Angry Letter in January and Other Poems (Aidoo) 10
Anicet; ou, Le Panorama (Aragon) 25
Anna Karenina (Tolstoy) 428–429
 Annette von Droste-Hülshoff Prize 70
Annie John (Kincaid) 241
 Anouilh, Jean 21–22
Ansichten eines Clowns (The Clown) (Böll) 54
 “The Answer” (Bei Dao) 47
Antan d'enfance (Childhood) (Chamoiseau) 85
Anthem of the Decades (Kunene) 246
Anthologie de la nouvelle poésie nègre et malgache de langue française (Anthology of new Negro and Malagasy poetry in French) (Senghor) 317–318
Antigone (Anouilh) 22
The Antimony Miners (Ba Jin) 34
 Antschel, Paul. See Celan, Paul
 Anyidoho, Kofi 22–23
 “Apart” (“Les Séparés”) (Desbordes-Valmore) 115–116 apartheid 63, 249, 275, 327
Aperion (journal) 52
Aphrodite: A Memoir of the Senses (Allende) 16
 Apollinaire, Guillaume 23–24
Apollon (journal) 7, 185
 Appelfeld, Aharon 24–25
The Approximate Man (Tzara) 434
 Arab literature
 Adonis in 7–8
 Darwish in 111–112
 Djebar in 121
 Habibi in 188
 Al-Jayyusi in 225–226
 Kabbani in 231
 Mahfouz in 272–273
 Mala'ika in 274–275
 Sadawi in 380
 Samman in 382
Araceli (Morante) 302
 Aragon, Louis 25, 107, 131
The Architect and the Emperor of Assyria (Arrabal) 29
Archives du Nord (Northern Archives) (Yourcenar) 459
Arch of Triumph (Remarque) 368
Arctic Dreams and Nightmares (Ipellie) 220
Ardele (Anouilh) 22
Ardent talons (Maeterlinck) 270
An Area of Darkness (Naipaul) 312
À rebours (Against Nature) (Huysmans) 113, 213–214
 Arenas, Reinaldo 26
 Arghezi, Tudor 26–27, 94
Los argonautas (Blasco) 54
 Arias, Arturo 291
Arias tristes (Sad Arias) (Jiménez) 227
Arion and the Dolphin (Seth) 398
Arjhas layali (The Cheapest Nights) (Idris) 218
The Ark Sakura (Abe) 2
Armance (Stendahl) 414
 Arnim, Bettin von 27
 Arp, Hans 28
 Arp, Jean. See Arp, Hans
 Arrabal, Fernando 28–29
 Arrighi, Cletto 390
The Arrivants: A New World Trilogy (Brathwaite) 58
Arrow of God (Achebe) 7
Arsenio (Montale) 301
The Art and the Place of Poetry (Bonnefoy) 55
 Artaud, Antonin 30–31, 424
Artificial Paradises (Les Paradis artificiels) (Baudelaire) 42
 “art for art's sake,” 73, 162–163. See also modernism
The Art of the Novel (Kundera) 244
l'Art romantique (Romantic Art) (Baudelaire) 42
As a Man Grows Older (Svevo) 418
Ascent to Omai (Harris) 193
Ashiqat al-lail (Lover of Night) (Mala'ika) 274
Askitiki (Kazantzakis) 238
Asrar-i-Khudi (Secrets of the Self) (Iqbal) 221
The Assault (Arenas) 26
 “Un'assenza” (Ginzburg) 168
Associations of the Lotus (Yu) 459–460
L'Assommoir (The Drunkard) (Zola) 462
The Assumption of Hannele (Hanneles Himmelfahrt) (Hauptmann) 196
 Astley, Thea 31
 Asturias, Miguel Angel 72
Atala (Chateaubriand) 87, 375
 “At Kinosaki” (Shiga) 399
At Dead Low Water and Sonnets (Curnow) 105
At Dusk (Chekhov) 89
At the Bottom of the River (Kincaid) 241
 “At the End of the World” (Zamyatin) 461
 “Atheist's Prayer” (Unamuno y Jugo) 435–436
En attendant Godot (Waiting for Godot) (Beckett) 45
 Atwood, Margaret 31–32
Audience (Havel) 197
 “Auferstanden aus Ruinen” (“Risen from the Ruins”) (Becher) 44
The August Sleepwalker (Bei Dao) 47
The Aunt's Story (White) 448
Aurélia (Nerval) 320
 Ausländer, Rose 32–33
 Australian Arts Council, Aboriginal Arts Board of 4
 Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Islander Studies 4
 Australian literature aboriginal movement in 3–4
 Astley in 31
 Carey in 76–78
 Flanagan in 146–147
 Hasluck in 195
 Keneally in 239–240
 Lawson in 259
 Malouf in 277
 White in 448
 Australian Literature Society's Gold medal 277, 448

- Australian Writers Guild 4
 Austrian literature 9, 36, 206–207, 307
 Austrian Medal of Honor 37
 Author of the Year Award (Germany) 16
An Autobiography or The Story of My Experiments with Truth (Gandhi) 157
 “Autumn” (Akhmadulina) 11
Autumn (Ba Jin) 34
Autumn Leaves (Feuilles d’automne) (Hugo) 212
The Autumn of the Lonely (Trakl) 430 avant-garde movement
 Bachmann and 36
 Chinese modernism and 300
 Cocteau in 96
 in fin de siècle 145
 French, Apollinaire in 23
 Genet in 164
Les Aventures du dernier des Abencérages (The Adventures of the Last of the Abencérages) (Chateaubriand) 87
Awara (film) 1
 “Awful Hour” (Yun) 460
 A.W. Reed Lifetime Achievement Award 105
 Axel (Villiers) 444
Axion Esti (Worth It Be) (Elytis) 132
 “L’Azur” (Mallarmé) 276
- B
- Bâ, Mariama 35
 Ba Jin 34, 367, 406
 Babel, Isaac 35–36
Babi Yar (Yevtushenko) 457
 Bachmann, Ingeborg 36–37
Badenheim (Appelfeld) 24
 Bahba, Hohmi 352
The Balcony (Genet) 164
The Bald Soprano (La Cantatrice chauve) (Ionesco) 219, 425 “Ball of Fat” (“Boule de Suif”) (Maupassant) 286
 Balzac, Honoré de 37–38, 366
 Bancarella Literature Award (Italy) 16
 Bandler, Faith 4
Bangadarsan (magazine) 80
Bang-i-Dira (The Sound of the Caravan Bell) (Iqbāl) 221
 “Banished” (Lasker-Schüler) 258
 Barbey d’Aurevilly, Jules-Amédée 38–39
The Bark Tree (Le Chiendent) (Queneau) 363
 Baroja y Nessi, Pio 39–40
La barraca (Blasco) 53
Un barrage contre le Pacifique (The Sea Wall) (M. Duras) 127
Basal Skull Lesson: Poems (Schädelbasislektion: Gedichte) (Grünbein) 182
 Bastida, Gustavo Adolfo Dominguez. See Bécquer, Gustavo Adolfo
- Bataille, Georges 40
 “Bateche” (Miron) 294
The Bathhouse (Mayakovsky) 288
 Baudelaire, Charles 40–42
 in decadence movement 113
 in fin de siècle 145
 in modernism 298–299
 in symbolism 418–419
Baumgartner’s Bombay (Desai) 115
 Bavarian Academy of Fine Arts Literature Prize 9
 BBC Asia Award for Achievement in Writing and Literature 186
 BBC Poetry Award 22
 Beauchamp, Katherine Mansfield. See Mansfield, Katherine
The Beautiful Sight (Mrožek) 304
The Beautiful Summer (Pavese) 343
 Beauvoir, Simone de 42–43, 143, 388
The Beaver Coat (Hauptmann) 196
 Becher, Johannes Robert 44
Becket (Anouilh) 21, 22
 Beckett, Samuel 44–46, 137, 355, 425
 Bécquer, Gustavo Adolfo 46–47, 104
The Bedbug (Mayakovsky) 288
Bed of a Stranger (Darwish) 111
A Bed of Grass (Tsunami) 431
Bedtime Eyes (Yamada) 455
Beef, No Chicken (Walcott) 447
Before Dawn (Vor Sonnenaufgang) (Hauptmann) 196
Before Dawn (Tian) 425
Before the Storm: A Novel of the Winter of 1812–1813 (Vor dem Sturm: Roman aus dem Winter 1812 auf 1813) (Fontane) 149
 “The Beggar” (Espronceda) 136
 “Beginning” (Grünzweig) 183
Beginning and End of Snow (Début et fin de la neige) (Bonnetoy) 55
 Bei Dao 47, 300
 Beijing Writers Association 47
Being and Nothingness (L’Être et le néant) (Sartre) 388–389
Being and Time (Sartre) 388
Beirut Nightmares (Samman) 382
Beirut ‘75 (Samman) 382
The Bell (Kolokol) (journal) 202
The Bellarmine Jug (Hasluck) 195
Belle (Simenon) 401
La Belle Captive (Robbe-Grillet) 373
Le bellissima avventura di Cateri dalla trecciolina (Morante) 302
The Bells of Saint Babel’s (Curnow) 105 Beloved (Morrison) 271
 Bely, Andrey 48, 419
A Bend in the River (Naipaul) 311
Beneath the Red Banner (Lao) 256
 Benn, Gottfried 48–49
 Bennett, Louise 49
Berlin Alexanderplatz (Döblin) 122
- Berlin Critics Prize (Germany) 37, 180
 Berlin Film Festival 297
 Bernhard, Thomas 50
 Bernstein, Ingrid. See Kirsch, Sarah
 “Beside a Chrysanthemum” (So) 404
 Best Book Award, Library Journal (United States) 16
 Best Young British Writers Award 133
Besuch der alten Dame (The Visit) (Dürrenmatt) 128
The Betrothed (I prommessi sposi) (Manzoni) 283–284
Between the Carnation and the Sword (Alberti) 13
Between Two Worlds (Ti Jean L’Horizon) (Schwarz-Bart) 392
Beware, Soul Brother (Achebe) 5
Beyond the Pleasure Principle (Freud) 152
 Bhatt, Sujata 50–51
 Bialik Prize 25, 365
The Bicycle and Other Poems (Malouf) 277
Big Breasts and Full Hips (Mo) 297
Billard um halb zehn (Billiards at Half-Past Nine) (Böll) 54
 Bing Xin 51–52, 367
Birds Singing (Ōba) 330
The Birthmark (Sholokhov) 400
The Birth of the Amgungsky Regiment (Fadjev) 139
A Birth of Tragedy (Nietzsche) 324
Bishabriksa (Cattopadhyay) 81
A Bitter Gourd Carved in White Jade (Yu) 460
 Bitton, Erez 52
 Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne 52–53
Black and Blues (Brathwaite) 58
The Black Book (Kara Kitap) (Pamuk) 339
The Black Dockworker (Le Docker noir) (Sembène) 395
The Black Heralds (Vallejo) 439
 “Black Orpheus” (“Orphée noir”) (Sartre) 318
 “Black Stone on Top of a White Stone” (Vallejo) 440
The Black Student (L’Étudiant Noir) (newspaper) 84, 317, 396
The Blacks (Genet) 164
 Blasco Ibáñez, Vicente 53–54
Blätter für die Kunst (Journal of the Arts) 165
Die Blechtrommel (The Tin Drum) (Grass) 179–180
Die Blendung (The Tower of Babel) (Canetti) 75
The Blind (Maeterlinck) 270
Blind Assassin (Atwood) 32
Blindness (Saramago) 385
Bliss (Carey) 77
 Blixen, Baroness Karen Christence. See Dinesen, Isak

- The Blood of Others* (Beauvoir) 43
Blood Red, Sister Rose (Keneally) 239
Blood and Sand (Sangre y arena) (Blasco) 54
Blood Wedding (García Lorca) 160
 “Blow-Up” (Cortázar) 103
Blue (Dario) 111
The Blue Angel (Professor Unrat) (H. Mann) 280
The Blue Bird (Oiseau bleu) (Maeterlinck) 270
Blue Box (Köhler) 243
The Blue Cat (Hagiwara) 189
Blue Journey (Kurahashi) 247
Blue of Noon (Bataille) 40
 “Blues” (bpNichol) 323
Blues of a Sailor (Yu) 459
A Boat Load of Home Folk (Astley) 31
 Böll, Heinrich 54, 183
 “Bonaparte” (Hölderlin) 208
Bones of the Cuttlefish (Montale) 301
Bonjour et adieu à la négritude (Hello and Goodbye to Négritude) (Dépestre) 114
La Bonne Chanson (Verlaine) 443
 Bonnefoy, Yves 55
 “Bontsche the Silent” (Peretz) 347
The Book (Adonis) 8
 Booker Prize (England) for Atwood 32 for Carey 77 for Coetzee 97 for Gordimer 177
 for Jhabvala 226
 for Naipaul 311
 for Ondaatje 335
 for Rushdie 377
Book of Exercises (Seferis) 393
The Book of Laughter and Forgetting (Kundera) 244
A Book of New Zealand Verse: 1923-45 (Curnow, ed.) 105
The Book of Songs (Heine) 201
The Book of the Hours: The Book of Monastic Life (Rilke) 369
 Book of the Year Award (Germany) 316
 Boom movement 123
 Borges, Jorge Luis 55–56, 270
Boris Godunov (Pushkin) 358
Born of the Storm (Ostrovsky) 337
 Bosnian literature, Andric in 21
Bosnian Story (Andric) 21
Botchan (Natsume) 314
 “Boule de Suif” (“Ball of Fat”) (Maupassant) 286
Les Bouts de bois de Dieu (God’s Bits of Wood) (Sembène) 395
Bouvard et Pécuchet (Flaubert) 148
The Bow and the Lyre (Paz) 345
Boyhood (Tolstoy) 428
 “Boys and Girls” (Munro) 305
Bozena Nencová’s Fan (Seifert) 394
 bpNichol. See Nichol, b(arrie) p(hilip)
A Branch of the Blue Nile (Walcott) 447
Brand (Ibsen) 216
 Brasch, Charles 56–57
 Braschi, Giannina 57
 Brathwaite, Edward Kamau 58–59
 Brathwaite, Lawson Edward. See Brathwaite, Edward Kamau
 Braun, Volker 59
 Brazilian Academy of Letters 362
 Brazilian literature
 Alencar in 14–15
 Amado in 17
 Freyre in 152–153
 Gonçalves Dias in 174
 Lispector in 263–264
 Machado de Assis in 267–268
 Queiróz in 362
 Rosas in 376
 Brazilian romanticism 174
 “Bread, Hashish, and the Moon” (Kabbani) 231
Break at Noon (Claudel) 95
 “Breast-Giver” (Devi) 116
The Breasts of Tiresias (Les mamelles de Tiresias) (Apollinaire) 24
 Brecht, Bertolt 60–61, 180
 Bremen Literature Prize 153
 Brenner Prize 365
 Brentano, Catarina Elizabetha Ludovica Magdalena. See Arnim, Bettin von Breton, André 62, 84, 107, 131
 Breytenbach, Breyten 63–64
The Bridal Canopy (Agnon) 8–9
The Bride of Texas (Škvorecký) 404
The Bridge of Beyond (Pluie et vent sur Têlumée Miracle) (Schwarz-Bart) 392
The Bridge on the Drina (Andric) 21
A Brief Life (La Vida Breve) (Onetti) 335
Bright Sunny Skies (Hao) 406
Bring Larks and Heroes (Keneally) 239–240
 Brink, André 64–65
 Brinkmann, Rolf Dieter 65–66
 Broch, Hermann 66
The Broken Wing (Naidu) 310
The Bronze Horseman (Pushkin) 358
Brothers (Ungaretti) 437
The Brothers Karamazov (Dostoyevsky) 124–125
 Bruman, Simone. See Schwarz-Bart, Simone
Brunizem (Bhatt) 51
 Bryusov, Valery 67
 Büchner, Georg 67–68
 Büchner Prize. See Georg Büchner Prize
Buddenbrooks (T. Mann) 281
 “Bukit China” (“Chinese Hill”) (Lim) 263
 Bulgakov, Mikhail 68–69
Bullie’s House (Keneally) 240
Bumi Manusia (Toer) 427
 Bungei Award 455
 Bunin, Ivan 69–70
Burger’s Daughter (Gordimer) 176–177
The Burgomeister of Stilemonde (Maeterlinck) 270
The Buried Temple (Maeterlinck) 270
 Burkart, Erika 70–71
The Burning Green Tree (‘e) 332
Bus Stop (Gao) 158
 Busia, Abena 71
Buson the Haiku Poet (Masaoka) 285
Das Butt (The Flounder) (Grass) 180
- C
- Cabrera Infante, Guillermo 72–73
 Cairo, Alberto. See Pessoa, Fernando
Cahier d’un retour au pays natal (Return to My Native Land) (Césaire) 84, 317
Cahier de verdure (Notebook of Green) (Jaccottet) 224
 Cain, G. See Cabrera Infante, Guillermo
 Cairo trilogy (Mahfouz) 272
Caligula (Camus) 74
The Call (Der Ruf) (journal) 183
Calligrammes (Apollinaire) 24, 323
 “The Call of the River Nun” (Okara) 334
 Calvino, Italo 73–74
Camion (M. Duras) 127
 Camoens Prize (Portugal) 17
 Campos, Alvaro de. See Pessoa, Fernando
 Camus, Albert 42, 74–75, 137
Canadian Born (P. Johnson) 228
 Canadian literature. See also French-Canadian literature; Québécois literature Atwood in 31–32
 Davies in 112–113
 Hébert in 200
 Ippellie in 220
 Johnson, Pauline, in 227–228
 Kogawa in 243
 Maillet in 274
 Munro in 305–306
 Roberts in 373
 Škvorecký in 403–404
Canter Ward (Solzhenitsyn) 408
Candle (Akhmadulina) 10
 Canetti, Elias 75–76
 Cannes Film Festival 1, 238
Cannon Shot and Glass Beads: Modern Black Writing (Lamming, ed.) 254
La Cantatrice chauve (The Bald Soprano) (Ionesco) 219, 425
I Canti (Leopardi) 260
Canto General (Neruda) 319
Canto novo (D’Annunzio) 110
Cantos para soldados y sonos para turistas (Songs for Soldiers and Sounds for Tourists) (N. Guillén) 184
Cape of Storms (Brink) 65
 Capécia, Mayotte 76

- Capitale de la douleur* (Éluard) 131
Captains of the Sands (Amado) 17
The Captive Mind (Milosz) 293
 Capuana, Luigi 442
 Carey, Peter 76–78
Caribbean Carnivals (video) 253
Caribbean Eye videos (Laird) 253
 Caribbean literature. See also Cuban literature; Jamaican literature
 Allfrey in 16–17
 Bennett in 49
 Brathwaite in 58
 Capécia in 76
 Césaire in 84
 Collymore in 100
 Condé in 100–101
 Dépeste in 114
 Laird in 253
 Lamming in 254
 Meeks in 288–289
 postcolonialism in 353
 Schwartz-Bart in 392
 Walcott in 447
Caribbean Revolutions and Revolutionary Theory: an Assessment of Cuba, Nicaragua and Grenada (Meeks) 288
Carlos Bulosan and the Imagination of the Class Struggle (San Juan) 383
 Carlos Trouyat Prize in Letters 79
 Carpentier, Alejo 78–79, 270–271
The Carrier Pigeon (Seifert) 394
Cartas desde mi Celda (Letters from My Cell) (Bécquer) 46
Cartea cu Jucarii (Arghezi) 27
 Casa de las Américas poetry competition (Cuba) 58
 Castellanos, Rosario 79
The Castle (Kafka) 48, 233
 Castro, Rosalía de 79–80
Cat and Mouse (Katz und Maus) (Grass) 179–180
Catastrophes (Breytenbach) 63–64
La Cathédrale (The Cathedral) (Huysmans) 213–214
 Cattopadhyay, Bankim-Chandra 80–81
The Caucasian Chalk Circle (Brecht) 61
 Cavafy, Constantine P. 81
Cavalleria Rustica (Rustic Chivalry) (Verga) 441
Ce qui fut sans lumière (What Was Without Light) (Bonnefoy) 55
 Cela, Camilo José 82, 331
 Celan, Paul 33, 82–83
 Céline, Louis-Ferdinand 83
The Cenci (Artaud) 30
 Cervantes Prize 155, 184, 335
 Césaire, Aimé 84–85
 Diop, David, and 120
 in Négritude 317
 postcolonialism of 353
 Senghor and 396
Cevdet Bey and His Sons (Pamuk) 339
The Chairs (Ionesco) 219–220
 Chamoiseau, Patrick 85–86
The Chant of Jimmie Blacksmith (Keneally) 240
Chants du crépuscule (Twilight Songs) (Hugo) 212
Les Chants de Maldoror (Lautreamont) 258
Chants d'ombre (Songs of shadow) (Senghor) 396
 Char, René 86
La Chartreuse de Parme (The Charterhouse of Parma) (Stendahl) 414–415
 Chateaubriand, François-René, vicomte de 86–87, 375
 Chatterjee, Upanamyu 87–88
 Chatterji, Bankim Chandra. See Cattopadhyay, Bankim-Chandra
 Chatterji, Sarat Chandra 88–89
Chatterton (Vigny) 443–444
 Chattoopadhyay, Sarat Chandra. See Chatterji, Sarat Chandra
Chausseen Chausseen (Highways Highways) (Huchel) 211
The Cheapest Nights (Arjhas layali) (Idris) 218
The Cheat (Le tricheur) (Simon) 402
 Chekhov, Anton 89–90, 366
 Cheluvu (Karnad) 235
Chemin d'école (School Days) (Chamoiseau) 85–86
 Chen Duxiu 299
 Chen Yuan-tsung 91
Chéri (Colette) 99
 Chernyshevsky, Nikolay 91–92
The Cherry Orchard (Chekhov) 90
 Chevalier d'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres 159
 “La Chevelure” (“The Head of Hair”) (Baudelaire) 41
 Chiapas Prize 79
Chieko's Sky (Takamura) 423
Le Chiendent (The Bark Tree) (Queneau) 363
Childhood (Antan d'enfance) (Chamoiseau) 85
Childhood (Sarraute) 387
Childhood (Tolstoy) 428
The Childhood of Lovers (Pasternak) 341
Child of Fortune (Tsushima) 431
Child of God (Dağlarca) 108
The Child of Pleasure (D'Annunzio) 110
Child of War, Woman of Peace (Hayslip) 199
 “Children of Manuhiki, Arise” (Kauraka) 237
The Children of the Sabbath (Les Enfants du Sabbat) (Hébert) 200
Children of the Soil (Sienkiewicz) 401
Children of the Sun (Gorky) 178
Children's and Household Tales (Grimm and Grimm) 181–182
 “Child's Play” (Higuchi) 204
Child's Play (Malouf) 277
 Chilean literature 296, 318–319
 Chilean National Prize for Literature 123
Chills (Akhmadulina) 10
The Chimeras (Nerval) 320
China (magazine) 119
China in Her Prime (Tian) 426
 “Chinese Hill” (“Bukit China”) (Lim) 263
 Chinese literature
 Ba Jin in 34
 Bei Dao in 47
 Bing Xin in 51–52
 Chen Yuan-tsung in 91
 Ding Ling in 119–120
 Feng Zhi in 144
 Gao Xingjian in 158–159
 Hu Shih in 209–210
 Lao She in 256
 Liu E in 264
 Lu Xun in 265–266
 Mo Yan in 297
 socialist realism in 405–406
 Chinese modernism 299–300
 Chinese realism 366–367
Chiotki (Akhmatova) 11
Choirs (Arghezi) 26–27
 “Cholera” (Mala'ika) 274–275
 Cholmondeley Award for Poetry 51, 105
 “Choose” (Kabbani) 231
Christ on the Mount of Olives (Nerval) 319–320
Chronicle of a Death Foretold (García Márquez) 162
Chronique des sept misères (Chronicle of the Seven Sorrows) (Chamoiseau) 85, 86
 Chughtai, Ismat 92
Church on the Mountain (Gunnarsson) 187
La Chute (The Fall) (Camus) 75
La Chute d'un Ange (An Angel's Fall) (Lamartine) 253
 Cicero, in classicism 94
 “Cigarettes” (Mishima) 295
Cimtrul Buna-Vestire (Arghezi) 27
 “Cinderella” (Grimm and Grimm) 182
Cinq-Mars (Vigny) 443
 “Il Cinque Maggio” (Manzoni) 284
The Circle Game (Atwood) 32
The Circle of Reason (Ghosh) 166
The Cistern (E Sterma) (Seferis) 393
The City and the House (Ginzburg) 168
The City in Tears (Seifert) 394
City of Kings (Castellanos) 79
 Cixous, Hélène 92–94, 143
Claiming an Identity They Taught Me to Despise (Cliff) 95
Claire Lenoire (Villiers) 444
 Clare, Monica 3

- “Clare Savage as a Crossroads Character” (Cliff) 95
- Clarimonde (La Mort amoureuse)* (Gautier) 162–163
- classicism 94
- in Bachmann 36
 - Hölderlin and 208
 - Hugo and 212
 - in Jaccottet 224
- Claudel, Paul 95
- Claude's Confession (La Confession de Claude)* (Zola) 462
- Claudine* novels 99
- Clayton, Stephen 3
- Clemens-Brentano Prize 243
- “Cliff” (Ishigaki) 223
- Cliff, Michelle 95–96
- The Cloak (Der Kurze Mantel)* (Naubert) 316
- Close Sesame* (Farrah) 142
- “A Cloud in Trousers” (Mayakovsky) 287
- Clovek Zahrada Sirá (Man: A Broad Garden)* (Kundera) 244
- The Clown (Ansichten eines Clowns)* (Böll) 54
- The Coast of Utopia* (Stoppard) 202
- Cocteau, Jean 96–97
- Coetzee, J(ohn) M. 64, 97–98
- A Coin in Nine Hands (Denier du rêve)* (Yourcenar) 459
- Cold Nights* (Ba Jin) 34
- Colette 98–99
- Colima Award for Best Novel (Mexico) 16
- Collected Poems* (Feng Zhi) 144
- Collected Stories, 1935–1963* (Sargeson) 386
- The Collected Works of Billy the Kid* (Ondaatje) 334
- Collimore, Frank 100
- La Colmena (The Hive)* (Cela) 331
- Colombe* (Anouilh) 22
- A Color for Solitude* (Bhatt) 51
- The Color of Summer* (Arenas) 26
- “Colours” (Tanikawa) 423
- “Come, Africa” (Faiz) 140
- La Comédie humaine (The Human Comedy)* (Balzac) 38, 366
- The Comedy of Death* (Gautier) 163
- Comical Mystery* (Fo) 148
- “The Coming Back of the Assassinated Poet” (Alberti) 13
- Coming through Slaughter* (Ondaatje) 334
- Commonwealth Literary Fund Awards 239
- Commonwealth Poetry Prize
- for Bhatt 51
 - for Curnow 105
 - for Lim 263
- for Okara 334
 - for Seth 398
- Commonwealth Writers Prize 77, 147, 166, 297
- Companion of the Order of Canada 112
- Companions of the Day and Night* (Harris) 193
- Compassion* (Pérez Galdós) 347
- Complete Sonnets* (Quental) 363
- Concerning the Angels* (Alberti) 13
- Conclusive Evidence* (Nabokov) 309
- concrete movement 173, 323
- Condé, Maryse 100–101
- La Confession de Claude (Claude's Confession)* (Zola) 462
- La Confession d'un enfant du siècle (Confessions of a Child of the Century)* (Musset) 308
- Confessions of a Mask* (Mishima) 295
- Confessions of Zeno (La Coscienza di Zeno)* (Svevo) 418
- The Conquerors* (Malraux) 278
- The Conquest of Istanbul* (Dağlarca) 108
- Conservateur Littéraire* (journal) 212
- Considerations sur la Révolution Française (Thoughts on the French Revolution)* (Staël) 411
- Constant de Rebecque, Benjamin 102
- Il Conte de Carmagnola* (Manzoni) 284
- “Un conte de la nuit” (Rabearivelo) 364
- Contes à Ninon (Stories for Ninon)* (Zola) 462–463
- Contes d'Espagne et d'Italie* (Musset) 308
- “Continuation” (Nortje) 327
- Contre Saint-Brève* (Proust) 357
- Conversations at Curlow Creek* (Malouf) 277
- Conversation with a Dinosaur (Gesprach mit dem Saurier)* (Kirsch) 242
- Coolie* (Anand) 19
- Copies* (Seferis) 394
- La corde raide (The Tightrope)* (Simon) 402
- Corinne* (Staël) 412
- Corinthian Culture Prize 192
- Coronation (Donoso) 122
- The Corpse on the Throne (Der Leichnam auf dem Thron)* (Becher) 44
- Correction (Korrektur)* (Bernhard) 50
- Corriere Lombardo Prize 303
- corroboree 3
- Cortázar, Julio 102–103
- Corydon* (Gide) 167
- La Coscienza di Zeno (Confessions of Zeno)* (Svevo) 418
- Cosmos* (Gombrowicz) 173
- Costumbrismo 104
- “Councilor Krespel” (Hoffmann) 206
- “Counting the Stars” (Yun) 460
- The Country Without Music* (Hasluck) 195
- Un Coup de dés Jamais n'abolira le hasard* (Mallarmé) 276
- Le Coup de grâce* (Yourcenar) 459
- Coursebook (Kursbuch)* (Enzensberger) 134
- La Cousine Bette (Cousin Bette)* (Balzac) 38
- Coverley, Mrs. Eric. See Bennett, Louise
- The Cowards* (Škvorecký) 403–404
- “Crabs” (Carey) 77
- Crayencour, Marguerite de. See Yourcenar, Marguerite
- Creation by the Sword* (Sri Sri) 411
- Creation Fire* (Espinete) 135
- Créolité movement 85
- Le Crève-Coeur* (Aragon) 25
- O crime do padre Amaro (The Sin of Father Amaro)* (Queirós) 362
- The Crime of S. Karma* (Abe) 2
- Crime and Punishment* (Dostoyevsky) 124
- The Crimson Island* (Bulgakov) 69
- Critic's Prize 372–373
- Cromwell* (Hugo) 212, 375
- Cronin, Jeremy 104–105
- Cronopios and Famas* (Cortázar) 103
- Crossing the Peninsula and Other Poems* (Lim) 263
- Cross Purpose* (Camus) 74
- Crowds and Power* (Canetti) 75
- Crusts (Le Pain dur)* (Claudel) 95
- The Cry* (painting) 138
- Cry, the Beloved Country* (Paton) 342
- “Cry Mercy” (Brasch) 57
- The Crystal Carrot* (Mo) 297
- Los cuatro jinetes del Apocalipsis (The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse)* (Blasco) 54
- Cubana* (Yáñez) 455
- Cuban literature
- Arenas in 26
 - Cabrera in 72
 - Carpentier in 78–79
 - Guillén, Nicolás, in 184
 - Yáñez in 455
- Cuban National Prize for Literature 184
- cubism 23, 96
- The Cubist Painters* (Apollinaire) 23
- La Cuestión Palpitante* (Pardo Bazán) 340
- Cultural Life in Modern America (Fra det Moderne Amerikas Aansliv)* (Hamsun) 189–190
- Curiosités esthétiques (Aesthetic Curiosities)* (Baudelaire) 42
- Curnow, Allen 105
- Cut Glass and Blown Glass* (Hayashi Kyōko) 198
- Cuvinte Potrivite (Arranged Words)* (Arghezi) 26
- Czaczkas, Shmuel Yosef. See Agnon, Samuel Joseph
- Czech literature 197, 232–233, 394

- D
- Dada 107
 Aragon and 25
 Arps and 28
 Eluard and 131
 Falkner and 140
 Tzara in 434
- Dağlarca, Fazıl Hüsnü 107–108
Dal tuo al Mio (Varga) 442
 Dalit literature 19, 109, 117–118, 353
 Dalit Panthers 109, 118
 Damas, Léon 317
The Dancing Girl (Mori) 303
Dance of the Happy Shades (Munro) 305
 Danish literature 20–21, 118
 D'Annunzio, Gabriele 109–110
Dantons Tod (Danton's Death) (Büchner) 68
 Danzig trilogy (Grass) 179–180
 Dario, Rubén 110–111, 163, 299
The Dark Bird (Der dunkel Vogel) (Burkart) 70
 “Darkness within the Light” (Kauraka) 237
A Dark Night's Passing (Shiga) 399
Dark Testament (Abrahams) 5
 Darwish, Mahmud 111–112
Da Silva da Silva's Cultivated Wilderness (Harris) 193–194
Daughter of Fortune (Allende) 16
Daughter of the Sea (Castro) 80
The Daughters of Fire (Les filles du feu) (Nerval) 320
David's Story (Wicomb) 449
 Davies, Robertson 112–113
 Davis, Jack 3–4
The Dawn Is at Hand (Noonuccal) 327
Day after Day (Quasimodo) 361
The Day Before Yesterday (Agnon) 9
Daybreak (Nietzsche) 324
Days of Hope (L'Espoir) (Malraux) 278
Days of the Turbins (Bulgakov) 69
Dead Man on Campus (Skvorecký) 404
Dead Roots (Nortje) 327
Dead Souls (Gogol) 172
Dear Departed (Souvenirs Pieux) (Yourcenar) 459
The Death of Artemio Cruz (Fuentes) 154
Death and the Compass (Borges) 56
Death and the Fool (Der Tor und der Tod) (Hofmannsthal) 207
 “Death Fugue” (Celan) 82
Death on the Installment Plan (Céline) 83
The Death of Ivan Ilyich (Tolstoy) 429
Death and the King's Horseman (Soyinka) 410
Death of a River Guide (Flanagan) 146
Death in Venice (T. Mann) 281
The Death of Virgil (Der Tod des Vergil) (Broch) 66
Deathwatch (Genet) 164
- Début et fin de la neige* (Beginning and End of Snow) (Bonnefoy) 55 decadence 113
 D'Annunzio and 110
 in fin de siècle 145
 Huysmans in 213
 Mallarmé and 276
 “Declaration” (Bei Dao) 47
 Deconstruction 355
Defenders of Peace (Ba Jin) 34
Defense of the Wolves (Verteidigung der Wölfe) (Enzensberger) 134
The Deferred Time (Bachmann) 36
The Defiant Muse: Hispanic Feminist Poets from the Middle Ages to the Present (Madariaga) 80
The Dehumanization of Art (Ortega y Gasset) 336
Dejemos hablar al viento (Let the Wind Speak) (Onetti) 335
 De Kok, Ingrid 113–114
De l'Allemagne (On Germany) (Staël) 375, 412
De la littérature (On Literature) (Staël) 411–412
De la Religion (On Religion) (Constant de Rebecque) 102
De l'esprit de conquête et de l'usurpation (On the Spirit of Conquest and Usurpation) (Constant de Rebecque) 102
De l'influence des passions (On the Influence of the Passions) (Staël) 411
 Delphine (Staël) 412
The Deluge (Sienkiewicz) 400
The Demesne of the Swans (Tsvetaeva) 431
 Demian (Hesse) 203
 Demon (Lermontov) 261
Den africanske farm (Out of Africa) (Dinesen) 118
Denier du rêve (A Coin in Nine Hands) (Yourcenar) 459
 Dépestre, René 114
 Deptford trilogy (Davies) 112
Le Dernier chouan, ou la Bretagne en 1800 (Balzac) 38
Les Derniers Rois Magis (The Last Magi) (Condé) 101
 Desai, Anita 115
 Desbordes-Valmore, Marceline 115–116
The Descendants of Cain (Hwang Sun-won) 214
 Desolation (Mistral) 296
 Destruction (Ba Jin) 34
Deutsches Roulette (German Roulette) (Köhler) 243
 Devadas (Chatterji) 88–89
The Development of Creole Society in Jamaica (Brathwaite) 58
The Development of Medieval Aesthetics (Eco) 129
- Devi, Mahasweta 116
Devil on the Cross (Ngugi) 322
The Devil in the Hills (Pavese) 343
The Devil's Elixir (Hoffmann) 206
 Dhammachoti, Ussiri 117
 Dhasal, Namdeo 109, 117–118
Diaboliad (Bulgakov) 69
Les Diaboliques (The Diabolic Ones) (Barbey) 39
Diario del '71 e del '72 (Montale) 301
Diario di Quattro Annini (Montale) 301
 “The Diary of a Madman” (Lu) 265, 300
Diary of a Mad Old Man (Tanizaki) 424
Dikter (Poems) (Södergran) 407
 Dilemma (Chatterjee) 88
 Dinesen, Isak 118
 Ding Ling 119–120, 300, 406
 Diop, Birago 120
 Diop, David 120–121
 “Diotima” (Hölderlin) 208
The Dipper (magazine) 119
Dirge for Ignacio Sánchez Mejías (García Lorca) 160
Discours Antillais (Glissant) 85
Discourse on Colonialism (Discours sur le colonialisme) (Césaire) 84, 318
Discours sur le colonialisme (Discourse on Colonialism) (Césaire) 84, 318
 Disgrace (Coetzee) 97–98
A Dish of Pork with Green Bananas (Un Plat de porc aux bananes vertes) (Schwarz-Bart) 392
A Dish of Spices (Le Drageoir aux épices) (Huysmans) 213
The Disinherited Lady (Pérez Galdós) 347
Dislocations of Culture (Bahba) 352
La Disparition (A Void) (Perec) 346
 Djebbar, Assia 121
 Djinn (Robbe-Grillet) 373
Diagtego Zyjemy (Szymborska) 420
 Döblin, Alfred 122
Le Docker noir (The Black Dockworker) (Sembène) 395
Doctor Faustus (T. Mann) 282
 “A Doctor's Journal Entry for August 6, 1945” (Seth) 398
Doctor Zhivago (Pasternak) 341–342 doctrine of the absurd 74
Dog Heart: A Travel Memoir (Breytenbach) 63–64
Dog Years (Hundejahre) (Grass) 179–180
Dokimes (Essays on the Greek Style) (Seferis) 394
La Doleur (M. Duras) 127
A Doll's House (Ibsen) 217
Dona Flor and Her Two Husbands: A Moral and Amorous Tale (Amado) 17
Don Carlos (Schiller) 391
 “Don Juan” (Hoffmann) 206
 Donoso, José 122–123

- “Dopadi” (Devi) 116
 Dostoyevsky, Fyodor Mikhaylovich 98,
 123–125, 136, 366
A Double Life (Pavlova) 344
Double Persephone (Atwood) 32
Down There (Là-bas) (Huysmans)
 213–214
Le Drageoir aux épices (A Dish of Spices)
 (Huysmans) 213
Dragon Beard Ditch (Lao) 256
The Dragon’s Village (Chen) 91
Dramatic Actions (video) 253
Drayman Henschell (Fuhrman Henschell)
 (Hauptmann) 196
A Dream (Musset) 308
The Dreamers (Davis) 4
The Dreaming Youth (Kokoschka) 244
Dream of Fair to Middling Women
 (Beckett) 45
Dream of the Red Chamber (Cao Xueqin)
 210
Dream on Monkey Mountain (Walcott)
 447
A Dream Play (Strindberg) 416–417
Dreams (Träume) (Eich) 131
Dreams of a Rainbow (Kauraka) 237
Dreams of Georgia (Akhmadulina) 10
Dream-Stories (Brathwaite) 59
 Dreamtime 3
Die drei Sprünge des Wang-lun (The Three Leaps of Wang-lun) (Döblin) 122
Drifting Clouds (Hayashi Fumiko) 198
Das dritte Buch über Achim (The Third Book about Achim) (U. Johnson) 229
Driven by the Light of the Night
 (Tsushima) 431
 “The Drover’s Wife” (Lawson) 259
The Drowned and the Saved (Levi) 262
 “The Drowning of an Old Cat” (Huang Chunming) 211
The Drum Singers (Lao) 256
The Drunkard (L’Assommoir) (Zola) 462
The Dry Heart (Ginzburg) 168
Dry Valley (Bunin) 70
A Dry White Season (Brink) 65
 Du, Nguyen. See Nguyen Du
Dubliners (Joyce) 418
 Ducasse, Isadore-Lucien. See Lautréamont, comte de
 Dudintsev, Vladimir Dmitrievich
 125–126
Duino Elegies (Rilke) 370
Der dünkel Vogel (The Dark Bird)
 (Burkart) 70
 Dupin, Amandine-Aurore-Lucile. See
 Sand, George
 Duras, Claire de 126
 Duras, Marguerite 127–128, 321
Durgensnandini (Cattopadhyay) 81
 Dürrenmatt, Friedrich 128
Dusklands (Coetzee) 97
- Duval, Jeanne 41
Dvärgen (The Dwarf) (Lagerkvist) 250
The Dwarf (Dvärgen) (Lagerkvist) 250
- E
- Early Sorrows* (Kiš) 242
Earthchild, with Brain Surgery (Anyidoho)
 22
Earth Erect (Popa) 352
Earth’s Enigmas (Roberts) 373
East, West (Rushdie) 377
Eclipse of the Stars (Sternverdunkelung)
 (Sachs) 379
 Eco, Umberto 129–130
écriture féminine 143
Ecue-Yamba-O! (Carpentier) 78
Edible Woman (Atwood) 32
Edouard (C. Duras) 126
L’Éducation sentimentale (Flaubert) 148
Efuru (Nwapa) 328–329
The Ego and the Id (Freud) 152
 Ehrenburg, Ilya Grigoryevich 130
 Eich, Günter 9, 130–131, 183
The Eight Names of Picasso (Alberti) 13
 El Saadawi, Nawal. See Sadawi, Nawal
 “Ela” (Machado de Assis) 267
Elektra (Hofmannsthal) 207
Elements of a Dream (Jaccottet) 224
The Elephant (Slon) (Mrožek) 304, 405
Die Elefantenuhr (The Elephant Clock)
 (Höllerer) 209
Eleutheria (Beckett) 46
 Elias Sourasky Prize in Letters 79
 “Éloge de la Créolite” (Chamoiseau, Confiant, and Beranbé) 85
Éloges (Perse) 348
 Else Lasker-Schuler Prize 243
Elsewhere, Perhaps (Oz) 337
 Éluard, Paul 107, 131–132
 Elytis, Odysseus 132
 Emecheta, Buchi 133
The Emigrants (Lamming) 254
Emperor Shaka the Great (Kunene) 246
Empire of Dreams (Braschi) 57
En route (Huymans) 213
En Route (Sargeson) 386
L’enchanteur pourrissant (The Rotting Magician) (Apollinaire) 23
 Enchi, Fumiko 134
 “Encounter with the Ancestors” (Kunene)
 246
Endgame (Fin de partie) (Beckett) 45
Les Enfants du Sabbat (The Children of the Sabbath) (Hébert) 200
Les Enfants terribles (The Incurable Children) (Cocteau) 96
The Engineer of Human Souls (Škvorecký)
 404
English, August: An Indian Story
 (Chatterjee) 88
- Englishmen, Frenchmen, Spaniards*
 (Madariaga) 269
The English Patient (Ondaatje) 334–335
English Poems (Pessoa) 349
The English Teacher (Narayan) 313
The Enigma of Arrival (Naipaul) 311
Enriquillo (Galván) 219
L’Envers et l’endroit (The Wrong Side and the Right Side) (Camus) 74
The Envoy from Mirror City (Frame) 151
 Enzensberger, Hans Magnus 134
The Epic of Gallipoli (Dağlarca) 108
The Epic of Sheik Bedrettin (Hikmet) 204
Epic of the Three Martyrs (Dağlarca) 108
Epitaph for the Young (Walcott) 446
An Equal Music (Seth) 398
The Erasers (Robbe-Grillet) 372
L’Ere de soupçon (The Age of Suspicion)
 (Sarraute) 387
Eros at Breakfast (Davies) 112
Eros dans un train chinois (Eros in a Chinese Train) (Dépestre) 114
Eros in a Chinese Train (Eros dans un train chinois) (Dépestre) 114
 Esenin, Sergey. See Yesenin, Sergey
Esmond in India (Jhavalva) 226
España (Madariaga) 269
 Espinet, Ramabai 135
L’Espoir (Days of Hope) (Malraux) 278
 Espronceda y Delgado, José de 135–136
Essai historique, politique, et moral sur les révolutions anciennes et modernes (Historical, Political, and Moral Essays on the Ancient and Modern Revolutions)
 (Chateaubriand) 87
Essays on the Greek Style (Dokimes)
 (Seferis) 394
The Essential Gesture: Writing, Politics, and Places (Gordimer) 177
Es steht geschrieben (It Is Written)
 (Dürrenmatt) 128
The Estate (Singer) 403
The Estate and Other Poems (Brasch) 57
 Esther May Bedford Prize 317
Été (Summer) (Camus) 74
The Eternal Feminine (Castellanos) 79
Eternity to Season (Harris) 193
Ethics of Ambiguity (Beauvoir) 43
Étincelles (Sparks) (Dépestre) 114
 Etna-Taormina literary prize (Italy) 12
L’Étoile vespère (Colette) 99
L’Étranger (The Stranger) (Camus) 74, 82
L’Être et le néant (Being and Nothingness)
 (Sartre) 388–389 “Étroits sont les vaisseaux” (“Narrow are the Vessels”) (Perse) 348
L’Étudiant Noir (The Black Student)
 (newspaper) 84, 317, 396
Eugene Onegin (Pushkin) 358–359
Eurydice (Anouilh) 22
Eva Luna (Allende) 16

- L'Ève Future* (Villiers) 444
Evening (Akhmatova) 11
 "Evening Album" (Tsvetaeva) 431
Evenings on a Farm Near Dikanka (Gogol) 171
Even the Dead (Cronin) 105
 Ewe people 22
 "The Executioner" (Espronceda) 136
The exhausted rock (La piedra cansada) (Vallejo) 440
Exil (Exile) (Perse) 348 existentialism 136–137
 Beauvoir and 42
 in Cela 82
 Sartre in 387–389
 surrealism and 62
 Theater of the Absurd and 424
Experiments (Hu) 210
Explorations (Harris) 193
 expressionism 138 in Becher 44 in Döblin 122
 Kokoschka in 244
 Lasker-Schüler and 257
 Trakl in 430
The Extraordinary Adventures of Julia Jurenito and His Disciples (Ehrenburg) 130
The Eye of the Scarecrow (Harris) 193
Eyes of the Wilderness (Roberts) 373
- F
- Fabian. See Lagerkvist, Pär
The Face of Another (Abe) 2
Faces in the Water (Frame) 151
 Fadeyev, Aleksandr Aleksandrovich 139 fairy tales, of Andersen, Hans Christian 20
 Faiz Ahmed Faiz 140
 Falkner, Gerhard 140
The Fall (La Chute) (Camus) 75
The Fall of Paris (Ehrenburg) 130
 Fallacci, Oriana 141
The Fallen Oaks (Malraux) 278
Familiar Ground (De Kok) 113
Family (Ba Jin) 34, 367
The Family (Emecheta) 133
The Family Idiot (L'Idiot de la famille) (Sartre) 389
The Family Moskat (Singer) 403
The Family of Pascal Duarte (Cela) 82
Family Sayings (Ginzburg) 168
Family Ties (Lispector) 264
Le Fanal bleu (Colette) 99
La Fanfarlo (Baudelaire) 41
Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade (L'amour, la fantasia) (Djebar) 121
 Farah, Nuruddin 141–142
The Farewell Party (Kundera) 244
Far from Medina (Loin de Medine: filles d'Ismail) (Djebar) 121
The Far Journey of Oudin (Harris) 193
 "Fatalities" (Dario) 111
 "The Fat Man in History" (Carey) 77
 "Father against Mother" (Machado de Assis) 267–268
Father Goriot (Le Père Goriot) (Balzac) 38
Fathers and Sons (Turgenev) 433
Father Sky and Mother Earth (Noonuccal) 327
Faust (Goethe) 170
The Fear (Keneally) 240
The Feast of the Goat (Vargas) 441
Felling (Mistral) 296
 feminism(s) 142–143. See also women's issues Beauvoir and 42
 in Cixous 93–94
 in Devi 116
 in Ding Ling 119
 in Emecheta 133
 in Ferré 144 in García Lorca 159–160
 in Ho 205
 magic realism and 271 in Mexico 79
 in Nwapa 328–329 in Ogot 332
 in Sadawi 380
 in Samman 382
 in Staël 412
 in Storni 415
 in Wittig 450
 Feneon Prize for Literature 372
 Feng Zhi 144
Ferdydurke (Gombrowicz) 172
 Ferré, Rosario 144–145
 "Ferryboat and Traveler" (Han) 191
Ein Fest Für Boris (A Party For Boris) (Bernhard) 50
Fêtes Galantes (Verlaine) 443
Fetish (Harris) 193
Feu de Joie (Aragon) 25
Feuilles d'automne (Autumn Leaves) (Hugo) 212
Fictions (Borges) 56
Fiddler on the Roof (musical) 14
 Fiedeler, Hans. See Döblin, Alfred
The Fiery Angel (Bryusov) 67
The Fifteen (Queiróz) 362
15 Poems of Isabel Fraire (Fraire) 150
Fifth Business (Davies) 112
La Fille Élisia (Goncourt and Goncourt) 175
Les filles du feu (The Daughters of Fire) (Nerval) 320
Fin de partie (Endgame) (Beckett) 45 fin de siècle 113, 145–146, 276
A Fine Balance (Mistry) 297
Finnegan's Wake (Joyce) 44–45
Fire on the Mountain (Desai) 115
 "Fireweed" (Ōba) 330
First Cantos (Primeiros cantos) (Gonçalves Dias) 174, 219
The First Circle (Solzhenitsyn) 408
The First Heavenly Adventure of Mr. Antipyrine (La Première Aventure céleste de Monsieur Antipyrine) (Tzara) 434
The First Madman (Castro) 80
 First Municipal Poetry Prize 415
First Spring (Primo Vere) (D'Annunzio) 109
 Fischer, Caroline Auguste 146
 "The Fisherman's Invocation" (Okara) 334
Five Great Odes (Claudel) 95
Five Minutes (Alencar) 14
 Flanagan, Richard 146–147
 Flaubert, Gustave 147–148, 298, 366, 389
Flaws in the Glass (White) 448
Les Fleurs du mal (Flowers of Evil) (Baudelaire) 41–42, 298, 419
The Flies (Les Mouches) (Sartre) 389
 "Flight" (Hwang Tonggyu) 215
Flight to Arras (Saint-Exupéry) 381
Flint and Feather (P. Johnson) 228
A Floating Bridge of Dreams (Kurahashi) 247
Floating the River in Melancholy (Tanikawa) 423
Flood (Ding Ling) 119
The Flounder (Das Butt) (Grass) 180
The Flower (Castro) 80
Flowers of Evil (Les Fleurs du mal) (Baudelaire) 41–42, 419
Flowers of Mould (Arghezi) 26
Flugasche (Flying Ash) (Maron) 285
 "The Fly" (Mansfield) 283
Flyaway Peter (Malouf) 277
The Flying Man (Abe) 2
 Fo, Dario 148–149
Foe (Coetzee) 97–98
The Folk Culture of Jamaican Slaves (Brathwaite) 58
 Fontane, Theodor 149, 350
 Fontane Prize 229
The Fool in Christ, Emanuel Quint (Der Narr in Christo, Emanuel Quint) (Hauptmann) 196
 "A Fool's Life" (Akutagawa) 13
A Foot-bound Butterfly (Yamada) 455
 Footfalls (Beckett) 45
For a New Novel (Robbe-Grillet) 321, 372
Forbidden Colors (Mishima) 295
The Forbidden Stitch: An Asian-American Women's Anthology (Lim, ed.) 263
Force of Circumstance (Beauvoir) 42
The Force of Habit (Die Macht der Gewohnheit) (Bernhard) 50
 "For Don Drummond" (Goodison) 176
The Forefathers Eve (Mickiewicz) 292

- A Forest in Full-Bloom* (Mishima) 294
Forms of Distance (Bei Dao) 47
A Fortnight in Paris (Vierzehn Tage in Paris) (Fischer) 146
 “The Fortune-Teller” (Machado de Assis) 267
 Foscolo, Ugo 150
Fossil and Psyche (Harris) 194
Foucault’s Pendulum (Eco) 129
Founding and Manifesto of Futurism (Marinetti) 155–156, 284
 “The Fountain of Bakhchisarai” (Pushkin) 358
Four Generations Under One Roof (Lao) 256
The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Los cuatro jinetes del Apocalipsis) (Blasco) 54
Four Plays for Primary Schools (Brathwaite) 58
Les Fous de Bassan (In the Shadow of the Wind) (Hébert) 200
The Fox Hunt (Verga) 442
Fra det Moderne Amerikas Aansliv (Cultural Life in Modern America) (Hamsun) 189–190 Fraire, Isabel 150
 Frame, Janet 150–151
Francesca da Rimini (D’Annunzio) 110
 Franz Kafka Prize 192
 “Das Fräulein von Scuderi” (Hoffmann) 206
 Freedom Literary Award 214, 342
Free Enterprise (Cliff) 96
 Free Literature Prize 339
 French literature
 Anouilh in 21–22
 Balzac in 37
 Baudelaire in 40–42
 Chateaubriand in 86–87
 Constant de Rebecque in 102
 Flaubert in 147–148
 Giraudoux in 169
 Goncourt brothers in 175
 Hugo in 212–213
 Huysmans in 213–214
 Maupassant in 286–287
 Musset in 308
 New Novel in 321
 Perse in 348
 French realism 366
 French romanticism 375
 French-Canadian literature, Maillet in 274
 “Fréole,” 85
 Freud, Sigmund 138, 151–152, 298
 Freyre, Gilberto de Mello 152–153
 Fried, Erich 153
 Friedrich Hölderlin Prize 242
 “Friend Mussunda” (Neto) 320
Friends (Abe) 2
Frigate Pallada (Goncharov) 174
Frighten and Other Poetries (Jaccottet) 224
A Fringe of Leaves (White) 448
 Frisch, Max 153–154
 “The Frog Prince” (Grimm and Grimm) 182
From Exile to Diaspora: Versions of the Filipino Experience in the United States (San Juan) 383
From the Other Shore (Herzen) 202
The Fruits of the Earth (Gide) 167
 Fuentes, Carlos 154–155, 161, 270–271
The Fugitive (Toer) 427
Fuhrman Henschell (Drayman Henschell) (Hauptmann) 196
Full Powers (Giraudoux) 169
 “Funeral in Accra” (Laing) 252
A Funeral Toast (Mallarmé) 276
Fury (Rushdie) 377
 futurism 155–156, 284–285, 341
- ## G
- Gabo. See García Márquez, Gabriel
Gabriela, cravo e canela (Gabriela, Clove and Cinnamon) (Amado) 17
 Galician literature, Castro in 79–80
 Galician Songs (Castro) 80
 Galileo (Brecht) 61
 Galván, Manuel de Jesús 219
The Gambler (Dostoyevsky) 124
A Game of Contemporaneity (‘e) 332
 Ganantaya theater group 116
 Gandhi, Mohandas K (aramchand) 19, 157–158, 353, 429
 Ganivet y García, Ángel, in Generation of 1898 163
 Gao Xingjian 158–159, 300
 García Lorca, Federico 13, 159–160
 García Márquez, Gabriel 160–162, 270–271, 353
The Garden (Akhmadulina) 10
Garden, Ashes (Kis) 242
 “The Garden of Forking Paths” (Borges) 56
The Garden Party (Havel) 197
 “The Garden Party” (Mansfield) 282–283
The Garden of Repose (Ba Jin) 34
The Garlic Ballads (Mo) 297
 Gautier, Théophile 162–163
The Gay Science (Nietzsche) 324–325
 “Gedicht” (“Poem”) (Köhler) 243
Gedichte (Poems) (Huchel) 211
Gedichte (Poems) (Kaschnitz) 236
Gefängnis-Tagebuch (Prison Diary) (Rinser) 372
General Confession (Davies) 112
 Generation of Coimbra 363
 Generation of 1898 163
 Baroja y Nessi in 39
 Jiménez in 227
 Machado y Ruiz, Antonio, in 268
 Machado y Ruiz, Manuel, in 269
 Pérez Galdós in 347
 Unamuno y Jugo in 435–436
 Generation of 1927 13
Genesis of the Clowns (Harris) 194
 Genet, Jean 164, 389, 425
The Genius of Christianity (Chateaubriand) 87
The Gentleman from San Francisco (Bunin) 70 Georg Büchner Prize
 about 68
 for Bachmann 37 for Benn 49 for Bernhard 50 for Celan 83 for Dürrenmatt 128 for Enzensberger 134 for Frisch 154 for Grass 180
 for Grünbein 182
 for Johnson, Uwe 229 for Kaschnitz 236 for Müller 304
 for Wolf 451
 George, Stefan 113, 165
 Georg Trakl Prize for Poetry 9
Die gerettete Erde (The Saved Earth) (Burkart) 70
Die Gerettete Zunge (The Rescued Tongue) (Canetti) 75
 German Academy for Language and Learning 229
 German Academy of Arts 180
 German literature
 Ausländer in 33
 Becher in 44
 Böll in 54
 Brinkmann in 65–66
 Büchner in 67
 Celan in 82–83
 expressionism in 138
 Falkner in 140
 Fischer in 146
 Frisch in 153–154
 George in 165
 Goethe in 169–171
 Grass in 179–181
 Grimm brothers in 181–182
 Grünbein in 182–183
 Handke in 192
 Hauptmann in 195–197
 Heine in 201
 Hesse in 203
 Hölderlin in 207–208
 Höllerer in 209
 Johnson, Uwe, in 228–229
 Jünger in 229–230
 Köhler in 243
 Lasker-Schüler in 257–258

- Mann, Heinrich, in 280
Mann, Thomas, in 280–282
Maron in 285
Müller in 304–305
Nietzsche in 323–325
Remarque in 367–368
Rilke in 369–370
Schiller in 390–392
German romanticism 374–375
 Apollinaire and 23
 Goethe in 170
 Heine in 201
 Hoffmann in 206
German Roulette (Deutsches Roulette)
 (Köhler) 243
Germany: A Winter's Tale (Heine) 201
Germinial (Zola) 462
Germinie Lacerteux (Goncourt and Goncourt) 175
Gesprach mit dem Saurier (Conversation with a Dinosaur) (Kirsch) 242
Der Geteilte Himmel (The Divided Heaven)
 (Wolf) 451
Getting Married (Strindberg) 416
Ghamacronlib, Mirzamacron 165–166
Ghosh, Amitav 166–167
Ghosts (Ibsen) 217
Ghosts in the Mirror (Robbe-Grillet) 373
Gide, André 167–168, 438
Gift of the Cow (Godān) (Premchand)
 356
Gigi (Colette) 99
Gimpel the Fool (Singer) 403
Ginzburg, Natalia 168
La Gioconda (D'Annunzio) 110
Il Gioco Segreto (Morante) 302
Giraudoux, Jean 169
The Girl from the Coast (Toer) 426
Giselle (Gautier) 163
GitanjalÓ (Tagore) 422
Die gläsernen Runge (Rings of Glass)
 (Rinsler) 371–372
The Glass Bead Game (Hesse) 203
The Glass Bees (Jünger) 230
The Glass Palace (Ghosh) 166
Globe Award 223
“Go Ahead” (Tian) 425
The God of Small Things (Roy) 376
Godān (Gift of the Cow) (Premchand)
 356
The Godforsaken World (Espronceda)
 136
Godhorse (Laing) 252
Godoy Alcayaga, Lucila. See Mistral
 Gabriela.
God's Bits of Wood (Les Bouts de bois de Dieu) (Sembène) 395
Gods of Our Time (Serote) 397
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von 27,
 169–171, 374
Goethe Prize 230, 282
Goethe's Briefwechsel mit einem Kinde
 (Goethe's Correspondence with a Child)
 (Arnim) 27
Gogol, Nikolay 171–172, 366
Going-on Talking: Tales of a Great Aunt
 (Wright) 452
“The Golden Cockerel” (Pushkin) 359
Golden Gate (Seth) 398
“The Golden Pot” (Hoffmann) 206
The Golden Threshold (Naidu) 310
“The Golden Verses” (Nerval) 320
Golpitha (Dhasal) 118
Gombrowicz, Witold 172–173
Gomringer, Eugen 173
Gonçalves Dias de Margallães, Domingos
 José 219
Gonçalves Dias Dias, Antônio 174
Goncharov, Ivan 174, 366
Goncourt, Edmond and Jules 175, 315
Goncourt Prize. See Prix Goncourt
“Good-bye, Mr. Nothingness” (Yu) 459
Goodison, Lorna 175–176
Good Morning Midnight (Rhys) 368–369
The Good Person of Setzuan (Brecht) 61
The Good Soldier Schweik (Hašek) 194
Gordimer, Nadine 176–177, 353
Gorenko, Anna Andreyevna. See
 Akhmatova, Anna
Gorky, Maxim 178–179, 405
Gorky Institute of Literature,
 Akhmadulina at 10
Gorodetsky, Sergey 7
The Gospel According to Jesus Christ
 (Saramago) 385
The Gospel According to St. Matthew (film)
 341
Gould's Book of Fish (Flanagan) 147
Governor General's Award for Davies 112 for Hébert 200 for Maillat 274 for bpNichol 323
 for Ondaatje 335
 for Škvorecký 404
Graça Aranha Foundation prize 362
Grace Leven Poetry Prize 277, 452
Graham, Peter. See Abrahams, Peter Henry
Grand National Prize for Poetry (France?) 55
Grass, Günter 179–181, 183
“A Grave for New York” (Adonis) 8
Grazyna (Mickiewicz) 292
Great Austrian State Prize 192
“The Greater Common Good” (Roy) 376
The Greater Hope (Die Größere Hoffnung)
 (Aichinger) 9
Great Order of Merit 230
Greek literature 81, 132, 238, 393–394
Greek Lyrics (Quasimodo) 361
“Green Deer” (Pak) 339
Grimm, Jacob and Wilhelm 181–182, 374
Grimus (Rushdie) 377
Die Größere Hoffnung (The Greater Hope)
 (Aichinger) 9
Grosz, Geroge, Canetti and 75
Group 1925 122
Group Portrait with Lady (Gruppenbild mit Dame) (Böll) 54
The Growth of the Soil (Markens Grøde)
 (Hamsun) 190
Grünbein, Durs 182–183
Grünzweig, Dorothea 183
Gruppenbild mit Dame (Group Portrait with Lady) (Böll) 54
Gruppe 47 183–184
 Aichinger in 9
 Böll in 54
 Eich in 131
 Enzensberger in 134
 Grass in 179
 Handke and 192
 Höllerer in 209
Guan Moye. See Mo Yan
O Guarani (The Guarani Indian) (Alencar)
 15, 219
Guardian Prize for Children's Fiction 115
Guatemalan literature, Menchú in 290–291
Gubudele and the Cannibals (UGubudele namazimuzimu) (Ndebele) 317
Les Guérillères (Wittig) 450
La Guerra Desde Londres (The War from London) (Madariaga) 269
Guerrillas (Naipaul) 311
Guerrilla Theater 29
A Guest of Honor (Gordimer) 176
Guest the One-Eyed (Gunnarsson) 187
Guía del lector del Quijote (Madariaga)
 269
The Guide (Narayan) 313
Guillén, Jorge 184
Guillén, Nicolás 184
The Guitar Player of Long Thanh (Nguyen) 322
Gulag Archipelago (Solzhenitsyn) 408
Gumilev, Nikolay 7, 11, 185–186
Gunesequera, Romesh 186
Gunnarsson, Gunnar 186–187
Günter, Erich. See Eich, Günter
Gunzö New Writer's Prize 199, 330
Gustavs Verirungen (Gustav's Aberrations)
 (Fischer) 146
Guyanan literature, Harris in 193–194
Gypsy Ballads (García Lorca) 160
- ## H
- Habibi, Emile 188
Hagiwara, Sautaromacron 188–189
Hallelujah for a Garden-Woman (Alléluia pour une femme-jardin) (Dépestre) 114
Halloran's Little Boat (Keneally) 240

- The Hallucination (Le Horla)*
(Maupassant) 286
- Halter, Erika. See Burkart, Erika
- Hamsun, Knut 189–191
- Han d'Islande* (Hugo) 212
- The Hand That Feeds You* (Hasluck) 195
- Handke, Peter 192–193, 355
- The Handmaid's Tale* (Atwood) 32
- The Hangover* (Sargeson) 386
- Hanneles Himmelfahrt (The Assumption of Hannele)* (Hauptmann) 196
- Han Yongun 191
- Happy Days* (Beckett) 45, 425
- Happy Valley* (White) 448
- Hard-Boiled Wonderland and the End of the World* (Murakami) 306
- Hard Labor* (Pavese) 343
- Harmonies* (Lamartine) 253
- Harold U. Ribelow Prize 25
- Haroun and the Sea of Stories* (Rushdie) 378
- Harris, Wilson 193–194
- A Harvest of Our Dreams with Elegy for the Revolution* (Anyidoho) 22
- Hašek, Jaroslav 194
- Hasluck, Nicholas 195
- Hateship, Friendship, Courtship, Loveship, Marriage* (Munro) 306
- Hauptmann, Gerhart 195–197
- Der Hausierer (The Peddler)* (Handke) 192
- Havel, Václav 197
- Hayashi Fumiko 198
- Hayashi Kyomacronko 198–199
- Hayslip, Le Ly 199
- Head, Bessie 199–200
- Head Above Water* (Emecheta) 133
- "The Head of Hair" ("La Chevelure") (Baudelaire) 41
- Heartease* (Goodison) 176
- Hear the Wind Sing* (Murakami) 306
- Heartland* (Harris) 193
- Heart of a Dog* (Bulgakov) 69
- Heat and Dust* (Jhabvala) 226
- Hébert, Anne 200
- Hebrew literature 8–9, 18–19
- Hedda Gabler* (Ibsen) 217
- Heine, Heinrich 201
- Heinrich Heine Prize 59
- Heinrich Mann Prize 59, 304
- Heirs of Stalin* (Yevtushenko) 457
- Hello and Goodbye to Négritude (Bonjour et adieu à la négritude)* (Dépestre) 114
- "Hell Screen" (Akutagawa) 13
- Héloïse* (Hébert) 200
- Henry Christophe* (Walcott) 446
- Henry IV (The Living Mask)* (Pirandello) 349–350
- L'Herbe* (Simon) 402
- Herémakhonon (Welcome Home)* (Condé) 101
- The Hermit* (Ionesco) 220
- Hernani* (Hugo) 212
- A Hero of Our Time* (Lermontov) 261
- Hérodiade* (Mallarmé) 276
- Heroic and Elegiac Song of the Lost Second Lieutenant of Albania* (Elytis) 132
- A Hero's Battle Song* (Tian) 425
- herstories 4
- Hertzog Prize for Afrikaans Literature (South Africa) 65
- Herzen, Aleksandr Ivanovich 202
- Hesitation* (Lu) 265
- Hesse, Hermann 203
- Der Hessische Landbote (The Hessian Courier)* (Büchner) 68
- He Who Must Die* (Kazantzakis) 238
- The Hidden Face of Eve* (Sadawi) 380
- Hidden Grass* (Feng) 144
- Higuchi, Ichiyomacron 204
- Hikmet, Nazim 204–205
- Himlens Hemlighet (The Secret of Heaven)* (Hagerkvist) 250
- Hind Swaraj (Indian Home Rule)* (Gandhi) 158
- Hiraoka Kimitake. See Mishima Yukio
- Hiroshima, Mon Amour* (M. Duras) 127
- "His Son's Big Doll" (Huang Chunming) 211
- Histoire de ma vie* (Sand) 384
- Histoire des Girondins (History of the Girondists)* (Lamartine) 253
- Historical, Political, and Moral Essays on the Ancient and Modern Revolutions (Essai historique, politique, et moral sur les révolutions anciennes et modernes)* (Chateaubriand) 87
- History (La Storia)* (Monrante) 301–302
- History of Astronomy* (Leopardi) 260
- History of the Girondists (Histoire des Girondins)* (Lamartine) 253
- History of the Russian State* (Karamzin) 235
- The Hitchhiker* (Simenon) 401
- The Hive (La Colmena)* (Cela) 331
- Ho Xuan Huong 205
- Hochschule für Gestaltung 9
- Hoffmann, E.T.A. 205–206, 374
- Hofmannsthal, Hugo von 113, 206–207
- "Hogwash" (Sri Sri) 411
- Hölderlin, Friedrich 207–208
- Holding up the Sky: Aboriginal Women Speak* (collection) 4
- Höllerer, Walter 209
- Holocaust
- Aichinger and 9
 - Appelfeld and 24
 - Ausländer and 33
 - Celan and 82–83
 - Levi and 262
 - Sachs and 379
 - Wiesel and 450
- Home and Exile* (Achebe) 5
- Home and Exile* (Nkosi) 326
- Home Ground* (Brasch) 57
- The Home and the World* (Tagore) 422
- Home in Three Worlds* (Hayashi Kyōko) 198
- "Homesick for Motherland" (Tsvetaeva) 432
- L'Homme aux sandales de caoutchouc (The Man in the Rubber Sandals)* (Yacine) 454
- L'Homme Révolté (The Rebel)* (Camus) 75
- Homo Faber* (Frisch) 154
- homosexuality
- in Arenas 26
 - in Cavafy 81
 - in fin de siècle 145
 - in Genet 164
 - in Gide 167
 - in Mishima 295
 - in Morante 302
 - in Wittig 450
 - in Yourcenar 458–459
- Die Honigmonathe (The Honeymoons)* (Fischer) 146
- Hopscotch* (Cortázar) 103
- Le Horla (The Hallucination)* (Maupassant) 286
- Horner, Jack 3
- Die Hornissen (The Hornets)* (Handke) 192
- Horoz (Dağlarca) 108
- "Hosay" (Laird) 253
- The Hostage (L'otage)* (Claudel) 95
- Hosties noires* (Black victims) (Senghor) 396
- Hototogisu* (magazine) 285
- Hourglass* (Kis) 242
- The Hour of the Star* (Lispector) 264
- A House for Mr. Biswas* (Naipaul) 311
- The Householder* (Jhabvala) 226
- The House of Bernarda Alba* (García Lorca) 160
- House of Liars (Menzogna e Sortilegio)* (Morante) 302
- The House of the Dead* (Dostoyevsky) 124
- The House of the Spirits* (Allende) 16, 271
- The House Where Living Things Are Gathering* (Tsushima) 431
- How the Steel Was Tempered* (Ostrovsky) 337
- "How to Build a Time Machine" (Jarry) 225
- "How Wang-Fo Was Saved" (Yourcenar) 458
- Howard's End* (film) 226
- Howling at the Moon* (Hagiwara) 189
- Hsieh Wan-ying. See Bing Xin
- Huang Chunming 210–211
- Huang Zunxian 299
- Huchel, Peter 211

- Hugo, Victor 145, 212–213, 375
Huis-clos (No Exit) (Sartre) 389
Human, All Too Human (Nietzsche) 324
The Human Comedy (La Comédie humaine) (Balzac) 38, 366
Human Landscapes (Hikmet) 205
Human Poems (Vallejo) 440
The Humiliation of the Father (Le Père humilié) (Claudel) 95
Humulus the Mute (Anouilh) 21
Hundejahre (Dog Years) (Grass) 179–180
Hunger (Hamsun) 335
“Hunger” (Tian) 425
Hu Shih 209–210, 299–300, 366
Huysmans, Joris-Karl 113, 213–214, 315
Hwang Sun-won 214
Hwang Tonggyu 215
Hyōsatsu nado (Nameplates, Etc.) (Ishigaki) 223
Hyperion (Hölderlin) 208
Hypnos Waking (Char) 86
- I
- I, Rigoberta Menchú* (Menchú) 291, 353
I, Tituba, Black Witch of Salem (Moi, Tituba, sorcière de Salem) (Condé) 101
I Am a Cat (Natsume) 314
I Am a Creature (Ungaretti) 437
I Am a Martinician Woman (Je suis martiniquaise) (Capécia) 76
“I Am a Terrorist” (Kabbani) 231
I Am Becoming My Mother (Goodison) 176
“I Am Looking for a Word” (“Szukam slowa”) (Szymborska) 420
Ibadan, The Penkelemes Years, A Memoir: 1946–1965 (Soyinka) 409
“I Bear Witness That There Is No Woman But You” (Kabbani) 231–232
Ibsen, Henrik 52–53, 216–217
I Canti (Leopardi) 260
The Iceland (Hagiwara) 189
Icelandic literature, Gunnarsson in 186–187
“Iconoclast” (Okara) 334
I'd Die Tonight If I Didn't Think It Had Been Worth It (Fo) 149
“Identity Card” (Darwish) 111
The Idiot (Dostoyevsky) 124
L'Idiot de la famille (The Family Idiot) (Sartre) 389
Idris, Yumacronsuf 218
If I Die (Gide) 167
If Not Now, When (Levi) 262
If on a Winter's Night a Traveler (Calvino) 74
If This Is a Man (Levi) 262
The Ignoramus (Jaccottet) 224
Ihenfeld, Christa. See Wolf, Christa
Ikhtayyi (Such a Pity) (Habib) 188
The Ill-Fated Peregrinations of Fray Servando (Arenas) 26
Illuminations (Rimbaud) 371
Illusions perdues (Lost Illusions) (Balzac) 38
Illywhacker (Carey) 77
Image of complaint (Naqsh-e Faryadi) (Faiz) 140
Imaginary Homelands: Essays and Criticism 1981–1991 (Rushdie) 377
An Imaginary Life (Malouf) 277
Imalayan, Fatima Zohra. See Djebar, Assia
Immermann Prize 230
The Immigrants (White) 448
The Immoralist (Gide) 167
I'm Not Stiller (Frisch) 154
Imperial Order of Culture 424
The Improvisator (Andersen) 20
Les Impudents (M. Duras) 127
In a Free State (Naipaul) 311
In a German Pension (Mansfield) 282
In a Green Night (Walcott) 447
In An Antique Land (Ghosh) 166
The Incurable Children (Les Enfants terribles) (Cocteau) 96
The Increased Difficulty of Concentration (Havel) 197
In Custody (Desai) 115
The Indelible Seal (Das Unauslöschliche) (Langgässer) 256
In den Wohnungen des Todes (In the Habitations of Death) (Sachs) 379
In Desert and Wilderness (Sienkiewicz) 401
India: A Million Mutinies Now (Naipaul) 117, 312
India: A Wounded Civilisation (Naipaul) 312
Indiana (Sand) 383–384
Indian Home Rule (Hind Swaraj) (Gandhi) 158
Indianism 219
Indian literature. See also Dalit literature
Abbas in 1
Anand in 19
Bhatt in 50–51
Cattopadhyay in 80–81
Chatterjee in 87–88
Chatterji in 88–89
Chughtai in 92
Desai in 115
Devi in 116
Dhasal in 117–118
Gandhi in 157–158
Gh,lib in 165–166
Ghosh in 166–167
Karnad in 235–236
Mehta in 289
Naidu in 310–311
Narayan in 312–314
Premchand in 92, 356
Roy in 376
Satyanarayana in 389–390
Souza in 409
Sri Sri in 410–411
Tagore in 421–422
Indian People's Theatre Association (IPTA) 1
Indirections: A Memoir (Brasch) 57
In Divers Tones (Roberts) 373
Indochina in Chains (newspaper) 278
Indonesian literature 426–427
Infante's Inferno (Cabrera) 73
The Infinite Plan (Allende) 16
“Ingeborg Bachmann Stirbt in Rom” (“Ingeborg Bachmann Dies in Rome”) (Köhler) 243
Ingrid Jonker Prize 104, 397
Inhibitions, Symptoms and Anxiety (Freud) 152
“In Looking at Winter Orchids” (So) 404
In My Father's Court (Singer) 403
The Inner Face (Tzara) 434
Inner Voices (Voix intérieures) (Hugo) 212
Inni Sacri (Manzoni) 283
L'Innommable (The Unnameable) (Beckett) 45
In Other Worlds (Spivak) 352
Inoyiya (Otherland) (Yesenin) 456
In Porter's Lodge (Verga) 441
Inquilab: A Novel of the Indian Revolution (Abbas) 1
In Search of Lost Time (À la recherche du temps perdu) (Proust) 48, 356–357
In Search of Love and Beauty (Jhavalva) 227
“Insel Seil!” (“The Island of Seil!”) (Grünzweig) 183
Inshallah (Fallaci) 141
Inside (Cronin) 104–105
Inside and Out (Cronin) 105
The Inspector General (Gogol) 171–172
The Insulted and Injured (Dostoyevsky) 124
Inter Ice Age 4 (Abe) 2
“Interiors” (Malouf) 277
L'Intermezzo di rime (D'Annunzio) 110
International Literary Festival, Dhasal at 118
International Peace Award 238
The Interpretation of Dreams (Freud) 151–152
In the Castle of My Skin (Lamming) 254
In the Dark (Ding Ling) 119
In the Ditch (Emecheta) 133
In the Habitations of Death (In den Wohnungen des Todes) (Sachs) 379
In the Heart of the Country (Coetzee) 97
In the Labyrinth (Robbe-Grillet) 372
In the Shadow of the Wind (Les Fous de Bassan) (Hébert) 200
In the Skin of the Lion (Ondaatje) 334

- "In the Storm of Roses" (Bachmann) 37
 "In the Storm That Is to Come" (Lawson) 259
In the World (Gorky) 179
Intimacy (Le Mûr) (Sartre) 388
The Intruder (Maeterlinck) 270
 Inuit literature, Ipeellie in 220
 "Inventur" (Eich) 131
Invisible Cities (Calvino) 73
Involuntary Journey to Siberia (Amalrik) 18
In Which Annie Gives It Those Ones (Roy) 376
 Ionesco, Eugène 137, 219–220, 425
 Ipeellie, Alooook 220
 Iqbal, Muhammad 220–222
Iracema (Alencar) 15, 219
I Saw a Blue Horse (Hayashi Fumiko) 198
 Ishigaki Rin 222–223
Ishigaki Rin Shish° (Ishigaki's Rin Poetry Anthology) (Ishigaki) 223
Isis (Villiers) 444
 "The Island of Seili" ("Insel Seili") (Grünzweig) 183
Islands (Brathwaite) 58
 "The Isolation of Two Million Light Years" (Tanikawa) 423
 Israeli literature 24–25, 337, 338, 365
 Israel Prize 25, 188, 337
Issa Valley (Milosz) 293
Issues in Contemporary Arabic Poetry (Qadaya al-shi'r al-mu'asir) (Mala'ika) 275
Italian Folktales (Calvino) 73
 Italian literature
 Calvino in 73–74
 D'Annunzio in 109
 Eco in 129–130
 futurism in 155–156
 Ginzburg in 168
 Leopardi in 260
 Manzoni in 283–284
 Pasolini in 340–341
 Pavese in 343
 Pirandello in 349–350
 scapigliatura in 390
 Svevo in 417–418
 Verga in 442
It Is Written (Es steht geschrieben) (Dürrenmatt) 128
Ivanov (Chekhov) 89
 "I Want to Sleep" (Storni) 415
I Will Marry When I Want (Ngugi) 322
 "I Worship Mother" ("Vande Materam") (Cattopadhyay) 81
The Izu Dancer (Kawabata) 237
 Izumi Kyōka Memorial Prize 247
- J
- Jaccottet, Philippe 224–225
J'Accuse (Zola) 145, 462
- "Jackfruit" (Ho) 205
Jack Maggs (Carey) 77
The Jaguar Smile (Rushdie) 377
(Jamaica) Dialect Verses (Bennett) 49
Jamaica Labrish (Bennett) 49
 Jamaican literature 49, 175–176
 James Tait Black Prize 377
 Japanese literature
 Abe Kōbō in 1–2
 Akutagawa Ryūnosuke in 12–13
 Enchi Fumiko in 134
 Hagiwara in 188–189
 Hayashi Fumiko in 198
 Higuchi in 204
 Ishigaki in 222–223
 Kawabata in 237–238
 Masaoka in 285–286
 Mishima in 294
 Mori in 303
 Murakami in 306
 Natsume in 314
 Shiga in 399
 Yamada in 455
 Japanese Literature Grand Prize 134
 Jarry, Alfred 225
 "Jaw" (Laing) 252
 Al-Jayyusi, Salma al-Khadra 225–226
Jazz and the West Indian Novel (Brathwaite) 58
Jealousy (Robbe-Grillet) 372
Jejak Langkah (Toer) 427
Jerusalem (Lagerlöf) 251
 "Jessie's Spine" (Yamada) 455
Je suis martiniquaise (I Am a Martinician Woman) (Capécia) 76
 Jewish literature. See also Hebrew literature; Holocaust; Yiddish literature
 Ausländer in 33
 Babel in 35–36
 Bitton in 52
 Celan in 82–83
 Lasker-Schüler in 257–258
 Memmi in 289–290
 Singer in 402–403
 Jhabvala, Ruth Prawer 226–227
 Jiang Bingzhi. See Ding Ling
 Jiménez, Juan Ramón 227
 Jnanpith Award 236
Jocelyn (Lamartine) 253
 Johannes B. Becher Prize 247
Johnno (Malouf) 277
 Johnson, Pauline 227–228
 Johnson, Uwe 228–229
The Joke (Kundera) 244
The Joker of Seville (Walcott) 447
Joseph and His Brothers (T. Mann) 281–282
 Journalists' Association Prize 239
Journal des Goncourts (Goncourt and Goncourt) 175
- Journal of a Resistance Fighter* (Beauvoir) 43
Journal of the Arts (Blätter für die Kunst) 165
Journey to Armenia (Mandelstam) 279
Journey to the End of the Night (Céline) 83
 Joyce, James 44–45, 418
Joyful Ill (Pirandello) 349
Joyzelle (Maeterlinck) 270
Jubiabá (Amado) 17
Judas Eye (Breytenbach) 63
Judith (Giraudoux) 169
Juju Island (Okara) 333
 Jünger, Ernst 229–230
Junius Brutus (Canetti) 75
The Junk Museum (Ōba) 330
Jürg Reinhardt (Frisch) 153
The Just Assassins (Camus) 75
- K
- Kabbani, Nizar 231–232
 Kafka, Franz 138, 232–233
 Kahlschlag (Clean Sweep) movement 131
Kamen (Stone) (Mandelstam) 279
Kangaroo Notebook (Abe) 2
 Kanik, Orhan Veli 233–234
 Kao Tsing-jen. See Gao Xingjian
Kara Kitap (The Black Book) (Pamuk) 339
 Karamzin, Nikolai Mikhailovich 234–235
Karma Cola: Marketing the Mystic East (Mehta) 289 al-Karmel (magazine) 112
 Karnad, Girish 235–236
Karobran: The Story of an Aboriginal Girl (Clare) 3
 Kaschnitz, Marie Luise 236
 Katherine Newman Award 383
Katz und Maus (Cat and Mouse) (Grass) 179–180
 Kauraka Kauraka 236–237
 Kawabata Yasunari 237–238, 295
 Kawabata Yasunari Literary Award 199, 431
 Kazantzakis, Nikos 94, 238
 Kemal, Yascedillaar 238–239
 Keneally, Thomas 239–240
Khel (Play) (Dhasal) 118
 "Khor and Kalinich" (Turgenev) 432–433
Khun Det (Dharmachoti) 117
 Kierkegaard, Søren 137
Kifah Tiba (Struggle at Thebes) (Mahfouz) 272–273
 Kincaid, Jamaica 241
The Kingdom Come (Der neue Riech) (George) 165
The Kingdom of This World (Carpentier) 78
Kingdom (Walcott) 447
King, Queen, Knave (Nabokov) 309
 "The King of Asine" (Seferis) 393–394

- King Phoenix* (Davies) 112
King Ubu (Ubu roi) (Jarry) 225, 425
 Kirsch, Sarah 241–242
 Kiš, Danilo 242
 Klausner, Amos. See Oz, Amos
 Kleist Prize 257, 285
 Knighthood of Arts and Belles Lettres (France) 112
 Kogawa, Joy 243
 Köhler, Barbara 243
 Kokoro (Natsume) 314
 Kokoschka, Oskar 243–244
 Kolokol (The Bell) (journal) 202
Kolyma Tales (Shalamov) 399
 Konrad Wallenrod (Mickiewicz) 292
 Korean literature
 Han Yongun in 191
 Hwang Sun-won in 214
 Hwang Tonggyu in 215
 Pak in 339
 So in 404
 Yun in 460
Korrektur (Correction) (Bernhard) 50
 Kostrowitsky, Wilhelm Apollinaris de. See Apollinaire, Guillaume
Kotik Latayev (Bely) 48
Kranji-Bekasi Jatuh (Toer) 427
Krapp's Last Tape (Beckett) 45
The Kreutzer Sonata (Tolstoy) 429
Kristin Lavransdatter (Undset) 436
Krzyzacy (Sienkiewicz) 401
Kullark (Davis) 3
 Kumagai Yumiko. See Kurahashi Yumiko
 Kundera, Milan 244–245
 Kunene, Mazisi 246
 Kunert, Günter 246–247
Kuntong . . . Chao Cha Khlab ma Mua Fa Sang (Kuntong . . . You Will Return at Dawn) (Dharmachoti) 117
 Kurahashi Yumiko 247
Kursbuch (Coursebook) (Enzensberger) 134
Der Kurze Mantel (The Cloak) (Naubert) 316
- L
- Là-bas (Down There)* (Huysmans) 213–214
Labors of Darkness (Castellanos) 79
 Labrunie, Gerard. See Nerval, Gérard de
The Labyrinth (Arrabal) 28
Labyrinth of Solitude (Paz) 344
Lacerba (journal) 284
A Lady Dies (Falkner) 140
 Lagerkvist, Pär 250–251
 Lagerlöf, Selma 251
The Lagoon (Frame) 151
 La Guma, Alex 249–250
 Laing, B. Kojo 252
 Laird, Christopher 253
The Lake Goddess (Nwapa) 328
- Lamartine, Alphonse de 253
 Lamming, George 254–255
 Lampedusa, Giuseppe Tomasi di 255
 “The Lamp in the Clock” (Breton) 62
The Land and the People, and Other Poems (Brasch) 57
Landaufenthalt (A Stay in the Country) (Kirsch) 242
Landfall (journal) 57
Landlocked Sailor (Alberti) 13
Land of Carnival (O Pais do Carnival) (Amado) 17
Land Without Thunder (Ogot) 333
 Langgässer, Elisabeth 255–256
Language in the Technological Age (Sprache im technischen Zeitalter) (Höllerer) 209
 Lao She 256
The Lark (Anouilh) 22
 Larra, Mariano José de 104
 Lasker-Schüler, Else 258–259
The Last Carnival (Walcott) 447
Last Letters of Jacopo Ortis (Foscolo) 150
The Last Magi (Les Derniers Rois Mages) (Condé) 101
The Last May (Poslední Máj) (Kundera) 244
The Last Temptation of Christ (Kazantzakis) 238
 “The Last Testament of Okitsu Yagoemon” (Mori) 303
The Late Bourgeois World (Gordimer) 176
 Latin-American literature
 Allende in 15–16
 Arenas in 26
 Borges in 55–56
 Cortázar in 102–103
 Darío in 110–111
 Donoso in 122–123
 Fuentes in 154
 García Márquez in 160–162 magic realism in 270–272
 Menchú in 290–291
 Mistral in 296
 Neruda in 318–319
 Onetti in 335
 postcolonialism in 352
 Vallejo in 439–440
 Vargas in 440–441
 Latin-American modernism 298–299
 “The Laugh of the Medusa” (Cixous) 93, 143
 Lautréamont, comte de 258
Lava (journal) 139
 Lawson, Henry 259
Lazar Roitschwantz (Ehrenburg) 130
Leaf Storm (García Márquez) 161
Leaven of Malice (Davies) 112
Leaves of Olive (Darwish) 111
Leben und Leider (Rilke) 369
The Left Bank and Other Stories (Rhys) 368
- “Legendary Karma Song” (So) 404
Legenden und Er’ahlungen (Legend and Tales) (Sachs) 379
Legends (Leyendas) (Bécquer) 46
Legends of Vancouver (P. Johnson) 228
 Léger, Alexis Saint-Léger. See Perse, Saint-John Legion of Honor (France) for Amado 17 for Ba Jin 34
 for Blasco 54
 Colette in 99
 for Moravia 303
Légitime Défense (Legitimate Defense) (journal) 317
Der Leichnam auf dem Thron (The Corpse on the Throne) (Becher) 44
 Leiris, Michel 259–260
Lélia (Sand) 384
 Lenin Prize for Aragon 25 for Becher 44 for Darwish 112 for Ehrenburg 130 for Faiz 140 for Guillén, Nicolás 184 for Sholokhov 400
 for Sri Sri 411
 “Lenin’s Will,” 399
 Leonce and Lena Prize 243
The Leopard (Lampedusa) 255
 Leopardi, Giacomo 260
 Lermontov, Mikhail 261
The Lesbian Body (Wittig) 450
The Lesson (Ionesco) 219
A Lesson in Love (La Naissance du jour) (Colette) 99
Lessons on Stendahl (Lampedusa) 255
 “Letter from Thurlby Domain” (Brasch) 57
Letters from England (Queirós) 361
Letters from My Cell (Cartas desde Mi Celda) (Bécquer) 46
The Letters of Jean Rhys (Rhys) 369
The Letters of Katherine Mansfield (Mansfield) 283
Letters of the Russian Traveler (Karamzin) 234–235
Letters to a German Friend (Camus) 74
Letters to Algren (Beauvoir) 43
Letters to My Little Readers (Bing Xin) 51
Letters to Sartre (Beauvoir) 43
Letters to the Tanka Poets (Masaoka) 286
Letter to a Child Never Born (Fallaci) 141
Let the Wind Speak (Dejemos hablar al viento) (Onetti) 335
Lettre à ma mère (Simenon) 401
Lettre à Maurice Thorez (Letter to Maurice Thorez) (Césaire) 84
 Levi, Primo 262

- Levisite oder der einzig gerechte Krieg* (The Only Just War) (Becher) 44
- Leyendas (Legends)* (Bécquer) 46
- Liang Qichao 299
- "Liberté" (Éluard) 131
- Liberté I: Négritude et Humanisme* (Senghor) 318
- Le Libertinage* (Aragon) 25
- Library Journal Best Book Award (United States) 16
- "The Library of Babel" (Borges) 56
- Liebe beginnt (Love Begins)* (Kaschnitz) 236
- Life, A User's Manual* (Perec) 346
- A Life (Una Vita)* (Svevo) 418
- The Life and Extraordinary Adventures of Private Ivan Chonkin* (Voinovich) 445
- The Life and Times of Michael K.* (Coetzee) 97–98
- Li Feigan. See Ba Jin
- Life Is Elsewhere* (Kundera) 244
- The Life of Henry Brulard* (Stendahl) 414–415
- The Life of Man* (Ungaretti) 437
- Life of Moravia* (Moravia) 302–303
- Life's Mysteries: The Best of Shirley Lim* (Lim) 263
- A Light for Fools* (Ginzburg) 168
- "Die Lilie" ("The Lily") (Rinsler) 371
- Lim, Shirley Geok-Lin 263
- Lina* (Arghezi) 27
- "Lips" (Hwang Tonggyu) 215
- Lispector, Clarice 263–264
- Littérature* (journal) 25, 62
- "The Little Girl and the Rapeseed Flower" (Shiga) 399
- The Little Prince (Le Petit Prince)* (Saint-Exupéry) 380–381
- Little Prose Poems (Les Petits poemes en prose)* (Baudelaire) 42
- Little Snake and Little Frog* (Okara) 333
- Liu E 264
- The Lives of Animals* (Coetzee) 98
- Lives of Girls and Women* (Munro) 306
- Living Amongst Heroes* (Ba Jin) 34
- The Living and the Dead* (White) 448
- The Living Corpse* (Tolstoy) 429
- The Living Mask (Henry IV)* (Pirandello) 349–350
- Living with the Stars* (Hwang Sun-won) 214
- Local Anesthetic (Ortlich Betaubt)* (Grass) 180
- Locomotive* (Tuwim) 434
- Logbook I* (Seferis) 393
- Logbook II* (Seferis) 393
- Logbook III* (Seferis) 393
- Der Lohndrucker (The Wage Shark)* (Müller) 304
- Loin de Médine: filles d'Ismail (Far from Medina)* (Djebar) 121
- Lolita* (Nabokov) 310
- "Loneliness" (Bing Xin) 52, 367
- Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth, translation of, by Bunin 70
- "The Long Silence" (Nortje) 327
- Looking on Darkness* (Brink) 65
- Lorca, Federico García. See García Lorca, Federico
- Lorenzaccio* (Musset) 308
- Lorne Pierce Medal 112
- The Loss of El Dorado* (Naipaul) 312
- The Lost Alphabet (Das verlorene Alphabet)* (Grünzweig) 183
- The Lost Grove* (Alberti) 13
- Lost Illusions (Illusions perdues)* (Balzac) 38
- "The Lost Mona Lisa" (Takamura) 423
- "The Lost Spear" (p'Bitek) 345
- Lo-i'o Hsiang-tzu (Rickshaw Boy)* (Lao) 256
- Love: A Book of Remembrances* (bpNichol) 323
- Love Across the Jugular Vein* (Samman) 382
- Love Begins (Liebe beginnt)* (Kaschnitz) 236
- Love in Crime* (Mrožek) 304
- Love in the Time of Cholera* (García Márquez) 162
- The Love of an Orange* (Ravikovitch) 365
- The Lover* (M. Duras) 127
- Lover of Night (Ashiqat al-lail)* (Mala'ika) 274
- The Lower Depths* (Gorky) 178
- Luca* (Moravia) 302
- Lucien Leuwen: The Green Huntsman* (Stendahl) 414
- Lucumi religion 78
- Lucy* (Kincaid) 241
- Lui* (Colet) 147
- Luka' ibn Luka'* (Habibi) 188
- Lures and Glimmers* (B. Diop) 120
- Lu Xun 265–266, 300
- The Lying Days* (Gordimer) 176–177

M

- Machado de Assis, Joaquim Maria 267–268
- Machado y Ruiz, Antonio 163, 268
- Machado y Ruiz, Manuel 269
- "Mack the Knife" (song) 61
- Die Macht der Gewohnheit (The Force of Habit)* (Bernhard) 50
- Madame Bovary* (Flaubert) 147–148, 298, 366
- Madarali Novel Prize 339
- Madariaga, Salvador de 269
- Mademoiselle de Maupin* (Gautier) 162
- Madmen and Specialists* (Soyinka) 410
- The Madwoman of Chaillot* (Giraudoux) 169
- Mae Nak Phra Khanong* (Dhammachoti) 117
- Maestro Don Gesualdo* (Verga) 441
- Maeterlinck, Maurice 270
- The Magic Mountain* (T. Mann) 281
- magic realism 270–272
- of Allende 16
- of Carpentier 78
- in Chinese modernism 300
- in Cortázar 103
- erotic, of Dépestre 114
- in Farrah 142
- in Fuentes 155
- in García Márquez 161–162
- Onetti and 335
- postcolonialism and 353
- in Roy 376
- in Rushdie 377–378
- in Saramago 385
- in Schwartz-Bart 392
- in Vargas 441
- Magnetized Circles* (Storni) 415
- Magsaysay Award 116
- Mahabharata* 116, 235
- The Mahabharata* (Narayan) 313
- Mahfouz, Naguib 272–273
- The Maids* (Genet) 164
- Maigret et Monsieur Charles* (Simenon) 401
- Maillet, Antonine 274
- "La Main ecorchée" (Maupassant) 286
- La Maison de Claudine (My Mother's House)* (Colette) 99
- "Makar Chudra" (Gorky) 178
- "The Making of a New Zealander" (Sargeson) 386
- The Makioka Sisters* (Tanizaki) 424
- Mala'ika, Nazik al- 274–275
- Malange, Nise 275
- The Malavoglia Family* (Verga) 441
- Malgudi Days* (Narayan) 313
- Malina* (Bachmann) 37
- Mallarmé, Stéphane 113, 145, 275–277, 418
- Malone Meurt (Malone Dies)* (Beckett) 45
- Malouf, David 277
- Malraux, André 137, 277–278
- "Maman and His World" (Toer) 427
- Les mamelles de Tirésias (The Breasts of Tiresias)* (Apollinaire) 24
- The Mammaries of the Welfare State* (Chatterjee) 88
- Mampato* (magazine) 15
- Man: A Broad Garden (Clovek Zahrada Sirá)* (Kundera) 244
- A Man* (Fallaci) 141
- The Mandarines* (Beauvoir) 43
- Mandelstam, Osip Yemilyevich 7, 278–279

- The Man Died: The Prison Notes of Wole Soyinka* (Soyinka) 409
 Manhae. See Han Yongun
Manhood (La Règle du jeu) (Leiris) 260
The Man in the Rubber Sandals (L'Homme aux sandales de caoutchouc) (Yacine) 454
 Mann, Heinrich 280
 Mann, Thomas 113, 280–282
A Man of the People (Achebe) 7
The Manor (Singer) 403
Man's Fate (Malraux) 278
 Mansfield, Katherine 282–283
The Mansions and the Shanties: The Making of Modern Brazil (Freyre) 153
Man's Search for Values (Peretz) 347
The Manticore (Davies) 112
The Man Who Loved Children (Stead) 413
The Man Without Qualities (Musil) 307
 Manzoni, Alessandro 283–284
 Mao Dun 366–367
 Marburger Literature Prize 182
La Maréchale D'Ancre (Vigny) 443
Marfarka the Futurist (Marinetti) 285
Marie Magdeleine (Maeterlinck) 270
Le Marin de Gibraltar (The Sailor from Gibraltar) (M. Duras) 127
 Marinetti, Filippo Tommaso 155–156, 284–285
 Maris, Hyllus 3
Markens Grøde (The Growth of the Soil) (Hamsun) 190
 “Marketwoman” (Neto) 320
 Maron, Monika 285
The Marriage (Gombrowicz) 172–173
Martereau (Sarraute) 387
Marthe, histoire d'une fille (Martha, the story of a girl) (Huysmans) 213, 315
The Martyrology (bpNichol) 323
The Martyrs (Chateaubriand) 87
Mary 309
Mary Stuart (Schiller) 391
 Masaoka Shiki 285–286
Mask and Trefoil (Storni) 415
The Masked Dinner (Poor Bitos) (Anouilh) 22
 Masks (Brathwaite) 58
 Masks (Enchi) 134
The Master and Margarita (Bulgakov) 69
The Master of Hestviken (Undset) 436
The Master of Petersburg (Coetzee) 97–98
The Masters and the Slaves: A Study in the Development of Brazilian Civilization (Freyre) 153
 Matigari (Ngugi) 322
Mating Birds (Nkosi) 326
 Maupassant, Guy de 145, 286–287, 315
Mawaquif (journal) 8
 Mayakovsky, Vladimir 287–288
Mayotte Capécia ou l'Alienation selon Fanon 76
 Mazumdar, Anita. See Desai, Anita
 Mbari Poetry Prize 327
 McLeod, Pauline 3
 “Meanings” (Walcott) 447
Meatless Days (Suleri) 417
 Medal of Brothers Green 144
 Medalla d'Oro de las Bellas Artes (Spain) 29
Médeitations Poétiques (Lamartine) 253
Meditations on Quixote (Ortega y Gasset) 336
 Meeks, Brian 288–289
 Mehta, Gita 289
Melancholia (Melancholy) (Jiménez) 227
Memed, My Hawk (Kemal) 239
 Memmi, Albert 289–290
Memoir on Ancient and Modern Russia (Karamzin) 235
Memoirs from Beyond the Tomb (Chateaubriand) 87
Memoirs from the Women's Prison (Sadawi) 380
Memoirs of a Dutiful Daughter (Beauvoir) 42
Memoirs of an Egoist (Stendahl) 414
Memoirs of a Time of Immaturity (Gombrowicz) 172
Memoirs of a Woman Doctor (Sadawi) 380
Memoirs of Hadrian (Yourcenar) 458
The Memorandum (Havel) 197
Memories of Agapito Goiba (Gonçalves Dias) 219
Memory for Forgetfulness (Darwish) 111
Memory of Snow and Dust (Breytenbach) 64
 Menchú, Rigoberta 290–291, 353
 “Mending” (De Kok) 113–114
 “Meng Ke” (Ding Ling) 119
Mensagem (Pessoa) 349
 “The Men Who Made Australia” (Lawson) 259
Menzogna e Sortilegio (House of Liars) (Morante) 302
The Messenger of Europe (Vestnik Evropy) (journal) 235
 “The Metamorphosis” (Kafka) 232–233
Metropolis (film) 138
 Mexican literature 79, 154–155, 429–430
 Michaux, Henri 291
Michelle's Lipstick (Hayashi Kyōko) 198
 Mickiewicz, Adam 292–293
 Midang. See So Chōng-ju
Midaq Alley (Zuqaq al-Midaqq) (Mahfouz) 273
Midaregami (Tangled Hair) (Yosano) 458
 “The Middle Ages” (Mishima) 295
The Middle Passage: Impression of Five Societies—British, French, and Dutch—in the West Indies (Naipaul) 312
Midnight's Children (Rushdie) 377–378
Midsummer (Walcott) 447
Midsummer Cut (Mittsommerschnitt) (Grünzweig) 183
Miguel Street (Naipaul) 311
 Miles Franklin Award 31, 77, 239
The Military Necessity (Servitude et grandeur militaires) (Vigny) 443
 Milosz, Czesław 293–294
The Mimic Men (Naipaul) 312
Mine Boy (Abrahams) 5, 250
Miramar (Mahfouz) 273
Mirgorod (Gogol) 171
 Miron, Gaston 294
 “The Mirror” (Machado de Assis) 267
The Mischief (La Soif) (Djebar) 121
Miserable Miracle (Michaux) 291
Les Misérables (Hugo) 213, 375
 Mishima Yukio 294–295
Miss Julie (Strindberg) 416
 Miss Lou. See Bennett, Louise
 “Miss Sophie's Diary” (Ding Ling) 119
 “Missy,” 99
Mist (Unamuno y Jugo) 435
 Mistral, Gabriela 296
 Mistry, Rohinton 296–297
 “Mithaiwalla” (“The Vendor of Sweets”) (Narayan) 313
Mitte des Lebens (Nina) (Rinser) 372
Mittsommerschnitt (Midsummer Cut) (Grünzweig) 183
A Mixture of Frailties (Davies) 112
 Mlada Bosnia 21
 Mme. Gervaisais (Goncourt and Goncourt) 175
Moderator Cantabile (M. Duras) 127
Modern Cairo (Al-Qahirah al-jadidah) (Mahfouz) 272–273 modernism 298–300
 of Adonis 7
 Baudelaire and 42
 Büchner and 68
 Chekhov in 90
 Chinese 158, 299–300
 Costumbrismo and 104
 Dario in 110–111
 in Gao 158
 in Generation of 1898 163
 Japanese 314
 in Kafka 233
 Latin American 110–111, 298–299
 in Lu 265
 Machado y Ruiz, Manuel, in 269
 Mallarmé and 276
 in Natsume 314
 postmodernism and 354–355
 in Quental 363
 Spanish 269
 symbolism and 418–419
Modern Odes (Quental) 363
 Mofolo-Plomer Award 317
Moi, Tituba, sorcière de Salem (I, Tituba, Black Witch of Salem) (Condé) 101

500 Encyclopedia of World Writers, 19th and 20th Centuries

- Molloy* (Beckett) 45
Mona Lisa, Apollinaire and 23
Monna Vanna (Maeterlinck) 270
Monology (Monologues) (Kundera) 244
 Montaigne prize 55
 Montale, Eugenio 301
 Montana New Zealand Book Awards 105
Montauk (Frisch) 154
A Month in the Country (Turgenev) 433
 Moomba Festival prizes 31
Moonbone 3
Moräne (Burkart) 71
 Morante, Elsa 301–302
 Moravia, Alberto 302–303
More Pricks Than Kicks (Beckett) 45
More Stories from My Father's Court (Singer) 403
More Than Enough (Sargeson) 386
 Morgan, Sally 4
 Mori 'gai 303
 "Morning" (Mayakovsky) 287
Morning Face (Anand) 19
Morning Yet on Creation Day (Achebe) 7
 Morrison, Toni 271
La Mort amoureuse (Clarimonde) (Gautier) 162–163
Moscoe 2042 (Voinovich) 445
Moscow on Fire (Mayakovsky) 288
Moscow Journal 234
Moscow of the Taverns (Yesenin) 457
Mother (Ding Ling) 119
Mother Courage and Her Children (Brecht) 59–60
Mother Earth (Dağlarca) 108
Mother Poem (Brathwaite) 58
 "Motherland" (Tsvetaeva) 432
Mother's Love and Filial Devotion (Arghezi) 27
The Motive Force (Ts'ao) 406
Motivos de son (N. Guillén) 184
Les Mots (The Words) (Sartre) 389
Les Mouches (The Flies) (Sartre) 389
 "The Mountain Peach Blossoms" (Pak) 339
 "Mourning" (Mistral) 296
Mourning for the Dead (Radunitsa) (Yesenin) 456
Mouvoir: Mirror Notes to a Novel (Breitenbach) 63
Le Mouvement perpétuel (Perpetual Movement) (Aragon) 25
Movie Star (Torres Bodet) 430
The Moving Image (Wright) 451
 Mo Yan 297, 406
Mr. Head (Valéry) 438
Mr. Johnson (Cary) 5
 Mrozek, Sławomir 303–304, 405
Mr. Stone and the Knight's Companion (Naipaul) 311
La mulâtresse Solitude (A Woman Named Solitude) (Schwarz-Bart) 392
 Mulheres Best Foreign Novel Award (Portugal) 16 Müller, Heiner 304–305
 Müller, Poul 350
 Munonye, John 305
 Munro, Alice 305–306
Le Mûr (Intimacy) (Sartre) 388
 Murakami Haruki 306
Murder, the Women's Hope (Kokoschka) 244
 Murguía, Manuel 80
Murphy (Beckett) 45
 "The Muse of History" (Walcott) 447
Music Lessons (Akhmadulina) 10
 "The Music of the Violin" (Ndebele) 317
 Musil, Robert von Elder 307
 Muslim literature 220, 381–382
 Musset, Alfred de 308
Mutmassungen über Jakob (Speculations about Jacob) (U. Johnson) 229
 "My Autobiography" (Chughtai) 92
My Childhood (Gorky) 178–179
My Discovery of America (Mayakovsky) 287
My Life (Kokoschka) 244
My Mother's House (La Maison de Claudine) (Colette) 99
My Past and Thoughts (Herzen) 202
 "My People" (Lasker-Schüler) 257–258
My Place (Morgan) 4
My Properties (Michaux) 291
My Reminiscences (Tagore) 421
My Sister, Life (Pasternak) 341
Mysterier (Mysteries) (Hamsun) 190
Mysteries of Selflessness (Rumuz-i-Bekhudi) (Iqbāl) 221
The Mystic Masseur (Naipaul) 311
Mythistorema (Seferis) 94, 393
The Myth of Sisyphus (Camus) 74
Mythologies (Bonnetoy, ed.) 55
My Travels Around the World (Sadawi) 380
My Universities (Gorky) 179
- N
- Nabokov, Vladimir 309–310
Nadja (Breton) 62
 Naidu, Sarojini 310–311
 Naipaul, V (idiadhar) S(urajprasad) 117, 311–312, 353, 354
La Naissance du jour (A Lesson in Love) (Colette) 99
A Naked Needle (Farrah) 142
The Name of the Rose (Eco) 129
Nameplates, Etc. (Hyōsatsu nado) (Ishigaki) 223
 Naoki Prize 455
 Naomi (Tanizaki) 424
Naqsh-e Faryadi (Image of complaint) (Faiz) 140
 Narayan, R(asisuram) K(ishnaswamy) 312–314
Narcissus and Goldmund (Hesse) 203
 "Narir Mulya" (Chatterji) 88
Der Narr in Christo, Emanuel Quint (The Fool in Christ, Emanuel Quint) (Hauptmann) 196
 "Narrow are the Vessels" ("Etroits sont les vaisseaux") (Perse) 348
 Nathan, Robert Louis 3
 National Academy of Letters Award (India) 19, 115
 National Artist in Literature, Dhammachoti as 117
 National Book Journalist of the Year award (South Africa) 65
National Episodes (Pérez Galdós) 347
The National Isolation of Humor (Yūmoa no Sakoku) (Ishigaki) 223
 National Literature Award 430
 National Poet of Romania, Arghezi as 27
 National Prize (East Germany) 280
 National Prize (Germany) 59, 211
 National Prize for Literature (Spain) 13
Natives of My Person (Lamming) 254
 Natsume Kinnosuke. See Natsume Sōseki
 Natsume Sōseki 12–13, 314
 naturalism 314–316
 Barbey and 39
 in Goncourt brothers 175
 Huysmans in 213
 in Maupassant 286
 Pardo Bazán and 340
 symbolism and 418
 Zola in 462–463
 Naubert, Benedikte 316
 "Nausea" (Neto) 320
La Nausée (Sartre) 388
 Ndebele, Njabulo 316–317
Near to the Wild Heart (Lispector) 263
 Necker, Anna Louise Germaine. See Staël, Germaine de Nedjma (Yacine) 454
 "Nedjma ou le poème ou le couteau" (Yacine) 454
La Nègresse blanche (The White Negress) (Capécia) 76
 Négritude 317–318
 Césaire in 84
 Créolite and 85
 Dépestre and 114
 Diop, Birago, in 120
 Diop, David, and 120
 postcolonialism of 353
 Senghor in 396
Neighbours in a Thicket (Malouf) 277
 Neo-Perceptionists (Shinkankakuha) movement 238
 Neruda, Pablo 299, 318–319
 Nerval, Gérard de 319–320
A Nest of Gentlefolk (Turgenev) 433
 Neto, António Agostinho 320

- Der neue Riech (The Kingdom Come)* (George) 165
- Neue Volksmärchen der Deutschen* (Naubert) 316
- Die Neunte Stunde (The Ninth Hour)* (Huchel) 211
- Neustadt Prize for Contributions to World Literature 121, 142
- Never Again* (Nwapa) 329
- Never Enough* (Sargeson) 386
- A New Dominion* (Jhabvala) 226
- The New Hispanic-American Novel (La Nueva Novela Hispanoamericana)* (Fuentes) 154–155
- New Leaves* (Castro) 80
- New Life* (Ba Jin) 34
- The New Novel 127, 321, 331, 372, 386–387, 402
- “New South-African Literature or the Rediscovery of the Ordinary” (Ndebele) 316
- New Tides (Shinshichō)* (Akutagawa) 12
- New Wave, Russian 10
- “New Wave” films 363
- A New Year’s Fairy Tale* (Dudintsev) 125–126
- New York Theater Critics’ Prize 128
- New Youth* (journal) 299
- New Zealand Book Award for Poetry 105
- New Zealand literature 105, 150–151, 282–283, 386
- Ngugi Wa Thiong’o 321–322, 353
- Nguyen Du 322
- Nichol, b(arrie) p(hilip) 323
- Nietzsche, Friedrich 137, 298, 323–325
- Nigerian literature
- Achebe in 5–7
 - Munonye in 305
 - Nwapa in 328–329
 - Okara in 333
 - Soyinka in 409–410
- “Night” (Mayakovsky) 287
- Night* (Wiesel) 450
- The Night and the Dream* (Gunnarsson) 187
- Night Flight (Vol de Nuit)* (Saint-Exupéry) 381
- “The Nightingale” (Anderson) 20
- The Night Keeps Winking* (Serote) 397
- Nina (Mitte des Lebens)* (Rinsler) 372
- The Nine Guardsmen* (Castellanos) 79
- Nine Indian Women Poets* (Souza) 409
- “1940” (Brecht) 61
- Ninja’s Carnival* (Espinet) 135
- Nip the Buds, Shoot the Kids* (‘e) 331
- Nirmala* (Premchand) 356
- Nkosi, Lewis 325–326
- Nobel Peace Prize 291, 450
- Nobel Prize in literature
- for Agnon 9
 - for Andric 21
 - for Beckett 46
 - for Bunin 70
 - for Camus 75
 - for Canetti 75
 - for Cela 82
 - for Elytis 132
 - for Fo 149
 - for Gao 159
 - for García Márquez 162
 - for Gide 167
 - for Gordimer 177
 - for Grass 181
 - for Hamsun 190
 - for Hauptmann 196–197
 - for Hesse 203
 - for Jiménez 227
 - for Kawabata 238
 - for Lagerkvist 251
 - for Lagerlöf 251
 - for Maeterlinck 270
 - for Mahfouz 272
 - for Mann, Thomas 281
 - for Miłosz 293
 - for Mistral 296
 - for Montale 301
 - for Naipaul 312
 - for Neruda 319
 - for ‘e 332
 - for Pasternak 341–342
 - for Paz 345
 - for Perse 348
 - for Pirandello 350
 - for Sachs 379
 - for Saramago 385
 - for Seferis 394
 - for Seifert 394
 - for Sholokhov 400
 - for Sienkiewicz 401
 - for Simon 402
 - for Singer 403
 - for Solzhenitsyn 408
 - for Soyinka 410
 - for Szymborksa 420
 - for Tagore 422
 - for Undset 436
 - for Walcott 447
 - for White 448
- Nobre, António 326
- Noces (Nuptials)* (Camus) 74
- No Exit (Huis-clos)* (Sarte) 389
- No Longer at Ease* (Achebe) 6
- Noma Award for Publishing 35, 317, 397
- No One Writes to the Colonel* (García Márquez) 161
- Noonuccal, Oodgeroo 4, 326–327
- Northern Archives (Archives du Nord)* (Yourcenar) 459
- The Northern Journey and Other Poems* (Feng Zhi) 144
- Nortje, Arthur 327
- Norwegian Award for Poetry 275
- Norwegian literature 52, 189–191, 216–217
- Norwegian Society for Theater, Music, and Language 52–53
- “The Nose” (Akutagawa) 13
- No Sugar* (Davis) 4
- No Sweetness Here* (Aidoo) 10
- Notable Book Award of American Library Association 57
- Not By Bread Alone* (Dudintsev) 125
- Note and Couternotes* (Ionesco) 220
- Notebook for the Night* (Arghezi) 26–27
- Notebook of Green (Cahier de verdure)* (Jaccottet) 224
- The Notebooks of André Walter* (Gide) 167
- The Notebooks of Malte Laurids Brigge* (Rilke) 370
- No Telephone to Heaven* (Cliff) 95–96
- Notes from the Underground* (Dostoyevsky) 124, 136
- Notes of a Young Doctor* (Bulgakov) 69
- Not I* (Beckett) 45
- Notre-Dame de Paris* (Hugo) 212, 375
- No Trifling With Love* (Musset) 308
- La Nouba de femmes due Mont Chenoua* 121
- Novy Lef* (journal) 287
- Now and in Other Days* (Amichai) 18
- Nuclear Seasons* (Espinet) 135
- La Nueva Novela Hispanoamericana (The New Hispanic-American Novel)* (Fuentes) 154–155
- El nuevo teatro critico* (magazine) 340
- La Nuit vénitienne (A Venetian Night)* (Musset) 308
- Nuptials (Noces)* (Camus) 74
- “Nutcracker and the Mouse King” (Hoffman) 206
- Nwapa, Flora 328–329

O

- O Babylon!* (Walcott) 447
- Ōba Minako 330
- Obasan* (Kogawa) 243
- objectivism, Cela and 82
- objectivismo 331
- Oblomov* (Goncharov) 174
- The Obscene Bird of Night* (Donoso) 122–123
- The Occasions* (Montale) 301
- Ochre* (Storni) 415
- Odale’s Choice* (Brathwaite) 58
- “Ode to Joy” (Schiller) 391
- Ode to Liberty* (Pushkin) 358
- Odes to Soldiers on Patrol in a Sandstorm* (Tian) 425
- Odyssey: A Modern Sequel* (Kazantsakis) 94, 238
- Ōe Kenzaburō 331–332
- Of Age and Innocence* (Lamming) 254

- Offending the Audience*
(Publikumsbeschimpfung) (Handke) 192
- Of Love and Shadows* (Allende) 16
- Of the Movement and the Immobility of Douve* (Bonnefoy) 55
- Ogot, Grace 332–333
- The Oil Man of Obange* (Munonye) 305
- Oiseau bleu* (The Blue Bird) (Maeterlinck) 270
- Okara, Gabriel 333–334
- Okhela* (Breytenbach) 63
- Okike* (journal) 6
- Old Age* (Beauvoir) 43
- “The Old Man’s Conscience” (“Samnung Khong Pho Thao”) (Dharmachoti) 117
- “Old Shloyme” (Babel) 35
- Old Snow* (Bei Dao) 47
- “The Old White Witch” (Ogot) 333
- Olivier (C. Duras) 126
- Ombre Sultane* (A Sister to Scheherazade) (Djebbar) 121
- Omeros (Walcott) 447
- Once Is Enough* (Sargeson) 386
- Ondaatje, Michael 334–335, 354
- One Day in the Life of Iva Denisovich* (Solzhenitsyn) 408
- One Fine Day* (Hwang Tonggyu) 215
- One Hundred and Twenty Days of Sodom* (film) 341
- One Hundred Years of Solitude* (García Márquez) 161–162, 271
- One Is Not a Woman Born* (Wittig) 450
- Onetti, Juan Carlos 335
- On Germany* (De l’Allemagne) (Staël) 375, 412
- On Literature* (De la littérature) (Staël) 411–412
- On Love* (Stendahl) 414
- Only a Fiddler* (Andersen) 20
- The Only Just War* (Levisite oder der einzig gerechte Krieg) (Becher) 44
- The Only Son* (Munonye) 305
- Only This Light* (Fraire) 150
- On My Way: Poetry and Essays, 1912–1947* (Arps) 28
- On Overgrown Paths* (På Gjengroddes Stier) (Hamsun) 190
- On Painting* (Alberti) 13
- On Relation Between Man’s Animal and Spiritual Nature* (Schiller) 391
- On Religion* (De la Religion) (Constant de Rebecque) 102
- On Sepulchres* (Foscolo) 150
- “On Socialist Realism” (Gorky) 405
- On the Aesthetic Education of Man* (Schiller) 391–392
- On the Contrary* (Brink) 65
- “On the Death of the Poet” (Lermontov) 261
- On the Eve* (Turgenev) 433
- On the Field of Glory* (Sienkiewicz) 401
- On the Influence of the Passions* (De l’influence des passions) (Staël) 411
- On the Naïve and Sentimental in Literature* (Schiller) 392
- On the Shores of the Saar* (Castro) 80
- On the Sign at the End of the Road* (Abe) 2
- On the Spirit of Conquest and Usurpation* (De l’esprit de conquête et de l’usurpation) (Constnat de Rebecque) 102
- “On the Yangtze River” (Tian) 425
- The Open Sore of a Continent* (Soyinka) 410
- Operetta* (Gombrowicz) 173
- Opium* (Cocteau) 96
- L’opopomax* (Wittig) 450
- The Orchid House* (Allfrey) 17
- Order for Cultural Merit 399
- Order of Australia 239
- Order of Culture 134
- Order of the Federal Republic 7
- Order of Lenin 337
- “An Ordinary Day” (Pak) 339
- An Ordinary Story* (Goncharov) 174
- Les Orientales* (Hugo) 212
- Orientalism* (Said) 352
- Oriental Tales* (Yourcenar) 458
- Orientations* (Elytis) 132
- Orion and Other Poems* (Roberts) 373
- Ornifle* (Anouilh) 22
- Orphée* (Orpheus) (Cocteau) 97
- “Orphée noir” (“Black Orpheus”) (Sartre) 318
- Orpheus and Eurydice* (Kokoschka) 244
- orphism 23
- Ortega y Gasset José 336
- Ortligh Betaubt* (Local Anesthetic) (Grass) 180
- Oscar and Lucinda* (Carey) 76
- Osceola. See Dinesen, Isak
- Os Maias* (Queirós) 362
- Ostrovsky, Nikolai 357, 366
- L’otage* (The Hostage) (Claudel) 95
- Other Exiles* (Brathwaite) 58
- The Other Guest* (Der Andere Gast) (Höllerer) 209
- Otherland* (Inoyiya) (Yesenin) 456
- The Other Shore* (Gao) 158
- Ôtsu Junkichi (Shiga) 399
- Ourika* (C. Duras) 126
- Our Lady of the Flowers* (Genet) 164
- Our Man K* (Hasluck) 195
- “Our Mistress’ Parlor” (Bing Xin) 52
- Our Sister Killjoy* (Aidoo) 10
- Our Vietnam War* (Dağlarca) 108
- The Outcry* (Lu) 265
- An Outline of the History of Chinese Philosophy* (Hu) 210
- Out of Africa* (Den africanske farm) (Dinesen) 118
- Out of Chaos* (Ehrenburg) 130
- Out of India* (Jhabvala) 227
- “The Overcoat” (Gogol) 171
- The Overcrowded Barracoon* (Naipaul) 311
- Over the Barriers* (Pasternak) 341
- Oweiss Prize for Cultural Productivity 232
- Owls Do Cry* (Frame) 151
- The Owners of the Keys* (Kundera) 244
- Oz, Amos 357

P

- Pa Chin. See Ba Jin
- På Gjengroddes Stier* (On Overgrown Paths) (Hamsun) 190
- Pacific Fantasy* (Arrabal) 29
- Padma Bhushan award 313
- Padma Shri award 1, 115, 118
- Pagis, Dan 338
- Le Pain dur* (Crusts) (Claudel) 95
- O Pais do Carnival* (Land of Carnival) (Amado) 17
- Pakistani literature, Faiz Ahmed Faiz in 140
- Pak Mogwol 339
- Palace of Desire* (Qasr al-Shawq) (Mahfouz) 272
- Palace of the Peacock* (Harris) 193
- Palace Walk* (Al-Thulathiyya: Bayn al-Qasrayn) (Mahfouz) 272
- Palestinian literature 111–112, 188
- Palli Samaj* (Village Society) (Chatterji) 88
- Palm and Oak I* (Allfrey) 17
- Palmer, Kingsley 3
- Pamuk Orhan 339
- Pan* (Hamsun) 190
- Panic Theater 28
- Pan Michael* (Sienkiewicz) 400
- Panorama Literio Award (Chile) 16
- Pan Tadeusz* (Mickiewicz) 292
- Parade* (Cocteau) 96
- Les Paradis artificiels* (Artificial Paradises) (Baudelaire) 42
- Pardesi* (film) 1
- Pardo Bazán, Emilia de 339–340
- The Paris Peasant* (Le Payson de Paris) (Aragon) 25
- Park Yong-jong. See Pak Mogwol
- Le Parti pris des choses* (Ponge) 351
- “Party” (Kurahashi) 247
- A Party for Boris* (Ein Fest Für Boris) (Bernhard) 50
- Pascal, Blaise 137
- Pascual López* (Pardo Bazán) 340
- Pasolini, Pier Paolo 340–341
- Passion and Form* (Alberti) 13
- Passion for the Fatherland* (Premchand) 356
- The Passion of G.H.* (Lispector) 264

- Pasternak, Boris 341–342
Pastoral Songs (Tian) 425
The Path to the Nest of Spiders (Calvino) 73
Pather Dabi (The Right Way) (Chatterji) 88
Paton, Alan 342
“Patriotism” (Mishima) 295
Paula (Allende) 16
Paula (magazine) 15
Pavese, Cesare 343
Pavlova, Karolina Karlovna 343–344
Les Paysans (The Peasants) (Balzac) 38
Le Paysan de Paris (The Paris Peasant) (Aragon) 25
Paz, Octavio 150, 299, 344–345
p’Bitek, Okot 345
The Peasants (Les Paysans) (Balzac) 38
Le Peau de chagrin (The Wild Ass’s Skin) (Balzac) 37
“A Peculiar Occupation” (‘e) 331
The Peddler (Der Hausierer) (Handke) 192
Pederson, Knut. See Hamsun, Knut
Peer Gynt (Ibsen) 216–217
Pélagie-la-Charette (Maillet) 274
Pelléas et Mélisande (Maeterlinck) 270
“The Penal Colony” (Kafka) 233
Pen Club Awards 434
Le Pendu de Saint Pholier (Simenon) 401
The Penguin Book of New Zealand Verse (Curnow, ed.) 105
Pensées (Pascal) 137
La Pentecoste (Manzoni) 283–284
Perburuan (Toer) 427
Percikan Revolusi (Toer) 427
Perec, Georges 346
Le Père Goriot (Father Goriot) (Balzac) 38
Le Père humilié (The Humiliation of the Father) (Claudel) 95
Peretz, Isaac Lieb 346–347
Pérez Galdós, Benito 347–348
A Perfect Place (Oz) 337
The Periodic Table (Levi) 262
Permettez! (Queneau) 362
Perpetual Movement (Le Mouvement perpétuel) (Aragon) 25
Perse, Saint-John 348
A Personal Matter (‘e) 332
Pessoa, Fernando 349
Petals of Blood (Ngugi) 322
Peter Camenzind (Hesse) 203
Petersburg (Bely) 48
Le Petit Prince (The Little Prince) (Saint-Exupéry) 380–381
Les Petits poèmes en prose (Little Prose Poems) (Baudelaire) 42
Petrarca Lyric Prize 66
Phantom Dwelling (Wright) 452
The Philosophy of Lao Zhang (Lao) 256
Phlubphla Mali Literary Award 117
Die Physiker (The Physicists) (Dürrenmatt) 128
The Picture of Dorian Gray (Wilde) 113
“A Picture with No Composition” (Ōba) 330
La piedra cansada (The exhausted rock) (Vallejo) 440
Pierre et Jean (Maupassant) 286
Pigments (Damas) 317
The Pillar of Fire (Gumilev) 185–186
The Pillar of Salt (La Statue de sel) (Memmi) 290
Pincherle, Albert. See Moravia, Alberto
Ping Hsin. See Bing Xin
Pirandello, Luigi 349–350
“The Pirate’s Song” (Espronceda) 136
The Pit (El Pozo) (Onetti) 335
The Place at Whitton (Keneally) 239
The Plague (Camus) 74
The Plague Column (Seifert) 394
Le Planétarium (Sarraute) 387
Un Plat de porc aux bananes vertes (A Dish of Pork with Green Bananas) (Schwarz-Bart) 392
Plato, in classicism 94
Play (Beckett) 45
Play (Khel) (Dhasal) 118
Pleasures and Regrets (Proust) 356
The Pleasures of Exile (Lammung) 254
Die Plebejer Proben den Aufstand (The Plebeians Rehearse the Uprising) (Grass) 180
The Ploughman (White) 448
Pluie et vent sur Têlummée Miracle (The Bridge of Beyond) (Schwarz-Bart) 392
Plume (Michaux) 291
“Po, The Great” (Kauraka) 237
“Poem” (“Gedicht”) (Köhler) 243
Poemat O Czasie (Poem in Frozen Time) (Milosz) 293
Poèmes antiques et modernes (Vigny) 443
Poèmes pour la paix (Éluard) 131
Poèmes saturniens (Verlaine) 443
Poem in Frozen Time (Poemat O Czasie) (Milosz) 293 Poems (Akhmadulina) 10
Poems (Malouf) 277
Poems (Mansfield) 283
Poems (Trakl) 430
Poems (Walcott) 446
Poems (Dikter) (Södergran) 407
Poems (Gedichte) (Huchel) 211
Poems (Gedichte) (Kaschnitz) 236
Poems (Tristiya) (Mandelstam) 279
Poems About a Soviet Passport (Mayakovsky) 287
Poems by Jaime Torres Bodet (Torres Bodet) 430
Poems Dedicated to Fighters (Tian) 425
Poems from the Bamboo Village (Masaoka) 286
Poems in the Lap of Death (Fraire) 150
Poems of America (Mayakovsky) 287
Poems to the Czechs (Tsvetaeva) 432
Poesia (Marinetti) 284
Poésie et vérité (Éluard) 131
The Poet Assassinated (Apollinaire) 24
poetic realism 234, 350–351
Poet in New York (García Lorca) 159
Poétique (journal) 93
Poet of the Year (Ghana) 22
Poetries (Gautier) 162
Poetry Is Not You (Castellanos) 79
Pointe-aux-Coches (Maillet) 274
Poire-acre (Maillet) 274
The Police (Mrożek) 304
Polish literature
 Gombrowicz in 172–173
 Mickiewicz in 292–293
 Milosz in 293
 Mrożek in 303
 Sienkiewicz in 400–401
 Szyborksa in 420
 Tuwim in 433–434
Political Principles (Principes de politique) (Constant de Rebecque) 102
Poltava (Pushkin) 358
Polynesian literature, Kauraka Kauraka in 236–237
Pondo Women Cleaners (Malange) 275
Ponge, Francis 351
Poor Bitos, or The Masked Dinner (Anouilh) 22
Poor Folk (Dostoyevsky) 123
“Poor Liza” (Karamzin) 235
Poot, Linke. See Döblin, Alfred
Popa, Vasko 351–352
Poppy and Memories (Celan) 82
Pornografia (Gombrowicz) 173
Portrait d’un homme inconnu (Portrait of an Unknown Man) (Sarraute) 321, 387 Portrait in Sepia (Allende) 16
Portuguese literature
 Queirós in 361–362
 Quental in 363
 Saramago in 384–385
Poslední Máj (The Last May) (Kundera) 244
The Possessed (Dostoyevsky) 124
postcolonialism 352–354
 in Farah 142
 in Mistry 297
 in Sembène 395 in Soyinka 409
postmodernism 354–355
 of Bachmann 37 of Breitenbach 64
 Chinese 300
 in Frame 151
 of Handke 192–193
 “A Pot of Rice” (Lim) 263
Le Potomak (Cocteau) 96

The Pots, Pans and Burning Fire Before Me (Watashi no Mae ni Aru Nabe to Okama to Moeru Hi to) (Ishigaki) 222

El Pozo (The Pit) (Onetti) 335

Practicalities (M. Duras) 127–128

The Precipice (Goncharov) 174

A Precocious Autobiography (Yevtushenko) 457

“Preface” (Han) 191

Premchand, Munshi 19, 355–356

La Première Aventure céleste de Monsieur Antipyrine (The First Heavenly Adventure of Mr. Antipyrine) (Tzara) 434

Premio Mondello Five Continents Award (Italy) 186

Premio Riccione award (Italy) 73

Present Past, Past Present (Ionesco) 220

Primeiros cantos (First Cantos) (Gonçalves Dias) 174, 219

The Prime of Life (Beauvoir) 42

Primo Vere (First Spring) (D’Annunzio) 109

The Princess of Spadina: A Tale of Toronto (Espinet) 135

La Princesse Maleine (Maeterlinck) 270

Principes de politique (Political Principles) (Constant de Rebecque) 102

Pringle Award 317

Prison Diary (Gefängnis-Tagebuch) (Rinsler) 372

Prison narrative (Zindan Namah) (Faiz) 140

“The Prisoner of the Caucasus” (Pushkin) 358

Private View (Havel) 197

Prix de la Découverte Européenne 339

Prix du Centre National du Livre (France) 29

Prix Goncourt (France)

- about 175
- for Chamoiseau 85
- for Duras, Marguerite 127
- for Maillet 274
- for Malraux 278

Prix Maurice Maeterlinck 121

Prix Medici 346

Prix Renaudot 346

Prize for the Arts by the Center for International Exchanges 144

Professor Unrat (The Blue Angel) (H. Mann) 280

The Promised Land (Ogot) 332

I prommessi sposi (The Betrothed) (Manzoni) 283–284

Proserpina (Langgässer) 256

Prost (Bernhard) 50

Protest (Havel) 197

Proust, Marcel 356–357

A Provincial Lady (Turgenev) 433

The Psychopathology of Everyday Life (Freud) 152

Publikumsbeschimpfung (Offending the Audience) (Handke) 192

El Pueblo (journal) 54

Puerto Rican literature, Ferré in 144–145

Pugachev (Yesenin) 456

Pulitzer Prize 57

“The Pursuit” (Carpentier) 79

Pushkin, Aleksandr 350, 357–358

Pushkin Prize 89

Q

Qabbani. See Kabbani, Nizar

Qadaya al-shi'r al-mu'asir (Issues in Contemporary Arabic Poetry) (Mala'ika) 275

Al-Qahirah al-jadidah (Modern Cairo) (Mahfouz) 272–273

Qasr al-Shawq (Palace of Desire) (Mahfouz) 272

Quasimodo, Salvatore 360–361

Québécois literature 200, 294

“Queen Mab’s Veil” (Darío) 111

The Queen of Spades (Pushkin) 359

Queen’s gold medal for poetry 452

Queirós, José Maria de 361–362

Queiróz, Raquel de 362

“Que m’accompagne kóras et balaphong” (“To the Music of koras and balaphon”) (Senghor) 396

Queneau, Raymond 362–363

Quental, Antero Tarquino de 362–363

Qu’est-ce la Littérature? (What Is Literature?) (Sartre) 389

Question of Power (Head) 200

The Quilt (Chughtai) 92

Quo Vadis (Sienkiewicz) 401

R

Rabearivelo, Jean-Joseph 364–365

Rabinowitz, Sholem. See Aleichem, Shalom

Racial Formations/Critical Transformations (San Juan) 383

Racine (Giraudoux) 169

Racine and Shakespeare (Stendahl) 414

Radical Caribbean: From Black Power to Abu Bakr (Meeks) 288

The Radical Imagination (Harris) 194

Radunitsa (Mourning for the Dead) (Yesenin) 456

The Ragazzi (Pasolini) 341

La Rage de l’expression (Ponge) 351

“The Railway and the Churchyard” (Bjørson) 53

The Rain Ascends (Kogawa) 243

The Rainbow (Der Regenbogen) (Ausländer) 32

“The Rainbow and the Floating Bridge” (‘) 330

“Rain Falling Thick and Fast in the Spring Night” (Mo) 297

Raj: A Novel (Mehta) 289

Rajmohan’s Wife (Cattopadhyay) 80

Rama, Ángel 144

The Ramayana (Narayan) 313

Ramayana—The Celestial Tree (Satyanarayana) 389–390

Rao Srinivasa, Srirangam. See Sri Sri

“Rapunzel” (Grimm and Grimm) 182

Rashōmon (Akutagawa) 12

Die Rättin (The Rat) (Grass) 180

Ravikovich, Dahlia 365

Ray Bahadur (title) 81

Reaching Tin River (Astley) 31

The Read Life of Sebastian Knight (Nabokov) 309

Reading and Writing: a Personal Account (Naipaul) 312

realism 365–367

- Balzac and 37
- in Dostoyevsky 125
- expressionism and 138
- Gogol in 171
- in Goncharov 174
- in Hauptmann 196
- in Ibsen 217
- in Ishigaki 222
- naturalism and 315
- in Noonuccal 327
- in Pak 339
- in Pérez Galdós 347
- poetic, in Kanik 234
- romanticism and 374
- Russian 171, 174
- symbolism and 418
- verismo and 442

realism, socialist. See socialist realism

The Rebel (L’Homme Révolté) (Camus) 75

Red Cavalry (Babel) 36

Red Dawn (Rouge l’aube) (Djebar) 121

“The Red Front” (Aragon) 25

The Red Room (Strindberg) 416

Red Sorghum (Mo) 297

Reef (Gunesekara) 186

Reflections (Soyinka) 410

Der Regenbogen (The Rainbow) (Ausländer) 32

A Regicide (Robbe-Grillet) 372

La Règle du jeu (Rules of the Game) (Leiris) 260

The Rehearsal (Anouilh) 22

Reis, Ricardo. See Pessoa, Fernando

The Remains of the Day (film) 226

Remarque, Erich Maria 367–368

Remembering Babylon (Malouf) 277

Remembrance of Things Past (Proust) 48, 356–357

René (Chateaubriand) 87, 375

Renée Mauperin (Goncourt and Goncourt) 175, 315

- La Reprise* (Robbe-Grillet) 373
 Republic of Korea Literary Award 214, 339
The Republic of Wine (Mo) 297
Requiem (Akhmatova) 12
Requiem (Jacottet) 224
 “Requiem for a Dog and an Adult” (Tsushima) 431
The Rescued Tongue (Die Gerettete Zunge) (Canetti) 75
Residence on Earth (Neruda) 319
The Restlessness of the Rose Bush (Storni) 415
Resurrection (Tolstoy) 429
Return from the Dreamy Fountain (Al-Jayyusi) 226
The Return of Eva Peron with The Killings in Trinidad (Naipaul) 311 “Return to Havaiki” (Kauraka) 237
Return to My Native Land (Cahier d'un retour au pays natal) (Césaire) 84
The Reverends (Mrožek) 304
The Revolt of The Masses (Ortega y Gasset) 336
Révolution Surréaliste (Carpentier) 78
 Reyes, Neftali Ricardo. See Neruda, Pablo
The Rhetoric of English India (Suleri) 417
Rhinoceros (Ionesco) 220
Rhymes (Rimas) (Bécquer) 46
 Rhys, Jean 368–369
The Rhythm of Violence (Nkosi) 325
 Richardson, Elaine Potter. See Kincaid, Jamaica
 Richter, Hans Werner, in Gruppe 47 183
Rickshaw Boy (Lo-t'ò Hsiang-tzu) (Lao) 256
Riders in the Chariot (White) 448
The Rights of Desire (Brink) 65
Rights of Passage (Brathwaite) 58
The Right Way (Pather Dabi) (Chatterji) 88
The Rigoberta Menchú Controversy (Arias) 291
Rigoberta Menchú and the Story of All Poor Guatemalans (Stoll) 291
 Rilke, Rainer Maria 369–370
Rimas (Rhymes) (Bécquer) 46
 Rimbaud, Arthur 370–371
 in decadence movement 113
 in fin de siècle 145
 symbolism in 418
 Verlaine and 443
Der Ring des Nibelungen (Wagner), Claudel and 95
Ring Round the Moon (Anouilh) 22
Rings of Glass (Die gläsernen Runge) (Rinser) 371–372
 Rinser, Luise 371–372
 “Risen from the Ruins” (“Auferstanden aus Ruinen”) (Becher) 44
The Rise of the Filipino Working Class and Other Essays (San Juan) 383
 “Ritual of Death” (Hayashi Kyōko) 198
The River Between (Ngugi) 321
al-Riwaya al-mustahila (Samman) 382
The Road Ahead (Takamura) 423
Road Signs and Wall Writings (Wegschilder und Mauerinschriften) (Kunert) 247
The Road to the City (Ginzburg) 168
 “The Roaring Days” (Lawson) 259
 Robbe-Grillet, Alain 321, 372–373
The Robber Bride (Atwood) 32
The Robbers (Schiller) 391
 Robert Frost Memorial Award 452
 Roberts, Charles 373
Le Roman expérimental (Zola) 314–315
 Romanian literature, Argheze in 26
Romantic Art (L'Art romantique) (Baudelaire) 42
 romanticism 374–375
 of Andersen, Hans Christian 20 Brazilian, Gonçalves Dias in 174 of Chateaubriand 87
 futurism and 155
 German (See German romanticism)
 Hölderlin and 208
 Hugo and 212
 Japanese, Mishima in 294
 Lamartine and 253
 in Musset 308
 naturalism and 315
 in Nerval 319
 poetic realism and 350
 Russian, Hoffmann in 206 in Sand 383
 scapigliatura and 390
 Schiller in 391
 Spanish 47, 104, 136
 in Staël 412
 in Stendahl 414
 in Vigny 443
Romantic Poems (Gumilev) 185
Romanzero (Heine) 201
Rome, Naples, and Florence in 1817 (Stendahl) 414
Romulus der Große (Romulus the Great) (Dürrenmatt) 128
 Rönne novellas 49
A Room with a View (film) 226
 Rosas, Oscar 376
Rose et Blanche (Sand) 383
Rosenaltaret (The Rose Alter) (Södergran) 407
 Rosenstock, Samuel. See Tzara, Tristan
The Rotting Magician (L'enchanteur pourrissant) (Apollinaire) 23
Le Rouge et le noir (The Red and the Black) (Stendahl) 414
Rouge l'aube (Red Dawn) (Djebar) 121
 “A Rough Study of Techniques in Modern Fiction Writing” (Gao) 158
Rougon-Macquart Cycle (Zola) 441, 462
La route des Flandres (Simon) 402
 Roy, Arundhati 354, 376
The Royal Way (Malraux) 278
Rudin (Turgenev) 433
Der Ruf (The Call) (journal) 183
The Ruined Map (Abe) 2
The Rules of the Game (Pirandello) 349–350
Rules of the Game (La Règle du jeu) (Leiris) 260
Rumuz-î-Bekhudi (Mysteries of Selflessness) (Iqbal) 221
Running in the Family (Ondaatje) 334
 Rushdie, Salman 353–354, 377–378
Ruslan and Ludmilla (Pushkin) 358
 Russian literature. See also Soviet Union
 Akhmadulina in 10–11
 Akhmatova in 11–12
 Babel in 35–36
 Bryusov in 67
 Bulgakov in 68
 Bunin in 69–70
 Chekhov in 89–90
 Chernyshevsky in 91–92
 Dostoyevsky in 123–125
 Goncharov in 174
 Gorky in 178–179
 Gumilev in 185
 Herzen in 202
 Karamzin in 234–235
 Lermontov in 261
 Mandelstam in 278–279
 Mayakovsky in 287–288
 Ostrovsky in 337
 Pasternak in 341–342
 Pushkin in 358–359
 Shalamov in 399
 Solzhenitsyn in 408
 Tolstoy in 427–429
 Tsvetaeva in 432
 Turgenev in 433
 Russian New Wave 10
 Russian realism 171, 174, 366
 Russian romanticism 206
 Russian symbolism. See symbolism
 The Russian Symbolists (Bryusov) 67
 Rustic Chivalry (Cavalleria Rustica) (Verga) 441
 Ryakureki (An Abbreviated History) (Ishigaki) 223

S

- Sa'ada, Anton 8
 Saadaw, Nawal El. See Sadawi, Nawal
 “Sabás” (N. Guillén) 184
Sac au dos (Huymans) 213
 Sachs, Nelly Leonie 379
Sad Arias (Arias tristes) (Jiménez) 227
 Sadawi, Nawal 380
Sad Songs (Hwang Tonggyu) 215
Safe Conduct (Pasternak) 341

- Sahitya Akademi Award 166, 236, 313
 Sa'ïd, Ali Ahmad. See Adonis
 Said, Edward 352
The Sailor from Gibraltar (Le Marin de Gibraltar) (M. Duras) 127
 Saint-Exupéry, Antoine de 380–381
Saint-Genet, Comédien et Martyr (Saint Genet, Actor and Martyr) (Sartre) 389
 Saint-John Perse. See Perse, Saint-John
Une Saison à Rihata (A Season in Rihata) (Condé) 101
Salammô (Flaubert) 148
 Saleh, Tayyib 381–382
Salman the Solitary (Kemal) 239
 Salteron trilogy (Davies) 112
Salzburg Tales (Stead) 413
 Samman, Ghada 382
 “Samnuk Khong Pho Thao” (“The Old Man’s Conscience”) (Dhammachoti) 117
San Camilo 1936 (Cela) 82
Sancho Saldaña o el castellano de Cuéllar (Sancho Saladaña of the Spaniard of Cuélar) (Espronceda) 135–136
 Sand, George 308, 383–384
Sandglass (Gunasekara) 186
Sangre y arena (Blood and Sand) (Blasco) 54
 San Juan, Epifanio 382–383
 SANLAM First Prize 317
 Saramango, José 384–385
Sardines (Farrah) 142
Sardonic Tales (Villiers) 444
 Sargeson, Frank 385–386
 Sarmiento, Félix Rubén García. See Darío, Rubén
 Sarraute, Nathalie 321, 386–387
 Sartre, Jean-Paul 42, 137, 387–389
The Satanic Verses (Rushdie) 377
Satan in Goray (Singer) 403
The Satin Slipper (Claudel) 95
Satura (Montale) 301
Satyagraha in South Africa (Gandhi) 157
 Satyanarayana, Visvanatha 389–390
Savacou (journal) 100
Savci’ya (To the Public Prosecutor) (Dağlarca) 108
The Saved Earth (Die gerettete Erde) (Burkart) 70
 Scandinavian literature 52, 189–191, 216–217, 251, 416
scapigliatura 390
The Scapigliature and February 6th (Arrighi) 390
Scarlet Song (Bà) 35
Scent of Eucalyptus (Quasimodo) 360
Schädelbasislektion: Gedichte (Basal Skull Lesson: Poems) (Grünbein) 182
 Scherzer, Rosalie. See Ausländer, Rose
 Schiller, Friedrich von 171, 207, 374, 390–392
 Schiller Prize 153
Schindler’s Ark (Keneally) 239–240
Die Schlafwandler (The Sleepwalker) (Broch) 66
 Schlonsky Prize 365
 Schmitz, Ettore. See Svevo, Italo
School Days (Chemin d’école) (Chamoiseau) 85–86
 Schwarz-Bart, Simone 392
 “schweigen” (“Silence”) (Gomringer) 173
The Screens (Genet) 164
 “Scribbles in the Margins of the Notebook of Defeat” (Kabbani) 231
Sea of Death (Amado) 17
Sea Grapes (Walcott) 447
The Seagull (Chekhov) 89, 90
Seamarks (Amers) (Perse) 348
Search Sweet Country (Laing) 252
A Season in Hell (Rimbaud) 145, 371
A Season in Paradise (Breytenbach) 63
A Season in Rihata (Une Saison à Rihata) (Condé) 101
Season of Adventure (Lamming) 254
Season of Migration to the North (Saleh) 382
The Sea Wall (Un Barrage Contre le Pacifique) (M. Duras) 127
Second Birth (Pasternak) 341
Second Class Citizen (Emecheta) 133
 Second National Poetry Prize 415
The Second Sex (Beauvoir) 42–43, 143
Second Symphony (Bely) 48
The Secret: New Poems (Akhmadulina) 10
The Secret Ladder (Harris) 193
The Secret Life of Sa’eed, the Ill-Fated Pessimist (Habibi) 188
The Secret of Heaven (Himlens Hemlighet) (Hagerkvist) 250
Secret Rendezvous (Abe) 2
 “The Secret Room” (Robbe-Grillet) 373
Secrets of the Self (Asrar-i-Khudi) (Iqbāl) 221
Secular Love (Ondaatje) 334
 Seferiadis, Giorgos. See Seferis, George
 Seferis, George 94, 393–394
Ségou (Condé) 101
 Seifert, Jaroslav 394
Seis poetas de lengua inglesa (Six Poets Writing in English) 150
Selected Poems (Breton) 62
Selected Works (Akhmadulina) 10
 Sembéne, Ousmane 395
 Senghor, Léopold Sédar 396
 Césaire and 84
 Diop, Birago, and 120
 Diop, David, and 120
 in Négritude 317
 postcolonialism of 353
El Señor Presidente (Asturias) 72
 “Separate Ways” (Higuchi) 204
 “Les Séparés” (“Apart”) (Desbordes-Valmore) 115–116
Septemberlyran (September Lyric) (Södergran) 407
 Serbian literature, Popa in 351–352
 Serote, Mongane Wally 397
Servitude et grandeur militaires (The Military Necessity) (Vigny) 443
Sessiz Ev (The Silent House) (Pamuk) 339
 Sestiger group 65
 Seth, Vikram 397–398
Seven Dada Manifestos (Tzara) 434
Seven Days Darkness (Gunnarsson) 187
Seven Gothic Tales (Dinesen) 118
Seven Poor Men of Sydney (Stead) 413
 “Seventeen”’e 331
The Seventh Day (Lasker-Schüler) 257–258
Sextet on the Six Days (Sudasiyat al-ayyam al-sitta) (Habibi) 188
The Shadow (Pérez Galdós) 347
Shadow Lines (Ghosh) 166
Shadows (Collimore) 100
Shakespeare Wallah (film) 226
 Shalamov, Varlam 398–399
Shame (Rushdie) 377–378
 “Sharing a Husband” (Ho) 205
Shazaya wa ramad (Shards and Ashes) (Mala’ika) 274–275
She Came to Stay (Beauvoir) 43
The She-Wolf (Verga) 442
Shifu, You’ll Do Anything for a Laugh (Mo) 297
 Shiga, Naoya 399
 Shiina Minako. See Ōba Minako
 Shinkankakuha (Neo-Perceptionists) movement 238
Shinshichō (New Tides) (Akutagawa) 12
Ships in the Sky (Gunnarsson) 187
Shi’r (journal) 8
 Shiwei, Wang 406
The Shock of Modernity (Adonis) 8
 Sholokhov, Mikhail 400
Short Stories (Calvino) 73
 Shu Qingchun. See Lao She
A Shuttle in the Dark (Solyinka) 409
Siddhartha (Hesse) 203
Sido (Colette) 99
 Sienkiewicz, Henryk 400–401
Sierrade Teruel (Malraux) 278
 “Silence” (“schweigen”) (Gomringer) 173
The Silence of Love (Han) 191
The Silent Cry (’e) 332
The Silent House (Sessiz Ev) (Pamuk) 339
 Simonon, Georges 401
 Simon, Claude 321, 402
 “Sin and Death in French Poetry since Baudelaire” (Ionesco) 219
 Singer, Isaac Bashevis 402–403
Singing from the Well (Arenas) 26

- The Sin of Father Amaro* (O crime do padre Amaro) (Queiróa) 362
A Sister to Scheherazade (Ombre Sultane) (Djebar) 121
Six Characters in Search of an Author (Pirandello) 349–350
 Sixtyers 65
 “Sketch” (Pak) 339
A Sketch on a Trip to Europe (Tian) 426
 Škvorecký, Jozef 403–404
Sky, Wind, Stars and Poetry (Yun) 460
A Slap in the Face of Public Taste (Mayakovsky) 287
The Sleepwalker (Die Schlafwandler) (Broch) 66
Slon (The Elephant) (Mrožek) 304, 405
Slowa we Krwi (Words Bathed in Blood) (Tuwim) 433–434
Slowing Life (Dağlarca) 108
The Slow Natives (Astley) 31
 “Slums of Our Earth” (Anyidoho) 22
Smoke (Turgenev) 433
The Smug Citizen (Gorky) 178
 “The Snake” (So) 404
Snakes and Ladders: Glances of Modern India (Mehta) 289
Snapshots (Robbe-Grillet) 373
Snow Dancer (Kawabata) 237
 “The Snow Queen” (Anderson) 20
Snow That Falls on the Three Southern Provinces (Hwang Tonggyu) 215
 “Snow White” (Grimm and Grimm) 182
Só (Nobre) 326
so beginnen am körper die tage (so begins the days along your body) (Falkner) 140
 So Chōng-ju 404
 socialist realism 404–406
 Akhmatova and 12
 Aragon and 25
 Breton and 62 in Gorky 178
 Huchel and 211
 Lu and 265
 in Mayakovsky 288
 in Ostrovsky 337
 Society of Women Writers and Journalists’ contest 17
 Södergran, Edith 407
Les Soeurs Vatar (The Vatar Sisters) (Huymans) 213
La Soif (The Mischief) (Djebar) 121
Ein Soldat und ein Mädchen (A Soldier and a Girl) (Fried) 153
Soledades (A. Machado y Ruiz) 268
Solibo Magnifique (Solibo Magnificent) (Chamoiseau) 85
Soliloques (Yacine) 454
 “The Solitary Life” (Leopardi) 260
So Long a Letter (Bà) 35
 Solovyov, Mikhail 419
 Solovyov, Vladimir 407–408
 Solzhenitsyn, Aleksandr 408
Some Prefer Nettles (Tanizaki) 424
 “Some Tentative Suggestions for the Reform of Chinese Literature” (Hu) 209, 299–300
Les Songes en Equilibre (Hébert) 200
Song of Algeria (Dağlarca) 108
Song of Exile (Gonçalves Dias) 174
Song of Lawino (p’Bitek) 345
The Song of Ou-Yang Hai (Chin) 406
Song of the City (Abrahams) 5
Song of the Departed (Trakl) 430
 “The Song of the Merchant Kalashnikov” (Lermontov) 261
Song of Youth (Yang) 406
Songoro cosongo (N. Guillén) 184
Songs for Soldiers and Sounds for Tourists (Cantos para soldados y sonos para turistas) (N. Guillén) 184
Songs of Life and Hope (Darío) 111
Songs of Mihyar the Damascene (Adonis) 8
Songs of shadow (Chants d’ombre) (Senghor) 396
Songs Without Words (Verlaine) 443
Songs of Yesterday (Feng) 144
 “Song Under Martial Law” (Hwang Tonggyu) 215
 “Sonnet of the Vowels” (Rimbaud) 371
Sonnets (Feng Zhi) 144
Sonnets (Pessoa) 349
Sonnets to Orpheus (Rilke) 370
Sorg-Acre (Sorrow Acre) (Dinesen) 118
 Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz prize 79
The Sorrow of Young Werther (Goethe) 170
 “Sortie” (Cixous) 93
The Sound of the Caravan Bell (Bang-i-Dira) (Iqbāl) 221
 “Sound of One Hand Clapping” (Flanagan) 147
Sound of the Mountain (Kawabata) 237–238
 Soupault, Philippe 25, 107
Sœur Pholmène (Goncourt and Goncourt) 175
 South African literature
 Abrahams in 4–5
 Breytenbach in 63
 Brink in 64
 Coetzee in 97–98
 Cronin in 104–105
 De Kok in 113–114
 Gordimer in 176–177
 Head in 199–200
 Kunene in 246
 La Guma in 249
 Malange in 275
 Ndebele in 316–317
 Nkosi in 325–326
 Nortje in 327
 Paton in 342
 Serote in 397
 Wicomb in 449
 South American literature. See Brazilian literature; Latin-American literature
 Southeast Asian Writer Award 117
Southern Mail (Saint-Exupéry) 381
South of the Border, West of the Sun (Murakami) 306
 “South Seas” (Pavese) 343
Souvenirs Pieux (Dear Departed) (Yourcenar) 459
 Souza, Eunice de 409
 Soviet literature. See Russian literature; socialist realism
Soviet Rus (Yesenin) 457
 Soviet Union
 Amalrik and 18
 Bulgakov and 68–69
 Dudintsev and 125
 Ehrenburg and 130
 Fadeyev and 139
 Mayakovsky and 287–288
 postcolonialism and 354
 Shalamov and 399
 Solzhenitsyn and 408
 Voinovich and 444–445
 Yevtushenko and 457
 Zamyatin and 461
 Soviet Writers’ Union 12, 125, 342, 408
 Soyinka, Wole 353, 409–410
Spain, Take This Cup from Me (Vallejo) 440
 Spanish literature
 Alberti in 13
 Arrabal in 28
 Baroja y Nessi in 39
 Bécquer in 46–47
 Blasco in 53–54
 Castro in 79–80
 Cela in 82
 Espronceda in 135–136
 García Lorca in 159–160
 Generation of 1898 in 163
 Guillén, Jorge, in 184
 Jiménez in 227
 Machado y Ruiz, Antonio, in 268
 Madariaga in 269
 objectivismo in 331
 Ortega y Gasset in 336
 Pérez Galdós in 347–348
 Unamuno y Jugo in 435–436
 Spanish modernism 269
 Spanish romanticism 47, 104, 136
Sparks (Étincelles) (Dépestre) 114
Speaking Alone (Tzara) 434
Speculations about Jacob (Mutmassungen über Jakob) (U. Johnson) 229 “Spell” (Grünzweig) 183
Spirale (magazine) 173
 Spivak, Gayatri 352

- A Sport of Nature* (Gordimer) 177
Sprache im technischen Zeitalter
 (Language in the Technological Age)
 (Höllerer) 209
Spring (Ba Jin) 34
The Sprouts (Ba Jin) 34
Le Square (M. Duras) 127
The Square Moon (Samman) 382
 Sri Sri 410–411
Srikanta (Chatterji) 89
Sri-Sri Sahityamu (Sri Sri) 411
 Staël, Germaine de 411–412
Stalactite (Yu) 459
 Stalin Prize 59, 119, 130, 400
The Star Apple (Walcott) 447
The Stars (Bing Xin) 51
The Starving Years (Enchi) 134
State of Siege (Camus) 75
 State Prize in Literature (Soviet Union) 11
The Static and Dynamic in Arabic Culture
 (Adonis) 8
The Static and the Dynamic in Arabic Culture
 (Adonis) 8
Statische Gedichte (Static Poems) (Benn)
 49
La Statue de sel (The Pillar of Salt)
 (Memmi) 290
Stay Alive, My Son (Yathay) 456
A Stay in the Country (Landaufenthalt)
 (Kirsch) 242
 Stead, Christina 375, 413
 Stendhal 414–415
Stephanos (Bryusov) 67
 Stephen Leacock Medal for Humour 112
Der Steppenwolf (Hesse) 203
E Sterma (The Cistern) (Seferis) 393
 “The Stern October Has Deceived Me”
 (Yesenin) 456
Sternverdunkelung (Eclipse of the Stars)
 (Sachs) 379
Stinking Rose (Bhatt) 51
Stirrings Still (Beckett) 46
 Stoll, David 291
Stone (Kamen) (Mandelstam) 279
The Stone Age (Dağlarca) 108
The Stone Country (La Guma) 249
The Stone Raft (Saramago) 385
La Storia (History) (Monrante) 301–302
Stories and Pictures (Peretz) 347
Stories for Ninon (Contes à Ninon) (Zola)
 462
The Stories of Eva Luna (Allende) 16
Stories of the Chinese Countryside (Tian)
 425
 Storm, Theodor 350
The Storm and Other Poems (Montale)
 301
The Storm of Steel (Jünger) 230
The Stormy Life (Ehrenburg) 130
 Storni, Alfonsina 415
 “The Story of a Mother” (Anderson) 20
The Story of Gösta Berling (Lagerlöf) 251
 “The Story of Shunkin” (Tanizaki) 424
The Story of the Eye (Bataille) 40
Strait Is the Gate (Gide) 167
The Strange Case of Peter Lett (Simenon)
 401
The Stranger (L'Étranger) (Camus) 74, 82
Stranger Stories: Literary Essays 1986–1999
 (Coetzee) 64
 “The Streetcar Gone Astray” (Gumilev)
 186
 Strega Prize 303, 343
 Strindberg, August 138, 416–417
Strings (Akhmadulina) 10
Strophe (Turning Point) (Seferis) 393
Struggle at Thebes (Kifah Tiba) (Mahfouz)
 272–273
The Struggle for Life (Baroja y Nessi) 39
The Student from Salamanca (Espronceda)
 136
Studies of Women (Capuana) 442
 Styx (Lasker-Schüler) 257
 “Submission” (Han) 191
Such a Long Journey (Mistry) 297
Such a Pity (Ikhtayyi) (Habib) 188
Sudasiyat al-ayyam al-sitta (Sextet on the Six Days) (Habibi) 188
The Suffrage of Elvira (Naipaul) 311
Sugar Street (Al-Sukkariyya) (Mahfouz)
 272
 “Suggestions for a Reform of Literature”
 (Hu) 209, 299–300
A Suitable Boy (Seth) 398
Al-Sukkariyya (Sugar Street) (Mahfouz)
 272
 Suleri, Sara 417
Sult (Hunger) (Hamsun) 190
 “Summary of a Conversation” (Bitton) 52
Summer (Été) (Camus) 74
The Sunken Bell (Feng) 144
The Sunken Bell (Die versunkene Glocke)
 (Hauptmann) 196
Sunken Oboe (Quasimodo) 360
Sun Poem (Brathwaite) 59
Sunset (Babel) 36
Sunset Village (Sargeson) 386
The Sun Shines over the Sanggan River
 (Ding Ling) 119
Sun Stone (Paz) 344–345
Superman (Bing Xin) 51
Le Surmâle (The Supermale) (Jarry) 225
 surrealism
 Apollinaire in 24
 Aragon and 25
 Artaud and 30
 in Bachmann 36
 Bataille and 40
 Baudelaire and 42
 in Breton 62 in Bulgakov 69 in Carpentier 78 in Char 86
 in Cocteau 96
 Cortázar and 103
 Éluard in 131
 existentialism and 62
 in fin de siècle 145
 in García Lorca 159
 Lautreamont and 258
 in Leiris 259–260
 magic realism and 271
 Michaux in 291
 in Paz 344
The Survivor (Keneally) 240
Suzanne et le Pacifique (Giraudoux) 169
 Svevo, Italo 417–418
Swami and Friends (Narayan) 313
The Swamp (Hwang Sun-won) 214
Sweet and Sour Milk (Farrah) 142
Sweet Diamond Dust (Ferré) 144
Sweet Words (Yasashii Kotoba) (Ishigaki)
 223
Swimming Lessons and Other Stories from Feroz Shah Baag (Mistry) 297
The Swinging Bridge (Espinete) 135
 symbolism 418–419
 acmeism and 7
 Bely and 48
 Bryusov and 67
 in Chinese modernism 300
 Cortázar and 103
 Dario and 110
 in Maeterlinck 270 in Mallarmé 275–277
 in Pasternak 341 in Proust 356
 in Quasimodo 360 in Rimbaud 371
 in Rosas 376
scapigliatura and 390
 in Seferis 393
 Valéry in 438
 Verlaine in 442–443
 in Villiers 444
 in White 448
Symphonies (Bely) 48
 “Szukam slowa” (“I Am Looking for a Word”) (Szyborska) 420
 Szyborska, Wislawa 420–421

T

- Tachetti, Iginio Ugo 390
 Tagore, Rabindranath 421–422
 Taiwanese literature 210–211, 459–460
 Takamura Kotarō 422–423
Taledanda (Karnad) 236
The Tale of Don L'Original (Maillet) 274
The Tale of Kieu (Truyen Kieu) (Nguyen) 322
The Tale of the Love and Death of Coronet Christoph Rilke (Rilke) 369–370

- Tales from Djakarta: Caricatures of Circumstances and Their Human Beings* (Toer) 427
- Tales of Amadou Koumba* (B. Diop) 120
- The Tales of Hoffmann* 206
- Tales of the Don* (Sholokhov) 400
- Tales of Times Now Past* 13
- “Talk of the Town” (column) 241
- Tamarind Season: Poems* (Goodison) 176
- Tamura Toshiko Prize 223, 247
- Tandem* (Sargeson) 386
- Tango* (Mrožek) 304
- Tanikawa Shuntaro 423
- Tanizaki Jun’ichirō 424
- Tanizaki Prize 134, 306, 330
- “The Tattooer” (Tanizaki) 424
- “Tattoo Marks and Nails” (La Guma) 250
- Teahouse* (Lao) 256
- “Telephone Conversation” (Soyinka) 410
- Tempest-Tost* (Davies) 112
- Une tempête* (A Tempest) 84
- The Temple of the Golden Pavilion* (Mishima) 295
- Le Temps Moderne* (journal) 388
- Tenderness* (Mistral) 296
- Ten Years of Exile* (Staël) 412
- Terra Nostra* (Fuentes) 154, 271
- Terra Vergine* (D’Annunzio) 110
- Le Testament d’Orphée* (The Testament of Orpheus) (Cocteau) 97
- Testimonies of Exile* (Busia) 71
- Tête d’or* (Claudel) 95
- Tevye the Dairyman* (Aleichem) 14
- Texaco* (Chamoiseau) 85
- Texts for Nothing* (Beckett) 45
- Thai literature, Dhammachoti in 117
- “That Summer” (Sargeson) 386
- That Time* (Beckett) 45
- Theater of Cruelty 30
- Theater of the Absurd 424–425
- Apollinaire in 23
- Arrabal in 28–29
- Beckett in 45
- existentialism in 137
- Genet in 164
- Ionesco in 219–220
- Jarry and 225
- Mrožek and 304
- Theaterprobleme* (Dürrenmatt) 128
- Théâtre Alfred Jarry 30
- The Theatre and Its Double* (Artaud) 30, 424
- Théâtre Libre movement 315
- Theodorescu, Ion N. See Argezi, Tudor
- Thérèse Raquin* (Zola) 462
- The Thief’s Journal* (Genet) 164
- Thieves* (Mishima) 295
- Thieves’ Carnival* (Anouilh) 22
- The Things* (Perec) 346
- Things Fall Apart* (Achebe) 5
- The Third Book about Achim* (Das dritte Buch über Achim) (U. Johnson) 229
- The Thirtieth Year* (Bachmann) 37
- Thirty Poems* (Collymore) 100
- Thomas Mann Prize 229
- Thomas the Impostor (Cocteau) 96
- Thoughts on the French Revolution* (Considerations sur la Révolution Française) (Staël) 411
- A Thousand Hoods* (Veyipadagalu) (Satyanarayana) 390
- Three Cheers for the Paraclete* (Keneally) 240
- Three Continents* (Jhabvala) 227
- “The Three Crabs” (Ōba) 330
- Three Essays on the Theory of Sexuality* (Freud) 152
- The Three Leaps of Wang-lun* (Die drei Sprünge des Wang-lun) (Döblin) 122
- The Three Marias* (Queiróz) 362
- The Threepenny Opera* (Brecht) 61
- Three Plays* (Walcott) 447
- Three Secret Poems* (Seferis) 394
- Three Trapped Tigers* (Cabrera) 72
- “Three Warriors” (Kauraka) 237
- Thrush* (Seferis) 393
- Al-Thulathiyya: Bayn al-Qasrayn* (Palace Walk) (Mahfouz) 272
- “Thumbing a Lift” (Nortje) 327
- Thus Spake Zarathustra* (Nietzsche) 325
- Tian Jian 425–426
- Tiempo de Morir* (An Time to Die) (Fuentes and García Márquez) 161
- The Tightrope* (La corde raide) (Simon) 402
- Ti Jean L’Horizon* (Between Two Worlds) (Schwarz-Bart) 392
- Tikhiy Don* (Sholokhov) 400
- “Timehri” (Brathwaite) 58
- The Time of the Hero* (Vargas) 440–441
- The Time of Indifference* (Moravia) 302
- The Time of Poetry* (Adonis) 8
- Time Remembered* (Anouilh) 22
- Times* (journal) 124
- A Time to Die* (Tiempo de Morir) (Fuentes and García Márquez) 161
- The Tin Drum* (Die Blechtrommel) (Grass) 179–180
- Today* (journal) 47
- Der Tod des Vergil* (The Death of Virgil) (Broch) 66
- Toer, Pramodya Ananta 426–427
- To Give and To Have* (Quasimodo) 361
- Tōhaku* (magazine) 458
- To Have Done With The Judgment of God* (Artaud) 30
- “To Italy” (Leopardi) 260
- “To Jarifa in an Orgy” (Espronceda) 136
- Tolstoy, Leo 366, 427–429
- Le tombeau des rois* (Hébert) 200
- A Tomb for Boris Davidovic* (Kiš) 242
- Tomorrow Is Ours: A Novel of India Today* (Abbas) 1
- “To My Brother Miguel In Memoriam” (Vallejo) 440
- “To My Readers” (Han) 191
- Tong Tianjian. See Tian Jian
- Too Late the Phalarope* (Paton) 342
- Topology of a Phantom City* (Robbe-Grillet) 373
- Tornimparti, Alessandra. See Ginzburg, Natalia
- Toronto Book Award 335
- To Roosevelt* (Dario) 111
- Torrent trilogy* (Ba Jin) 34
- Torres Bodet, Jaime 429–430
- “Tortures” (Szymborska) 420
- Der Tor und der Tod* (Death and the Fool) (Hofmannsthal) 207
- To the Daylight* (Tsushima) 431
- To the Island* (Frame) 151
- To the Land of Cattails* (Appelfeld) 24
- “To the Music of Kōras and Balaphon” (“Que m’accompagnent kōras et balaphong”) (Senghor) 396
- To the Public Prosecutor* (Savci’ya) (Dağlarca) 108
- To Us, All Followers Are Roses: Poems* (Goodison) 176
- The Tower* (Der Turm) (Hofmannsthal) 207
- The Tower of Babel* (Die Blendung) (Canetti) 75
- “The Tower of Light” (Breton) 62
- The Tower Struck by Lightning* (Arrabal) 29
- Townsville Foundation for Australian Literary Studies Award 277
- The Track to Bralgu* (Wongar) 4
- Traduit du grand large* (Translated from the High Sea) (Dépestre) 114
- La Tragédie du roi Christophe* (The Tragedy of King Christophe) (Césaire) 84
- The Tragedy of Mr. Morn* (Nabokov) 309
- Trajectory of Dust* (Castellanos) 79
- Trakl, Georg 430
- Trans-Atlantic* (Gombrowicz) 172–173
- Trans-Europ-Express* (Robbe-Grillet) 373
- Transit* (Höllerer, ed.) 209
- Translated from the High Sea* (Traduit du grand large) (Dépestre) 114
- “Translating Apollinaire” (bpNichol) 323
- “Transportation in Westchester” (Lim) 263
- Träume* (Dreams) (Eich) 131
- Travels in Africa* (Tian) 426
- The Travels of Lao Can* (Ts’an) (Liu) 264
- The Treasure of the Humble* (Maeterlinck) 270
- The Tree of Knowledge* (Baroja y Nessi) 39
- The Tree of Life* (La Vie scélérate) (Condé) 101

510 Encyclopedia of World Writers, 19th and 20th Centuries

- The Tree of Man* (White) 448
The Tree of the Sun (Harris) 194
Trees, Effigies, Moving Objects (Curnow) 105
Trees on a Cliff (Hwang Sun-won) 214
Trench Town Rock (Brathwaite) 59
Trends and Movements in Modern Arabic Poetry (Al-Jayyusi) 226
The Trial (Kafka) 233
La Tribuna (Pardo Bazán) 340
Le tricheur (The Cheat) (Simon) 402
Trilce (Vallejo) 439
 “Trilogy of the Children of the Rocks” (Kabbani) 231
Trilogy of Love (Ba Jin) 34
 “A Trip to the Gifberg” (Wicomb) 449
Tristiya (Poems) (Mandelstam) 279
Trois contes (Flaubert) 148
The Tropic of the Lamb (Der Wenderkreis des Lammes) (Langgässer) 256
Tropiques (Césaire) 84
Tropismes (Sarraute) 387
The Trouble with Nigeria (Achebe) 7
 “Troubled Waters” (Higuchi) 204
The Truce (Levi) 262
The True Confessions of an Albino Terrorist (Breitenbach) 63
The True History of the Kelly Gang (Carey) 77
True Justice (Ginzburg) 168
The True Story of Ah Q (Lu) 265
Truth: A Book of Fictions (bpNichol) 323
Truyen Kieu (The Tale of Kieu) (Nguyen) 322
 Tsukamoto Fumiko 12
 Tsushima Y’ko 431
 Tsvetaeva, Marina 10, 431–432
Tughlaq (Karnad) 235
Tumatumari (Harris) 193
Tungsten (Vallejo) 440
 Turgenev, Ivan Sergeyevich 366, 432–433
 Turkish literature 107, 233–234, 238–239
Der Turm (The Tower) (Hofmannsthal) 207
The Turncoat (Die Überläuferin) (Maron) 285
Turning Point (Strophe) (Seferis) 393
 Tuwim, Julian 433–434
12, Edmonstone Street (Malouf) 277
 “Twelve Night Pieces” (Malouf) 277
Twenty Billion Light Years of Loneliness (Tanikawa) 423
25 Poems (Walcott) 446
Twenty-Five Poems (Tzara) 434
Twenty Love Poems and a Song of Despair (Neruda) 318–319
Twilight Songs (Chants du crépuscule) (Hugo) 212
The Twin in the Clouds (Pasternak) 341
Two Adolescents (Moravia) 302
The Two Fires (Wright) 452
Two Women (Moravia) 302
 Tzara, Tristan 107, 131, 434
- ### U
- Die Überläuferin (The Turncoat)* (Maron) 285
Ubirajara (Alencar) 15, 219
Ubu cocu (Ubu Cuckolded) 225
Ubu echainé (Ubu Bound) 225
Ubu roi (King Ubu) (Jarry) 225, 425
 Ueda Fumi. See Enchi, Fumiko
 “The Ugly Duckling” (Anderson) 20
UGubudele namazimuzimu (Gubudele and the Cannibals) (Ndebele) 317
Ultimos cantos (Gonçalves Dias) 174
 Unamuno y Jugo, Miguel de 163, 435–436
Das Unauslöschliche (The Indelible Seal) (Langgässer) 256
The Unbearable Lightness of Being (Kundera) 244
 “Uncle” (Ndebele) 316–317
The Underground People (Nkosi) 326
 “Under Sentence of Death” (Espronceda) 136
Under the Skin of the Statue of Liberty (Yevtushenko) 457
 Undset, Sigrid 436
 Ungaretti, Giuseppe 436–437
 “Un grand poète noir” (Breton) 84
 “The Union Buries Its Dead” (Lawson) 259
Der Untertan (The Patrioteer) (H. Mann) 280
Untouchable (Anand) 19
 Untouchables. See Dalit literature
Urashima Grass (Ōba) 330
 Ussishkin Prize 365
- ### V
- La Vagabonde* (Colette) 99
 Valco Fund Literary Award for Poetry 22
 Valéry, Paul 438–439
 “Valiha” (Rabéarivelo) 364
 Vallejo, César 439–440
 “Vande Materam” (“I Worship Mother” or “Hail Motherland”) (Cattopadhyay) 81, 421
 Vargas Llosa, Mario 144, 270–271, 440–441
Variations on the Theme of an African Dictator (Farrakhan) 142
Various Stories (Machado de Assis) 267
 Varlik Prize 239
The Vatarad Sisters (Les Soeurs Vatarad) (Huymans) 213
 “The Vendor of Sweets” (“Mithaiwalla”) (Narayan) 313
A Venetian Night (La Nuit vénitienne) (Musset) 308
 Venice Biennale Critics Prize 121
Le Vent (The Wind) (Simon) 402
 Verga, Giovanni 441–442
 verismo 441, 442
La Vérité immédiate (Éluard) 131
 Verlaine, Paul 145, 418–419, 442–443
Das verlorene Alphabet (The Lost Alphabet) (Grünzweig) 183
Des Verse (Maupassant) 286
Die versunkene Glocke (The Sunken Bell) (Hauptmann) 196
Verteidigung der Wölfe (Defense of the Wolves) (Enzensberger) 134
A Very Easy Death (Beauvoir) 43
Vestnik Evropy (The Messenger of Europe) (journal) 235
Vesj (journal) 48
Veyipadagalu (A Thousand Hoods) (Satyannarayana) 390
 Viareggio Prize 302
The Victim (D’Annunzio) 110
La victoire de Guernica (Éluard) 131
La Vida Breve (A Brief Life) (Onetti) 335
La vie errante (The Wandering Life) (Bonhefoy) 55
Vierzehn Tage in Paris (A Fortnight in Paris) (Fischer) 146
La Vie scélérate (The Tree of Life) (Condé) 101
 Vietnamese literature 199, 205, 322
 “A View of the Yasukuni Festival” (Kawabata) 237
Vigil (Ungaretti) 437
 Vigny, Alfred de 443–444
The Village (Bunin) 70
The Village by the Sea (Desai) 115
Village Society (Palli Samaj) (Chatterji) 88
 Villiers de L’Isle-Adam, Auguste 444
Vilna (Mickiewicz) 292
A Vindication of the Rights of Women (Wollstonecraft) 142
A Violent Life (Pasolini) 341
Virgin Soil (Turgenev) 433
Virgin Soil Uplifted (Sholokhov) 400
The Visit (Besuch der alten Dame) (Dürrenmatt) 128
Una Vita (A Life) (Svevo) 418
Vladimir Mayakovsky: A Tragedy (Mayakovsky) 287
The Voice (Okara) 333
The Voice of Things (Ponge) 351
Voiceprint: An Anthology of Oral and Related Poetry from the Caribbean 253
A Void (La Disparition) (Percé) 346
 Voinovich, Vladimir 444–445
Voix intérieures (Inner Voices) (Hugo) 212
Vol de Nuit (Night Flight) (Saint-Exupéry) 381
Vor dem Sturm: Roman aus dem Winter 1812 auf 1813 (Before the Storm: A Novel of the Winter of 1812-1813) (Fontane) 149

Vor Sonnenaufgang (Before Dawn)
(Hauptmann) 196
The Voronezh Notebooks (Mandelstam) 279
Voss (White) 448
"Le Voyage" (Baudelaire) 42
Voyage in the Dark (Rhys) 368
The Voyager (Robbe-Grillet) 372–373

W

- W, or The Remembrance of Childhood*
(Perec) 346
Wacvie (Bandler) 4
The Wage Shark (Der Lohnrücker)
(Müller) 304
Wagner, Richard, Claudel and 95
Wahl, Jean 137
Waiting for Godot (En attendant Godot)
(Beckett) 45
Waiting for the Barbarians (Coetzee) 97
The Waiting Room (Harris) 193
Walcott, Derek 100, 446–447
Walker, Kath. See Noonuccal, Oodgeroo
A Walk in the Night and Other Stories (La Guma) 249
"Walk with Love" (Miron) 294
A Walk Under the Trees (Jaccottet) 224
Wallenstein (Schiller) 391
The Waltz of the Toreadors (Anouilh) 22
The Wandering Life (La vie errante)
(Bonnefoy) 55
War and Peace (Tolstoy) 428
Ward No. 4 (Ba Jin) 34
The War from London (La Guerra Desde Londres) (Madariaga) 269
The War of Independence (Dağlarca) 108
The War of the End of the World (Vargas) 441
War of Time (Carpentier) 78
Watashi no Mae ni Aru Nabe to Okama to Moeru Hi to (The Pots, Pans and Burning Fire Before Me) (Ishigaki) 222
"The Watch on the Kerb" (Lawson) 259
Water and Land (Quasimodo) 360
Waters of Spring (Bing Xin) 51
Water with Berries (Lamming) 254
Watt (Beckett) 45
Waves (Bei Dao) 47
The Way Back (Remarque) 368
A Way in the World (Naipaul) 312
We (Zamyatin) 461
We Are Going (Noonuccal) 327
The Weavers (Die Weber) (Hauptmann) 196
Die Weber (The Weavers) (Hauptmann) 196
Weep Not, Child (Ngugi) 321
Wegschilder und Mauerinschriften (Road Signs and Wall Writings) (Kunert) 247
Welcome Home (Herémakhonon) (Condé) 101
- "We Live Here" (Voinovich) 444
The Well Days (Bunin) 70
Der Wenderkreis des Lammes (The Tropic of the Lamb) (Langgässer) 256
Western Australia Premier's Award for Fiction 195
West Indian literature. See Caribbean literature
West Indian Poetry 1900–1970 (essays) 100
West Indies, Ltd. (N. Guillén) 184
West of Sorrow (Elytis) 132
Westwärts 1 & 2 (Westwards 1 & 2) (Brinkmann) 66
What Is Literature? (Qu'est-ce la Littérature?) (Sartre) 389
What Is To Be Done? (Chernyshevsky) 91–92, 124
"What Is the Word" (Beckett) 46
"What the Twilight Says" (Walcott) 446–447
What Was Without Light (Ce qui fut sans lumière) (Bonnefoy) 55
The Wheel of Fortune (Moravia) 302
When Heaven and Earth Changes Places (Hayslip) 199
When the Mountains Tremble (film) 291
Where Do I Go Now? (Wohin denn ich) (Kaschnitz) 236
While the Billy Boils (Lawson) 259
Whirlpools (Sienkiewicz) 401
White, Patrick 448
White Clothes (Dudintsev) 126
White Guard (Bulgakov) 68–69
The White Negress (La Nègresse blanche) (Capécia) 76
The White Wampum (P. Johnson) 228
White Writing: On the Culture of Letters in South Africa (Coetzee) 98
Who Do You Think You Are? (Munro) 306
Who Is to Blame? (Herzen) 202
The Whole Armour (Harris) 193
"Whoroscope" (Beckett) 45
Wicomb, Zoë 449
Wide Sargasso Sea (Rhys) 369
Wiesel, Elie 449–450
The Wild Ass's Skin (Le Peau de chagrin) (Balzac) 37
Wild Conquest (Abrahams) 5
Wilde, Oscar 113
The Wild Geese (Mori) 303
Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship (Goethe) 170
Wilhelm Raabe Prize 229
Wilhelm Tell (Schiller) 391
William Faulkner Foundation Prize 123
Williams, Ella Gwendolyn Rees. See Rhys, Jean
Will the Soviet Union Survive to 1984? (Amalrik) 18
The Wind (Simon) 321
- The Wind (Le Vent)* (Simon) 402
The Wind-Up Bird Chronicle (Murakami) 306
Wine Press (Mistral) 296
The Winner (Cortázar) 103
Wisdom (Verlaine) 443
Wisdom and Destiny (Maeterlinck) 270
Wisdom of the Sands (Saint-Exupéry) 381
With Fire and Sword (Sienkiewicz) 400
Without Dogma (Sienkiewicz) 400
Without a Shape (Ōba) 330
Wittig, Monique 450
Wohin denn ich (Where Do I Go Now?) (Kaschnitz) 236
Wolf, Christa 451
The Wolf Hunt (Verga) 442
Wolff, Kurt. See Benn, Gottfried
Wollstonecraft, Mary 142
Woman at Point Zero (Sadawi) 380
Woman from Sarajevo (Andric) 21
The Woman in the Dunes (Abe) 2
A Woman Named Solitude (La mulâtresse Solitude) (Schwarz-Bart) 392
Woman of the Aeroplanes (Laing) 252
A Woman's Life (Maupassant) 286
Woman to Man (Wright) 452
Woman Writer's Award 199
The Womb of Space: The Cross-Cultural Imagination (Harris) 194
Women and Sex (Sadawi) 380
Women in Action (video) 253
Women of the Sun (Maris) 3 women's issues in Atwood 32
 in Bâ 35
 Busia and 71
 in Chatterji 88
 in Desai 115
 in Ding Ling 119
 in Djebbar 121
 in Emecheta 133
 in Espinet 135
 in García Lorca 159–160
 in Ho 205
 in Kabbani 231 in Malange 275
 in Ōba 330
 in Undset 436
Women's Literary Award 247
Women Writing in Africa (Busia) 71
The Wonderful Adventures of Nils (Lagerlöf) 251
Wongar, B. 4
The Wood Demon (Chekhov) 89
The Words (Les Mots) (Sartre) 389
The Workers (Jünger) 230
Works (Bécquer) 46
World of Seven Wells (Storni) 415
A World of Strangers (Gordimer) 177
World of Wonders (Davies) 112

512 Encyclopedia of World Writers, 19th and 20th Centuries

World Peace Prize 205
World Prize for Poetry 452
Worth It Be (Axion Esti) (Elytis) 132
Woruk, Kona. See Harris, Wilson
Woyzeck (Büchner) 68
Wright, Judith 451–452
Writing Us Mob: New Indigenous Voices
(collection) 4
The Wrong Side and the Right Side
(L'Envers et l'endroit) (Camus) 74

X

Xala (Sembène) 395
Xavier Vaillaurrutia prize 79, 150
Xie Wanying. See Bing Xin

Y

Yacine, Kateb 454–455
Yakhal'inkomo (Serote) 397
Yamada Eimi 455
Yáñez, Mirta 455
Yasashii Kotoba (Sweet Words) (Ishigaki)
223
Yathay Pin 455–456

Yayati (Karnad) 235
The Year of the Death of Ricardo Reis
(Saramago) 384
“Yentil the Yeshiva Boy” (Singer) 403
Yesenin, Sergey 456–457
Yevtushenko, Yevgeny 10, 125, 351, 457
Yiddish literature 14, 346–347
Yomiuri Prize 295, 306, 431
Yosano Akiko 458
You Can't Get Lost in Cape Town
(Wicomb) 449
“You Laughed and Laughed and Laughed”
(Okara) 333–334
The Youngest Doll (Ferré) 144
The Youngest Fate (Valéry) 438
The Young Guard (Fadeyev) 139
Young Torless (Musil) 307
Yourcenar, Marguerite 458–459
Yourcenar Prize 121
Youth (Tolstoy) 428
You Who Wronged a Simple Man (Milosz)
294
Yo-Yo Boing! (Braschi) 57
Yu Guangzhong 459–460
Yūmoa no Sakoku (The National Isolation of Humor) (Ishigaki) 223

Yun Tongju 460
Yvonne, the Princess of Burgundy
(Gombrowicz) 172

Z

Zamyatin, Yevgeny 461–462
Zazie dans le Métro (Queneau) 363
The Zea Mexican Diary (Brathwaite) 59
Zhao Zhenkai. See Bei Dao
Zhou Shuren. See Lu Xun
Zima Junction (Yevtushenko) 457
Zindan Namah (Prison narrative) (Faiz)
140
Zola, Émile 145, 314, 462–463
“Zone” (Apollinaire) 23
Zorba the Greek (Kazantzakis) 14, 238
Zoya's Apartment (Bulgakov) 69
Zulu literature, Kunene in 246
Zulu Poems (Kunene) 246
Zuqaq al-Midaqq (Midaq Alley)
(Mahfouz) 273
Zygal: A Book of Mysteries and Translations
(bpNichol) 323
Zynger, Icek-Hersz. See Singer, Isaac
Bashevis

CUMULATIVE INDEX

Boldface page references refer to main entries. Roman numerals I, II, and III preceding page numbers refer to volume numbers.

A

- Aardema, Verna II:10
 Abad, Per I:72
 Abbas, K(hawaja) A(hmad) III:1
The Abbey of Bliss (Cattopadhyay). See Anandamāth
The Abbot C. (Bataille) III:40
An Abbreviated History (Ishigaki). See Ryakureki
 ABC Theater III:197
 Abdallah, Sayyid II:1
 Abe Kimifusa. See Abe Kō-bō
 Abe Kōbō III:1–2
 Abe Kōbō Studio III:2
 Abélard, Pierre I:1–2, I:118, I:147, I:189, I:229
Abelard's Love (Rinser) III:372
 Abenaljatib. See Ibn al-Khatīb
Abeng (Cliff) III:95–96
 Aboriginal Arts Board of the Australian Arts Council III:4
 Aboriginal Center III:4
 Aboriginal movement III:3–4
 Aboriginal Publications Foundation III:3, III:4
 aborigines, works on II:304
Abraham and Isaac II:66
 Abrahams, Cecil III:250
 Abrahams, Peter Henry III:4–5, III:250
The Abridgement of the Public Laws of Virginia (Beverly) II:22
 absolute prose III:49
Absolute Signal (Gao) III:158
 absurdism III:74
 Abū al-`Alā `al-Ma`arrī I:2
 Abu al-Qāsim. See Muhammad
 Abū Firās, Tammasām ibn Ghalib. See Farazdaq, al-
 Abu Talib. See `Alī ibn Abī Talīb
 Abū Tammām I:2–3
The Abyss (Yourcenar) III:459
Academia dei Ricovrati II:264
 Academia de los Ociosos II:8
 Academia Española III:269
 Academia Imitatoria II:8
 Académie française II:1–2
 authors recognized by II:264
 literary criticism by II:64
 members of II:25, II:145, II:149, II:174, II:221, II:240, II:298, III:213, III:220, III:443–444, III:459 Academy Awards III:180, III:226
 nominations III:127
 Academy of Arcadia II:184
 Academy of Arts (East Germany) III:44, III:280
 Academy of Arts (West Berlin) III:229
 Academy of Dijon II:250
 Academy of Idlers II:8
 Academy of Imitators II:8
 Academy of Letters (Brazil) III:268, III:362
 Academy of Letters of Quebec Medal III:294
 Academy of Literature (Sweden) III:250–251
 Academy of Sciences (France) II:4
 Academy of Sciences (Russia) II:160
 Academy of the Arts (Prussia) III:122
 Academy of the Transformed II:214
 A.C. Benson Award III:313
Accents (periodical). See Akzente
Accident: A Day's News (Wolf) III:451
Accidental Death of an Anarchist (Fo) III:149
An Account of Corsica (Boswell) II:28
An Account of My Hut (Kamo). See Hojoki
An Account of the Montauk Indians on Long Island (Occom) II:209
 “Account of the Vine of North America” (Bartram) II:17
Acharnians (Aristophanes) I:20
 Achebe, Chinua III:5–7, III:305, III:353, III:409
 Achilles I:133
 acmeism III:7, III:11, III:185, III:279, III:419
The Acolyte (Astley) III:31
 “A Córdoba” (“To Córdoba”; Góngora y Argote) II:105
 Acosta, José de II:2–3
Across the Bridge, Juana (Lope de Vega). See Por la puente Juana actors II:189–190, II:266, II:313, III:20
 “Acts of the Divine Augustus” (Augustus). See Res Gestae Divi Augusti
Actuelles III (Camus) III:74
Ada (Nabokov) III:310
adab I:145
Adages (Erasmus) II:88
 Adair, Gilbert III:346
Adam, Where Art Thou? (Böll) III:54

514 Cumulative Index

- Adam de la Halle I:3–4
 Adams, Abigail II:303
 Adams, John II:122, II:293, II:303
The Adaptable Man (Frame) III:151
Addictus and Saturio (Plautus) I:240
 Addison, Joseph II:278
An Address to the Negroes in the State of New-York (Hammon) II:111
Adelchi (Manzoni) III:284
Adelphi (The Brothers; Terence) I:300
Ad Helviam Matrem de Consolatione (Consolation to Helvia; Seneca) I:275
Adieux: A Farewell to Sartre (Beauvoir) III:43
 Admiral's Men II:176
Ad Monimum (Fulgentius) I:109
Admonitions (Francis of Assisi) I:107
Adolphe (Constant de Rebecque) III:102
 Adonis III:7–8
Adonis Garcia (Zapata) I:233
 “Adon Olam” (Master of the Universe; Ibn Gabirol) I:139
Adoration of the Magi (Leonardo da Vinci) II:155
 Adorno, T. W. III:140
Ad Polybium (Seneca) I:275
The Adulateur, A Tragedy (Warren) II:303
 Adunis. See Adonis
The Advancement of Learning (Bacon) II:14
Adventures in the unknown interior of America (Cabeza de Vaca) II:35
The Adventures of Hans Staden (Staden) II:276–277
Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (Twain) II:50
 “The Adventures of Redhorn's Sons” I:323
The Adventures of Sumiyakist Q. (Kurahashi) III:247
The Adventures of Telemachus (Aragon) III:25
The Adventures of the Last of the Abencérages (Chateaubriand). See Les Aventures du dernier des Abencérages
Adventurous Heart (Jünger) III:230
The Aeneid (Virgil)
 adaptations of I:124–125
 composition of I:32
 epic genre and I:97, II:86, II:87
 influence of I:172, II:282
 influences on I:18, I:202
 themes and structure of I:93, I:132, I:320–322
 translations of II:263
Aeneis (Douglas, trans.) II:263
 Aeschines I:27, I:90
 Aeschylus I:4–6
 contemporaries of I:236, I:286
 influence of I:6
 literary criticism on I:5–6, II:289
 themes in I:136
 works by I:280
 works on I:21
 Aesop I:6–8
 and fable tradition II:10
 influence of I:234, I:262, II:149
 influences on I:9
 literary criticism on I:7–8, I:76, II:91
 parallels to I:230, I:265
 popularity of II:142
 translations of I:185
Aesthetic Curiosities (Baudelaire). See Curiosités esthétiques
 Aethelred I (king of England) I:11
Aethiopian Historie (Heliodorus) II:270
Aetia (Aitia; Causes; Callimachus) I:60
Afectos vencen finezas (Affections Conquer Finenesses; Peralta) II:220
 Afer, Domitius I:253
 Afer, Publius Terentius. See Terence
The Affected Young Ladies (Molière) II:58
Affections Conquer Finenesses (Peralta). See Afectos vencen finezas
 “Africa” (D. Diop) III:120
 African-American literature II:87, II:111–112, II:304–305
 African Diaspora III:71, III:101, III:133
 African literature. See also specific countries
 postcolonialism in III:353
 works I:8–9, I:98–99, I:157–158, I:289, II:10–11, II:16
 writers III:9–10, III:22–23, III:35, III:120, III:133, III:141–142, III:193–194, III:252, III:305, III:316–317, III:320, III:321–322, III:322, III:328–329, III:332–333, III:333–334, III:345, III:381–382, III:395, III:396, III:409–410, III:436–437, III:454–455
 African National Congress III:104
 African proverbs I:8–9
African Religion in Western Scholarship (p'Bitek) III:345
 “African Slavery in America” (Paine) II:212
 “African Storm” (Laing) III:252
 Afrikaans writers III:63–64, III:64–65
L'Afrique fantôme (Leiris) III:260
 “After Being in Love” (Rumi) I:265
After Leaving Mr. Mackenzie (Rhys) III:369
The Afternoon of a Faun (Mallarmé) III:276
After Russia (Tsvetaeva) III:431–432
After the Banquet (Mishima) III:295
 “Again a Meeting” (Yevtushenko) III:125
Against Alcibiades (Andocides) I:26–27
Against Apatourius (Demosthenes) I:90
Against Apion (Josephus) I:149
Against Aristocrates (Demosthenes) I:90
Against Ctesiphon (Aeschines) I:27
Against Eratosthenes (Lysias) I:179
Against Marriage (Marinetti) III:285
Against Nature (Huysmans). See À rebours
Against Polyces (Demosthenes) I:90
Against the Christians (Porphyry) I:248
Against the Dogmatists (Sextus Empiricus). See Against the Logicians
 “Against the God of the Wind” (Han Yu) I:123
Against the Jews and Their Lies (Luther) II:166
Against the Logicians (Against the Dogmatists; Against the Professors; Sextus Empiricus) I:277
Against the Mathematicians (Sextus Empiricus). See Against the Physicists
Against the Physicists (Against the Mathematicians; Sextus Empiricus) I:277
Against the Professors (Sextus Empiricus). See Against the Logicians Against Timarchus (Aeschines) I:27
Agamemnon (Aeschylus) I:5
Agamemnon (Seneca) I:276
 Agatucci, Cora II:1
 Age Book of the Year Award III:195
 Age of Exploration II:289
The Age of Suspicion (Sarraute). See L'Ère de soupçon
Agésilas (Xenophon) I:333
Agésilas II (king of Sparta) I:332, I:333
Aglaia (periodical) II:77
Aglavaine et Sélysette (Maeterlinck) III:270
 Agni I:256–257
 Agnon, Samuel Joseph III:8–9, III:379
 “Agonique Life” (Miron) III:294
The Agony of Christianity (Unamuno y Jugo) III:436
The Agony of the West (Dağlarca) III:108
 Agostino (Moravia) III:302–303
 Agricola I:293
Agricolae De Vita Iulii (Tacitus) I:293
 Agrippa, Enrique Cornelio I:158
 Agrippina (empress of Rome) I:275
 “Agwee the Sky Monster” (Oe) III:332
 Ahmad, Muhammad Yusri III:218
 Ahmed, Ziauddin III:417

- Ahohas, Jaakko I:153
 Aichinger, Ilse III:9, III:131, III:183
 Aidoo, Christina Ama Ata III:9–10
 AIDS, victims of III:26
Aimé Césaire (Moutoussamy) III:85
Ainda o Meu Sonho (Neto) III:320
 AIPWA. See All India Progressive Writers' Association
Airs (Jaccottet) III:224
Aitia (Callimachus). See Aetia
Ajax (Sophocles) I:286
 Akash, Munir III:111
Ake: The Years of Childhood (Soyinka) III:409
 Akhmadulina, Izabella Akhatovna III:10–11
 Akhmatova, Anna III:11–12
 acmeism and III:7
 friends and colleagues of III:279
 husband of III:185
 influence of III:10, III:242
 influences on III:419
 literary criticism on III:432
 Akiko (empress of Japan) I:141
 Akutagawa Prize III:2, III:199, III:330, III:331
 nominees III:455
 Akutagawa Ryūnosuke III:12–13, III:303
Akzente (Accents; periodical) III:208, III:209
Aladdin's Lamp (Cocteau) III:96
Aladdin's Problem (Jünger) III:230
 Alan of Lille I:147, I:260
À la recherche du temps perdu (In Search of Lost Time; Remembrance of Things Past; Proust) III:48, III:356–357 alba I:329
 Alba, duchess of II:285
 Alba, duke of II:161
 Albee, Edward III:425
 Alberti, Leon Battista II:3–4
 Alberti, Rafael III:13
 Albert the Great, Saint I:303
 Albertus Magnus I:303
 Albrecht (prince of Königsberg) II:140
 Albret, Henri d' (king of Navarre) II:172–173
 Albret, Jeanne d' (queen of Navarre) II:173 al-Būsirī. See Būsirī, al-
 Alcaeus I:10, I:61
 Alcayaga, Lucila Godoy. See Mistral, Gabriela
Alcestis (Euripides) I:91, I:102
The Alchemist (Jonson) II:127
Alcohols (Apollinaire). See Alcools
Alcools (Alcohols; Apollinaire) III:23
Alcuin: A Dialogue (Brown) II:31
 Aldesparre, Sophie III:251
 Aleichem, Shalom III:14
Alejandra (Aregensola) II:8
 Alembert, Jean Le Rond d' II:4–5
 Académie française and II:2
 on Crusades I:80
 Encyclopedia and II:76, II:82, II:85, II:194, II:243, II:251
 Enlightenment and II:85, II:242, II:243
 Alembert's principle II:4
 Alencar, José Martiniano de III:14–15, III:174, III:219, III:362
 Alençon, duc d' II:172
 Alepoudelis, Odysseus. See Elytis, Odysseus
 Alexander I (czar of Russia) III:235, III:358, III:428
 Alexander II (czar of Russia) III:202, III:407, III:433
 Alexander IV (pope) I:266
Alexander in the Indies (Metastasio) II:185
 Alexander of Pharae I:102
 Alexander the Great contemporaries of I:22, I:100, I:300
 impact of I:17, I:26
 influences on I:333
 works on I:92, I:210, I:257, I:278
Alexander the Great (Racine). See Alexandre le Grand
Alexandre le Grand (Alexander the Great; Racine) II:240
 Alexandrianism I:63
Alexiad (Anna Comnena) I:16
 Alexius I (emperor of Byzantium) I:15–16, I:79
 Alexius IV (emperor of Byzantium) I:319
 Alfieri, Augusto III:343
 Alfieri, Vittorio II:5
Alf Layla wa-Layla. See The Thousand and One Nights
 Alfonso II (king of Aragon) I:317–318
 Alfonso VI (king of Castile) I:71, I:72–73
 Alfonso X (king of Spain) I:72, I:167, II:285
 Alfred the Great (king of England) I:10–11, I:15
Algerian White (Djebar) III:121
Alger-Républicain (periodical) III:74
 Algonquian language Bible translation II:81–82
 Algonquin tribe II:124
 Algren, Nelson III:43
Alias Grace (Atwood) III:32
Alien Talk (Dmitriev) II:77–78
Aligarh Opinion (periodical) III:1
 Alighieri, Dante. See Dante Alighieri
 `Alī ibn Abī Talīb I:11–12, I:105, I:145, I:192
Alladine et Palomides (Maeterlinck) III:270
 All-China Resist-the-Enemy Federation of Writers and Artists III:256 Alldridge, James III:9
 allegory II:5–6
 practitioners of I:65, I:239, II:23, II:59, II:66, II:150, II:173, II:210, II:242, II:263
The Allegory of Love (Lewis) I:65 allegory of the cave I:239
 Allegret, Marc III:167
Alléluia pour une femme-jardin (Hallelujah for a Garden-Woman; Dépestre) III:114
 Allen, Rosamund I:258
 Allende, Isabel III:15–16, III:271
 Allende, Salvador III:16, III:319
 Allende, Tomas III:15
Alle Vögel all (All the Birds; Höllerer) III:209
 Alley, Rewi I:168
All for Love (Dryden) II:202
 Allfrey, Phyllis III:16–17
 All India Progressive Writers' Association (AIPWA) III:356
 Allison, Robert J. II:87
 Alliterative Revival II:218
All Men Are Brothers (Gandhi) III:158
All Men Are Brothers (Shi Naian and Luo Guanzhong). See Shuihuzhuan
All Quiet on the Western Front (Remarque) III:367–368
All Said and Done (Beauvoir) III:42
All the Beauties of the World (Seifert) III:394
All the Birds (Höllerer). See Alle Vögel all
All the Family Are Blessed (Lao) III:256
All the Names (Saramago) III:385
All You Who Sleep Tonight (Seth) III:398
 al-Malaika, Nazik. See Mala'ika, Nazik al-
 Almeida, Manuel I:158
Almirante (ship) II:230–231
 al-Mutanabbi. See Mutanabbi, al-
 "Alone" (Zamyatin) III:461
 Alpers, Antony III:283
 al-Sa'dawi, Nawal. See Sadawi, Nawal
Altar of Victory (Bryusov) III:67
 Alte, Reinmar der I:324
 Alvarez, Lynne II:288
 Amado, Jorge III:17–18
La Ama Joven (Pardo Bazán) III:340
 Amalrik, Andrey III:18
 Amara-sakti, King I:230
 Ambedkar, Bhimrao Ramji, Dr. III:109

516 Cumulative Index

- Ambrose, Saint I:12–13
 influence of I:29, I:30, I:168
 influences on I:244
- Ambulando* (Brasch) III:57
- America (Dwight) II:79
- “America Independent” (Freneau) II:97
- American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters III:313
- American Academy of Arts and Literature III:11, III:34, III:112
- American Academy of Arts and Sciences III:457
- American Book Award III:263, III:423
- American Crisis* (Paine) II:212–213
- American Day by Day* (Beauvoir) III:43
- American Library Association Notable Book Award III:57
- American Philosophical Society II:121
- American Revolution
 neoclassicism and III:94
 service in II:79, II:95–96, II:198, II:284 supporters of II:133, II:212–214
 works on II:5, II:65, II:74–75, II:97, II:303
- American writers II:28–30, II:31–32, II:60–61, II:65, II:74–75, II:79, II:80–82, II:87, II:94–97, II:111–112, II:121–123, II:178–180, II:195, II:198–199, II:199–200, II:212–214, II:253–254, II:273, II:283–284, II:303–304, II:304–307
- Amers* (Seamarks; Perse) III:348
- Ameto* (Boccaccio) II:217
- Amichai, Yehuda III:18–19
- Aminta* (Tasso) II:217, II:282
- ʿAmiri, Diwan Labid ibn Rabiʿa al-. See Labid
- Ammonius Saccas I:244, I:245
- Among Single Women* (Pavese) III:343
- Among the Believers: An Islamic Journey* (Naipaul) III:312
- “Amor de caritate” (Jacopone da Todi) I:144
- Amores* (Ovid) I:227
- “Amorium” (Abū Tammām) I:2–3
- L’amour, la fantasia* (Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade; Djébar) III:121
- L’Amour, la poésie* (Éluard) III:131
- Amphitriões* (Camões) II:38
- Amphitryon* (Kleist, trans.) II:137
- Amphitryon* (Molière) II:202
- Amphitryon* 38 (Giraudoux) III:169
- Amr ibn Hind (king of al-Hirah) I:13, I:297–298
- ʿAmr ibn Kulthum I:13, I:120, I:298
- Amyntas* (Gide) III:168
- Amyntas* II (king of Macedonia) I:22
- Amyot, Jacques I:175, I:245
- Anabase* (Anabasis; Perse) III:348
- Anabasis* (Perse). See Anabase
- Anabasis* (Xenophon) I:333
- Anacreon I:13–14, II:72, II:160
- Anacreontic Songs* (Derzhavin) II:72
- Anak Semua Bangsa* (Toer) III:427
- Analects*. See Lun Yu
- Anand, Mulk Raj III:19–20, III:109
- Ānandamāth* (The Abbey of Bliss; Cattopadhyay) III:81
- Anarchy or Hierarchy* (Madariaga) III:269
- Anatolian Tales* (Kemal) III:239
- The Ancestors and the Sacred Mountain* (Kunene) III:246
- Anchieta, José de II:6–7
- “Anchor” (Hasluck) III:195
- anchorites II:128
- Ancient Spanish Ballads* (Scott) I:72
- Ancient Spider I:206
- “ancient style” movement. See du-wen movement
- ancients v. moderns debate II:279
- “Anc ieu non l’aic, mas elha m’a” (“I don’t hold it, but it holds me”; Arnaut) I:24–25
- Andalusian School I:120, I:138
- Anday, Melih Cevdet III:234
- Andersch, Alfred III:183
- Andersen, Hans Christian III:20–21
- And My Little Things* (Dmitriev) II:77
- Andocides I:26–27
- And Quiet Flows the Don* (Sholokhov) III:400
- Andrada e Silva, José Bonifácio de II:7
- Andrade, Mario de III:299
- Andrade, Oswald de III:299
- Der Andere Gast* (The Other Guest; Höllerer) III:209
- Andrézel, Pierre. See Dinesen, Isak
- Andria* (The Maid from Andros; Terence) I:299
- Andria* (Machiavelli) II:169
- Andric, Ivo III:21
- Andromaque* (Racine) II:202, II:240, II:289
- And Suddenly It’s Evening* (Quasimodo) III:361
- And the Dish Ran Away with the Spoon* (Laird) III:253
- And the Sea Is Never Full: Memoirs* (Wiesel) III:450
- And They Put Handcuffs on the Flowers* (Arrabal) III:29
- “And You” (Han) III:191
- “Andy’s Gone with Cattle” (Lawson) III:259
- “Anecdote of an American Crow” (Bartram) II:17
- Anerin I:39
- L’Ange Heurtebise* (Cocteau) III:96
- An Angel at My Table* (Frame) III:151
- The Angel at the Gate* (Harris) III:194
- The Angel of Bethesda* (Mather) II:178
- An Angel’s Fall* (La Chute d’un Ange; Lamartine) III:253
- Angelus, Alexius I:319
- Ångest* (Anguish; Lagerkvist) III:250
- Angiolieri, Cecco I:14–15
- Anglo-Saxon Chronicle I:11, I:15, I:218
- Angolan literature, Neto in III:320
- An Angry Letter in January and Other Poems* (Aidoo) III:10
- Anguish* (Lagerkvist). See Ångest
- Anicet; ou, Le Panorama* (Aragon) III:25
- “The Animal Who Would Eat Men” I:323
- Anishinaubaeq. See Ojibway myths and legends
- Anna Comnena I:15–16
- Anna Dalassena I:16
- Anna Karenina* (Tolstoy) III:428–429
- Annals* (Ennius) I:96
- Annals* (Tacitus) I:233, I:293–294
- Anne de Bretagne II:177
- Annette von Droste-Hülshoff Prize III:70
- Annie, Gwen, Pam and Tulip* (Kincaid) III:241
- Annie John* (Kincaid) III:241
- “The Annihilation of the Hotcàgara” I:331
- Anniversaries* (Donne) II:78
- anno Domini* dating, origins of I:41
- Annotations on Corinthians* (Melanchthon) II:183
- Annals of the Emperor Charles V* (López de Gómara) II:164
- Anouilh, Jean III:21–22
- Anselm of Laon I:1
- Ansichten eines Clowns* (The Clown; Böll) III:54
- “The Answer” (Bei Dao) III:47
- Antan d’enfance* (Childhood; Chamoiseau) III:85
- Antelme, Robert III:127
- Anthem of the Decades* (Kunene) III:246
- Anthologie de la nouvelle poésie nègre et malgache de langue française* (Anthology of New Negro and Malagasy Poetry in French; Senghor) III:317–318
- Anthology of New Negro and Malagasy Poetry in French* (Senghor). See Anthologie de la nouvelle poésie nègre et malgache de langue française
- Anthropos* (periodical) III:364
- anthroposophy III:48

- antiapartheid movement III:5,
III:63–65, III:246, III:353
- Anticato* (Caesar) I:58
- The Anti-Christ* (Nietzsche) III:325
- The Antidote* (Catherine the Great)
II:46
- Antigone* (Anouilh) III:21, III:22
- Antigone* (Sophocles) I:286
- Antigonus I:92
- The Antimony Miners* (Ba Jin) III:34
- Antiphon I:26
- Antiquitez de Rome* (The Antiquities of Rome; Bellay) II:20, II:226
- antisemitism
in authors I:150–151
Dreyfus affair and III:145, III:357
impact of III:66
works on III:35, III:83, III:115,
III:457
- Antoinette de Louppes II:192
- Antokolsky, Pavel III:10
- Antonioni, Michelangelo III:103
- Antony, Mark
contemporaries of I:92
political struggles of I:31, I:130
works on I:69
- Antony and Cleopatra* (Shakespeare)
II:267
- Antschel, Paul. See Célan, Paul
- Anyidoho, Kofi III:22–23
- Aonid* (periodical) II:77
- Apache myths and tales I:327–329
- “Apart” (Desbordes-Valmore). See “Les Séparés”
- apartheid. See also antiapartheid movement
influence of III:275
works on III:249, III:326, III:327,
III:342, III:449
- Aperion* (periodical) III:52
- Aphrodite I:202
- Aphrodite: A Memoir of the Senses*
(Allende) III:16
- Apion I:149
- Apocalypse Explained* (Swedenborg)
II:278
- Apocolocyntosis divi Claudii* (The pumpkinification of the divine Claudius; Seneca) I:276
- Apollinaire, Guillaume III:23–24,
III:323
- Apollo I:202
- Apollodorus I:16–17, I:300
- Apollon* (periodical) III:7, III:185,
III:279
- Apollonius of Rhodes I:17–18, I:60
- Apologia* (Apuleius) I:18
- Apologia* (Pico della Mirandola) II:224
- An Apologie for Poetry* (Sidney) II:270
- Apologues* (Dmitriev) II:77
- Apology* (Plato) I:282
- “Apology for Raymond Sebond”
(Montaigne) II:193
- The Apophoreta* (Martial) I:186
- Appelfeld, Aharon III:24–25
- Appiah, K. Anthony III:6
- The Apprentice’s Vade Mecum* (Young Man’s Pocket Companion; Richardson) II:245
- The Approximate Man* (Tzara) III:434
- Aprokos Gospel I:225
- Apuleius I:18–19, II:270
- Aquinas, Saint Thomas. See Thomas Aquinas, Saint
- Aquitaine, William of Poitou, duke of
I:257
- Arabesques* (Gogol) III:172
- Arabian Nights*. See The Thousand and One Nights
- The Arabian Nights: A Companion*
(Irwin) I:304
- Arabian Nights and Days* (Mahfouz)
I:306, III:273
- Arab literature
through 13th century
works I:120–121, I:161–163,
I:304–306
writers I:2–3, I:11–12, I:13,
I:25–26, I:32–36, I:55,
I:105, I:139–140, I:144–145,
I:158–159, I:164, I:180–181,
I:192–193, I:196–197,
I:264–266, I:297–298
- 14th- through 18th-century writers II:117–119
- 19th- and 20th-century
writers III:7–8, III:111–112,
III:121, III:188,
III:225–226, III:231–232,
III:272–273, III:274–275,
III:380, III:381–382, III:382
- Arab Women’s Solidarity Association
III:380
- Aracoli* (Morante) III:302
- Aragon, Louis III:25
friends and colleagues of III:62,
III:131, III:434
works by III:107
- The Aragon Collection* (Poliziano)
II:227
- Aragonese School II:8
- Arberry, A. J. I:298
- “Arbitrary Government Described”
(Winthrop) II:307
- The Arbitrators* (Menander) I:188
- Arbuthnot, John II:278
- Arc* (periodical) III:183
- Arcadia* (Sidney) I:175, II:217, II:270
- The Arcadians II:100
- Archelaus I:286
- Archelaus of Macedon I:102
- Archer, Robert II:172
- Archias I:70
- Archimedes I:101
- The Architect and the Emperor of Assyria*
(Arrabal) III:29
- architects II:3–4
- Archives du Nord* (Northern Archives;
Yourcenar) III:459
- Arch of Triumph* (Remarque) III:368
- Arctic Dreams and Nightmares* (Ipellie)
III:220
- Ardele* (Anouilh) III:22
- Ardent talons* (Maeterlinck) III:270
- An Area of Darkness* (Naipaul) III:312
- À rebours* (Against Nature; Huysmans)
III:113, III:213–214
- Arenas, Reinaldo III:26
- Areopagitica* (Milton) II:188
- Ares I:202–203
- Aretino, Pietro II:7–8
- Argensola, Bartolomé Leonardo de
II:8–9
- Argensola, Gabriel II:8
- Argensola, Lupercio Leonardo de
II:8–9
- Arghezi, Tudor III:26–27, III:94
- Los argonautas* (Blasco) III:54
- Argonautica* (“The voyage of the Argo”; Apollonius of Rhodes) I:17–18, I:60
- Arias, Arturo III:291
- Arias tristes* (Sad Arias; Jiménez)
III:227
- Arion and the Dolphin* (Seth) III:398
- Ariosto, Ludovico II:9–10
allegory in II:6
friends and colleagues of II:283
influence of II:15, II:48, II:161,
II:282, II:283
influences on I:285, I:313, I:322,
II:21
Renaissance and II:244
romance and I:258, II:247
- Aristarchus I:17
- Aristarchus of Samos II:62
- Aristophanes I:20–22
contemporaries of I:59, I:238,
I:280, I:281
and farce II:92
influence of I:174, I:302
literary criticism on I:21–22
works by I:101–102, I:188,
I:281–282
works on I:238
- Aristotle I:22–24
contemporaries of I:187, I:300
critics of II:33, II:39
influence of I:1, I:21, I:23, I:32–33,
I:35, I:111, I:167, I:183–184,
I:244, I:245, I:248, I:301, I:302,

- I:303, II:4, II:25, II:61, II:62, II:63, II:115, II:128, II:157, II:172, II:185, II:202, II:282, II:286
- literary criticism by I:91, I:102, I:136, I:286
- literary criticism on I:23–24, I:173, I:300–301
- philosophical method of I:277
- translations of I:50
- on unities II:292
- works by I:7, I:281–282
- works on I:32–33, I:248, II:292
- Arjhas layali* (The Cheapest Nights; Idris) III:218
- The Ark Sakura* (Abe) III:2
- Armance* (Stendahl) III:414
- Armenian literature, works I:86–87
- Armitage, Angus II:62
- Armstrong, H. A. I:244–245
- Arnault, Antoine II:216
- Arnaut Daniel I:24–25, I:312, I:318, II:172
- Arnim, Bettina von III:27, III:242
- Arnim, Ludwig Achim von III:27, III:374
- Arnold, Matthew I:99, I:185, III:428
- Arouet, François-Marie. See Voltaire
- Arp, Hans III:28
- Arp, Jean. See Arp, Hans
- Arrabal, Fernando III:28–30
- Arranged Words* (Arghezi) III:26
- The Arrangement of Words* (Dionysius of Halicarnassus) I:93
- Arrezzo, Guittone d' I:85
- Arrian I:99
- Arrighi, Cletto III:390
- The Arrivants: A New World Trilogy* (Brathwaite) III:58, III:59
- Arrow of God* (Achebe) III:7
- Arrowsmith, William I:103
- Ars amatoria* (The Art of Love; Ovid) I:65, I:116, I:155, I:227–228
- Arsenio* (Montale) III:301
- art
- classicism in II:56
 - Dada and III:107
 - expressionism in III:138
- Artamene, ou le grande Cyrus* (Artamene or the Great Cyrus; Scudéry) II:264
- The Art and the Place of Poetry* (Bonney) III:55
- Artaserse* (Metastasio) II:185
- Artaud, Antonin III:28–29, III:30–31, III:424
- Artaxerxes II (king of Persia) I:332
- art critics II:4, II:157, III:23, III:41, III:162, III:175, III:260
- Arte de grammatica da lingua . . . do Brasil* (Anchieta) II:6
- Artemis I:202
- Arte nuevo de hacer comedias en este tiempo* (New Art of Writing Plays at This Time; Lope de Vega) II:162
- art epics II:86–87
- “art for art’s sake” III:73, III:162–163, III:367. See also modernism
- artha* I:231
- Artha Shastra* I:155, I:231
- Arthurian legend
- courtly love and I:311
 - Holy Grail in. See Holy Grail
 - influence of II:270, II:271
 - medieval literature and I:190
 - origins of I:67, I:201, I:217
 - themes in I:65–66
 - Tristan and Iseult in I:309
 - works on I:39, I:67–69, I:112, I:115–116, I:124, I:257, I:258, I:329–331, II:97, II:170–172
- Arthurian Romances* (Chrétien de Troyes) I:67, I:258
- Arthur Mervyn (Brown) II:31
- Artificial Paradises* (Baudelaire). See Les Paradis artificiels
- Artis analyticae praxis ad aequationes algebraicas resolendas* (Hariot) II:112
- artists II:154–156, II:185–188, II:304, III:28, III:29, III:159, III:220, III:244
- The Art of Chivalry* (Vegetius). See de re Militaria
- The Art of Controversy* (Schopenhauer) II:262
- The Art of Courtly Love* (Capellanus) I:65
- The Art of Literature* (Schopenhauer) II:262
- The Art of Love* (Ovid). See Ars amatoria
- The Art of Poetry* (Boileau-Despréaux) II:25
- The Art of the Novel* (Kundera) III:245
- The Art of War* (Machiavelli) II:169
- The Art of War* (Sunzi). See Ping-fa
- Artraud, Antonin III:439
- Arturo’s Island* (Morante) III:302
- ‘asabbiyah II:118
- Asahi Shimbun Newspaper* III:314
- As a Man Grows Older* (Svevo) III:418
- Ascanio in Alba* (Parini) II:214
- Ascent of Mount Carmel* (St. John of the Cross) II:126
- Ascent to Omai* (Harris) III:193
- asceticism, in Middle Ages I:108
- Ascham, Roger II:115
- Asgharzadeh, Alireza II:26
- as-Hamasa (Abū Tammām) III:168
- Ashanti tales II:10–11
- Ashikaga Yoshimitsu II:205
- Ashiqat al-lail* (“Lover of night”; Mala’ika) III:274
- Ashurbanipal I:113
- The Ash Wednesday Supper* (Bruno) II:32
- Asia, postcolonialism in III:353
- Askitiki* (Kazantzakis) III:238
- Aspermont, Francesco Flugi III:23
- Asrar-i-Khudi* (Secrets of the Self; Iqbal) III:221
- The Assault* (Arenas) III:26
- “Un’assenza” (Ginzburg) III:168
- Asser, John I:11
- The Assignment* (Dürrenmatt) III:128
- Association of Nigerian Authors III:333
- Association of Women Citizens Literary Prize III:256
- Associations of the Lotus* (Yu) III:459–460
- L’Assommoir* (The Drunkard; Zola) III:462
- The Assumption of Hannele* (Hauptmann). See Hanneles Himmelfahrt
- Astley, Thea III:31
- Astrophel and Stella* (Sidney) II:270
- Asturias, Miguel Angel II:230, III:72
- As You Like It* (Shakespeare) II:60, II:217, II:266, II:268
- Atala (Chateaubriand) III:87, III:375
- ataraxia* I:277
- Atchity, Kenneth I:10, I:276
- At Dead Low Water and Sonnets* (Curnow) III:105
- At Dusk* (Chekhov) III:89
- Atea I:206
- Atea Rangi I:206
- Ateneo of Madrid III:340
- Athalie* (Racine) II:240–241
- Atharva-Veda* I:256
- “Atheist’s Prayer” (Unamuno y Jugo) III:435–436
- Athena I:202
- Athanaeum* (periodical) II:261
- ‘Atiyya, Jarir ibn I:105
- “At Kinosaki” (Shiga) III:399
- Atkinson, Alan II:281
- The Atlantic Monthly* (periodical) III:6, III:310
- Atlas I:202
- atman* I:46
- Atrahasis* I:114
- Atsumichi, Prince I:141
- Attalus the Stoic I:275
- ‘Attār, Farid od-Din I:25–26
- At the Bottom of the River* (Kincaid) III:241
- “At the End of the World” (Zamyatin) III:461

- At the Palace of Knossos* (Kazantzakis) III:238
- Attic orators I:26–28, I:179
- Attilio Regolo* (Metastasio) II:185
- Atwood, Margaret III:31–32
- Aubigné, Agrippa d' I:322, II:11
- Aucassin et Nicolette* I:28–29
- Auch, Lord. See Bataille, Georges
- Auden, W. H. III:105, III:150, III:407
- Audience* (Havel) III:197
- Aue, Hartmann von. See Hartmann von Aue
- Auerbach, Erich I:84
- “Auferstanden aus Ruinen” (“Risen from the Ruins”; Becher) III:44
- Augsburg Confession II:183
- Augustine, Saint I:29–31
- allegory in II:6
- on biblical interpretation II:290
- as Doctor of the Church I:12
- influence of I:2, I:31, I:109, I:168, II:115, II:222, II:286
- influences on I:244
- life of I:217
- literary criticism on I:30–31
- translations of I:11
- works by I:189
- works on I:118, I:304
- The August Sleepwalker* (Bei Dao) III:47
- Augustus (emperor of Rome) I:31–32
- contemporaries of I:92, I:134, I:135, I:172, I:234, I:320, I:321
- reign of I:227, I:228
- works on I:228, I:235, I:294
- Aunt Julia and the Scriptwriter* (Vargas Llosa) III:441
- The Aunt's Story* (White) III:448
- Aupick, Jacques III:41
- Aurélia* (Nerval) III:320
- Aurelian (emperor of Rome) I:173
- Aurelius, Marcus. See Marcus Aurelius
- Aurenche, Jean III:21
- Aurobindo, Sri III:1
- Aurora: A Novel* (Leiris) III:260
- Ausländer, Rose III:32–33
- Austen, Jane III:226
- Australia, discovery and settlement of II:230–231, II:284, II:304
- Australia, postcolonialism in III:353
- Australia Day Councils' Australian of the Year Award III:448
- Australian Arts Council, Aboriginal Arts Board of III:4
- Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Islander Studies III:4
- Australian literature
- aboriginal movement in III:3–4
- writers II:304, III:31, III:76–78, III:146–147, III:195, III:239–240, III:259, III:277, III:326–327, III:448, III:451–452
- Australian Literature Council III:452
- Australian Literature Society's Gold medal III:277, III:448
- Australian Writers Guild III:4
- Austrian Medal of Honor III:37
- Austrian writers III:9, III:36, III:50, III:66, III:206–207, III:307
- Author of the Year Award (Germany) III:16
- autobiographies
- through 13th century I:32, I:40, I:149, I:191–192
- 14th through 18th centuries II:5, II:11, II:12, II:95–96, II:119, II:121, II:135, II:194, II:251, II:252–253, II:262, II:285
- 19th and 20th centuries III:42, III:63, III:85–86, III:92, III:157, III:167, III:168, III:178–179, III:202, III:255, III:278, III:291, III:341, III:342, III:356–357, III:369, III:372, III:386, III:387, III:409, III:412, III:428, III:448, III:462
- Autobiography* (Life; Josephus) I:149
- The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin* (Franklin) II:95–96
- Autobiography of Michel de Montaigne* (Montaigne) II:194
- Autobiography of My Mother* (Kincaid) III:241
- An Autobiography or The Story of My Experiments with Truth* (Gandhi) III:157
- automatic writing III:62
- “Autumn” (Akhmadulina) III:11
- Autumn* (Ba Jin) III:34
- “Autumn” (Ouyang Xiu) I:226–227
- Autumn Leaves* (Hugo). See Feuilles d'automne
- The Autumn of the Lonely* (Trakl) III:430
- Avaiki I:206
- avant-garde movement
- in China III:47, III:300
- figures associated with III:23, III:96, III:164
- fin de siècle and III:145
- influence of III:36
- Aventures du baron de Fœnesté* (d'Aubigné) II:11
- Les Aventures du dernier des Abencérages* (The Adventures of the Last of the Abencérages; Chateaubriand) III:87
- Averroës I:32–34
- influence of I:32, I:34, I:303, II:39
- literary criticism on I:33–34
- works on I:304
- Avianus I:235
- Avicbron. See Ibn Gabirol, Solomon ben Yehuda
- Avicenna I:34–36, I:303, I:304, II:61
- Avvakum II:12
- Awara* (film) III:1
- “Awful Hour” (Yun) III:460
- Awiakta, Marilou I:216–217
- A.W. Reed Lifetime Achievement Award III:105
- Axayacatl of Tenochtitlán II:12–13, II:196
- Axel* (Villiers) III:444
- Axelard, Jacob II:97
- Axion Esti* (Worth It Be; Elytis) III:132
- Ayamonte, marques de II:106
- Azorin (José Martínez Ruiz) III:163
- Aztec Empire II:64, II:159
- Aztec literature
- creation myths I:77
- poetry I:208–209
- works II:159, II:201–202, II:202–204, II:235
- writers II:12–13, II:36, II:195–196
- “L'Azur” (Mallarmé) III:276

B

- Bà, Mariama III:35
- Baal Babylon* (Arrabal) III:29
- Babel, Isaac III:35–36, III:75
- Babi Yar* (Yevtushenko) III:457
- Babrius I:234
- Babylonian literature I:113–115
- Babylonians* (Aristophanes) I:20
- The Bacchae* (The Bacchantes; Euripides) I:102–103, I:137
- The Bacchantes* (Euripides). See The Bacchae
- Bacchylides I:37
- Bachmann, Ingeborg III:36–37, III:451
- Bacon, Francis II:14–15
- British empiricism and II:73
- classicism in II:56
- influence of II:59
- works by II:293
- works on III:260
- Bacon, Nathaniel II:61
- Badenheim* (Appelfeld) III:24
- badi* I:2
- Baeda. See Bede
- Bahādur Shāh Zafar III:166
- Bahba, Hohmi III:352
- Baïf, Jean-Antoine II:225
- baihua* III:210, III:300, III:366–367
- Bai Juyi I:37–38, I:171
- Bajazet* (Racine) II:240
- Ba Jin III:34–35, III:367, III:406
- Baker, Gary III:229
- Bakunin, Mikhail III:34, III:432

520 Cumulative Index

- Balai Pustaka III:426, III:427
 Balboa, Vasco Nuñez de II:303
 Balbuena, Bernardo de II:15–16
The Balcony (Genet) III:164
 Baldini, Gabriele III:168
 “The Baldness of the Buzzard” I:323
 Baldric, archbishop of Dol I:80
 Baldr the Beautiful I:205
 Baldry, H. C. I:132, I:308
The Bald Soprano (Ionesco). See La Cantatrice chauve
 Baldwin, Spurgeon I:168
 Baldwin of Flanders I:319
Ballade (The Testament; Villon) I:190 ballads, English II:84
Ballets Without Music, Without Dancers, Without Anything (Céline) III:83
 “Ball of Fat” (Maupassant). See “Boule de Suif”
Baltasar and Blimunda (Saramago) III:385
 The Balustrade theater III:197
 Balzac, Honoré de III:37–38
 comparable authors III:348
 influence of III:39, III:442
 literary criticism on III:38
 realism in III:366
 Bamana Segu, Epic of II:16, II:275
 Bambara people II:275
 Bancarella Literature Award (Italy) III:16
 Bandler, Faith III:4
Bangadarsan (periodical) III:80
Bang-i-Dira (Iqbāl). See The Sound of the Caravan Bell
 “Banished” (Lasker-Schüler) III:258
 Banks, Joseph II:16–17
Banquet (Dante). See Convivio
Banqueters (Aristophanes) I:20
Banyan Limited III:254
 Barbé-Marbois, François, marquis de II:122
The Barber of Seville (Beaumarchais) II:19
The Barber of Seville (Rossini) II:19
 Barbey d’Aurevilly, Jules-Amédée III:38–39
 Barbour, Douglas III:334–335
 Barbour, John II:262
 bardic poetry I:38–39
 oral literature and I:224
 parallels to I:217
 sagas and I:269
 themes of I:190
 Barefoot Carmelites II:126
 Bar Kochba I:88
The Bark Tree (Queneau). See Le Chiendent
Barlaam and Josaphat II:90
 Barnes, Clive III:29
 Barney, Natalie Clifford III:99, III:145
 Barnstone, Tony I:326
 Barnstone, Willis I:326
 Baroja y Nessi, Pío III:39–40, III:82, III:163
La barraca (Blasco) III:53
La Barraca theater company III:159
Un barrage contre le Pacifique (The Sea Wall; M. Duras) III:127
 Barre, Mohamed Siyad III:142
 Barrette, Paul I:168
 Bartels, Emily C. II:176
 Barth, John II:61
 Barthes, Roland III:40, III:331
 Bartram, John II:17
 Bartram, William II:17
Basal Skull Lesson: Poems (Grünbein). See Schädeldbasislektion: Gedichte
The Bashful Man in the Palace (Tirso de Molina) II:287
 Bashō II:17–19, II:111, III:285
 Basil, Saint I:12
 Basile, Giovanni Battista II:221
 Bassnett-McGuire, Susan III:350
The Bass Saxophone: Two Novellas (Škvorecký) III:404
 Bastida, Gustavo Adolfo Dominguez. See Bécquer, Gustavo Adolfo
 Bastidion, Eketerina II:72
 Bat I:206
 Bataille, Georges III:40, III:260
 “Bateche” (Miron) III:294
The Bathhouse (Mayakovsky) III:288
 “Bath of Pallas” (Callimachus) I:59
The Baths of Algiers (Cervantes) II:48
Battle of Maldon I:218
The Battle of the Books (Swift) II:279
Battle of the Teutoburger Wald (Kleist) II:137
 Battle of Valmy II:102
Battles of Coxinga (Chikamatsu) II:52
 Battus IV (king of Cyrene) I:236
 Baudelaire, Charles II:19, III:40–42 censorship of III:147
 decadence and III:113
 fin de siècle and III:145 influence of III:39, III:95, III:213, III:255, III:276, III:298–299, III:364, III:371, III:390, III:404, III:442, III:448
 influences on III:419
 literary criticism on III:41–42
 and modernism III:298–299
 and symbolism III:418–419
 translations of III:411
 works on III:389
 Baugh, Edward III:100
 Bauhaus (musical group) III:30–31
Baumgartner’s Bombay (Desai) III:115
 Bavarian Academy of Arts III:445
 Bavarian Academy of Fine Arts Literature Prize III:9
The Bay Psalm Book II:82
 BBC (British Broadcasting Corp.)
 “Caribbean Voices” series III:254 employees of III:5, III:101, III:153, III:269, III:311, III:381 poetry heard on III:186
 West Indian Service III:254
 BBC Asia Award for Achievement in Writing and Literature III:186
 BBC Poetry Award III:23
 Beatrix of Nazareth I:39–40, I:118, II:255
Beatus ille (Horace) II:8
 Beat writers
 influence of III:66, III:186
 influences on III:138, III:371
 literary criticism by III:291
 Beauchamp, Katherine Mansfield. See Mansfield, Katherine
 Beaufort, Jane II:262
 Beaumarchais, Pierre-Augustin Caron de II:19
The Beautiful Sight (Mrožek) III:304
The Beautiful Summer (Pavese) III:343
 “A Beautiful Young Nymph Going to Bed” (Swift) II:279
Beauty and Sadness (Yasunari) III:238
 Beauvoir, Simone de III:42–44
 friends and lovers III:320, III:388, III:450
 influence of III:143, III:144
The Beaver Coat (Hauptmann) III:196
 Beccaria, Cesare III:283
 Beccaria, Giambattista II:46
 Becher, Anne I:235
 Becher, Johannes Robert III:44
Becket (Anouilh) III:21, III:22
 Becket, Thomas à II:51
 Beckett, Samuel III:44–46
 existentialism and III:137
 influence of III:76, III:97, III:98, III:158
 influences on III:357
 literary criticism on III:45–46, III:219
 postmodernism and III:355
 and Theater of the Absurd III:28–29, III:425
 Bécquer, Gustavo Adolfo III:46–47, III:104, III:268
 Bécquer, José Dominguez III:46
The Bedbug (Mayakovsky) III:288
 Bede I:40–41
 influence of I:15, I:112
 translations of I:11
 works by I:56–57, I:189, I:218
Bed of a Stranger (Darwish) III:111
A Bed of Grass (Tsushima) III:431

- Bedtime Eyes* (Yamada) III:455
 Beeckman, Isaac II:72–74
Beef, No Chicken (Walcott) III:447
 Beethoven, Ludwig von I:203, II:56, III:260, III:391
Before Dawn (Hauptmann). See Vor Sonnenaufgang
Before Dawn (Tian) III:425
Before the Storm: A Novel of the Winter of 1812–1813 (Fontane). See Vor dem Sturm: Roman aus dem Winter 1812 auf 1813
 “The Beggar” (Espronceda) III:136
The Beggar (Mahfouz) III:273
Beggar’s Opera (Gay) III:61
 “Beginning” (Grünzweig) III:183
Beginning and End of Snow (Bonnetfof). See Début et fin de la neige
 Beguines I:118, II:255
 Bei Dao III:47, III:300
 Beier, Ulli III:364–365
 Beijing People’s Art Theater III:158
Beijing Procuratorial Daily (periodical) III:297
 Beijing Writers Association III:47
Being and Nothingness (Sartre). See L’Être et le néant
Being and Time (Heidegger) III:388
Being and Time (Sartre) III:388
Beirut Nightmares (Samman) III:382
Beirut ’75 (Samman) III:382
 Béjart, Armande II:190
 Béjart, Madeleine II:189–190
 Belgian writers I:39–40, I:118–119, III:270, III:291
The Bell (periodical). See Kolokol
The Bellarmine Jug (Hasluck) III:195
 Bellay, Jean du II:20, II:274
 Bellay, Joachim du II:20, II:225–226, II:274
Belle (Simenon) III:401
 Belleau, Rémy II:225
La Belle Captive (Robbe-Grillet) III:373
Le bellissima avventura di Caterii dalla trecciolina (Morante) III:302
 Bellon, Roger I:263
 Bellow, Saul I:62, III:403
The Bells of Saint Babel’s (Curnow) III:105
Bellum Alexandrinum (The Alexandrian War; Caesar) I:130
Beloved (Morrison) III:271
 Bely, Andrey III:48, III:419
 Bembo, Pietro II:8, II:20–21, II:71, II:244
 Ben al-Hatib. See Ibn al-Khatib
A Bend in the River (Naipaul) III:311
Beneath the Red Banner (Lao) III:256
 Benedict, Ruth I:299
 Benghal renaissance III:421
 Benn, Gottfried III:48–49, III:182, III:258
 Bennett, C. E. I:61, I:135–136
 Bennett, Louise III:49–50
 Benoît de Saint-Maure II:51, II:107
 Benucci, Alessandra II:9
 Benz, Maria III:131
Beowulf I:41–43
 as epic I:97, II:86
 influences on I:39, I:270
 literary criticism on I:15, I:205, I:283
 medieval literature and I:190, I:258
 Old English poetry and I:217
 Berdyayev, Nikolay Aleksandrovich III:136
Bérénice (Racine) II:240
 Bergerac, Cyrano de I:176, II:21
 Bergin, Thomas II:24
 Bergson, Henri III:301
Berlin Alexanderplatz (Döblin) III:122
 Berlin Critics Prize (Germany) III:37, III:180
 Berlin Ensemble III:59
 Berlin Film Festival III:297
 Berlin Society for the Sciences II:154
 Bernabé, Jean III:84–85
 Bernard de Ventadour I:43–44, I:318
 Bernardino de Sahagún I:209
 “El Bernardo” (Balbuena) II:15
 Bernard of Clairvaux I:118, II:286
 Bernardone, Francesco de Pietro di. See Francis of Assisi, Saint Bernhard, Thomas III:50
 Bernstein, Ingrid. See Kirsch, Sarah
 Bérout I:258, I:309, I:310
 Bers, Sofiya III:428
 “Beside a Chrysanthemum” (So) III:404
 Best Book Award, Library Journal (United States) III:16
The Best Boy in Spain (Lope de Vega) II:163
Bestiare d’amour I:44
 bestiaries I:44–45, I:167, I:262, II:91
 Best Young British Writers Award III:133
Besuch der alten Dame (The Visit; Dürrenmatt) III:128
The Betrothed (Manzoni). See I prommessi sposi
Between Father and Son (Naipaul) III:312
Between the Carnation and the Sword (Alberti) III:13
Between Two Worlds (Schwarz-Bart). See Ti Jean L’Horizon
 Beverly, Anna II:198
 Beverly, Robert II:22
 Beverly, William II:198
Beware, Soul Brother (Achebe) III:6
 Beyle, Marie-Henri. See Stendhal
Beyond the Pleasure Principle (Freud) III:152
Beyond the Curve (Abe) III:2
Bhagavad Gita I:45–47, I:47, I:182, I:251
Bhagavata Purana I:251
bhakti I:46
 Bhatt, Sujata III:50–51, III:409
 Bialik Prize III:25, III:365
Biathanatos (Donne) II:78
 Bible
 apocryphal books I:49
 Christian I:49
 Dead Sea Scrolls and I:87–89
 existentialism in III:136
 Hebrew I:47–50, I:77, I:87–89 influence of I:2, I:44, I:108, I:119, I:149, I:167, I:260, I:269, II:177–178, II:178, II:218, II:305, III:72, III:118, III:340
 influences on I:115
 interpretation of II:290
 King James, precursors of II:311
 Martin Luther on II:166 mystery plays and I:197
 oral literature and I:223 parables, v. Buddhist parables I:339 printing press and I:190
 Talmud and I:294–296 translations of I:49, I:148, I:189, II:81–82, II:89, II:243, II:270–271, II:311
 v. Koran I:162, I:163
 works on II:222, II:233, II:311
Bibliotheca Historica (Historical Library; Diodorus) I:92
Bibliothèque (Apollodorus) I:17
Bickerstaff Papers (Swift) II:278
The Bicycle and Other Poems (Malouf) III:277
 Bierhorst, John II:201–202
 Biermann, Wolf III:242, III:247, III:451
The Big Bazoohley (Carey) III:78
Big Breasts and Full Hips (Mo) III:297
Bilete de Papagal (periodical) III:27
 Bill, Max III:173
Billard um halb zehn (Billiards at Half-Past Nine; Böll) III:54
Billiards at Half-Past Nine (Böll). See Billard um halb zehn
 Bill of Rights, U.S.
 influences on II:188
Bim (periodical) III:58, III:100, III:254
 Bingen, Hildegard von. See Hildegard von Bingen
 Bing Xin III:51–52, III:367

522 Cumulative Index

- “Binh Ngo Sach” (Book on defeating the Wu; Nguyen Trai) II:204
Bintang Timur (periodical) III:426 biographies I:245–246, I:266, I:333, II:28, II:117, II:222, III:260, III:269
The Bird of Time (Naidu) III:311
Birds (Aristophanes) I:21
Birds Singing (Öba) III:330
 Birrell, Jean I:79
The Birthmark (Sholokhov) III:400
The Birth of the Amgunsky Regiment (Fadeyev) III:139
A Birth of Tragedy (Nietzsche) III:324
Bishabriksa (Cattopadhyay) III:81
The Bitten Shoulder (Chrétien de Troyes) I:67
A Bitter Gourd Carved in White Jade (Yu) III:460
Bitter Healing: German Women Writers: 1700–1830 (Blackwell and Zantop) III:316
 Bitton, Erez III:52
 Bjørnson, Bjørnstjerne III:52–53
Black and Blues (Brathwaite) III:58
The Black Book (Pamuk). See Kara Kitap
 “Black Candle” (Mandelstam) III:279
The Black Cliffs (Gunnarsson) III:187
 Black Death I:190
The Black Dockworker (Sembène). See Le Docker noir
The Black Heralds (Vallejo) III:439
The Black Obelisk (Remarque) III:368
Black Orpheus (periodical) III:333
 “Black Orpheus” (Sartre). See “Orphée noir”
The Black Psychiatrist (Nkosi) III:326
The Blacks (Genet) III:164
 “Black Stone on Top of a White Stone” (Vallejo) III:440
The Black Student (periodical). See L’Étudiant Noir
Black victims (Senghor). See Hosties noires
Blades of Grass (Lao She) III:257
 Blair, Dorothy S. III:121
 Blair, Peter Hunter I:41
 Blake, William I:128, III:413
 Blasco Ibáñez, Vicente III:53–54
blason II:177
Blätter für die Kunst (Journal of the Arts) III:165
Die Blechtrommel (The Tin Drum; Grass) III:179–180
Die Blendung (The Tower of Babel; Canetti) III:75
 “The Blessing of a Bear Clansman” I:331
The Blind (Maeterlinck) III:270
Blind Assassin (Atwood) III:32
 Blind Harry II:262
 “The Blinding of Tiresias” (Callimachus) I:59–60
Blindness (Saramago) III:385
Bliss (Carey) III:77
 Blixen-Finecke, Bror, baron III:118
 Blixen-Finecke, Karen Christence Dinesen, baroness. See Dinesen, Isak
The Blockheads (Warren) II:303
 Blok, Aleksandr A. III:279, III:419
Blood and Sand (Blasco). See Sangre y arena
The Blood of Others (Beauvoir) III:43
Blood Red, Sister Rose (Keneally) III:239, III:240
Blood Wedding (García Lorca) III:160
 Bloom, Allan I:238
 Bloom, Harold I:84–85, II:267–268
The Bloody Tenent (Williams) II:306
 “Blow-Up” (Cortázar) III:103
Blow-Up (film) III:103
Blue (Dario) III:111
The Blue Angel (H. Mann). See Professor Unrat
The Blue Bird (Maeterlinck). See Oiseau bleu
Blue Box (Köhler) III:243
The Blue Cat (Hagiwara) III:189
The Blue Guitar (Hasluck) III:195
Blue Journey (Kurahashi) III:247
Blue of Noon (Bataille) III:40
 “Blues” (bpNichol) III:323
Blues of a Sailor (Yu) III:459
 Blue Star Poetry Society III:459
 Blumenfeld-Kosinski, Renate II:225
The Blunderer (Molière) II:191
 Boas, Franz I:299, III:152
A Boat Load of Home Folk (Astley) III:31
 “Boat of Stars” (Li Qingzhao) I:170
 Boccaccio, Giovanni II:22–24
 classicism in II:56
 friends and colleagues of II:22, II:50, II:222
 humanism and II:115
 influence of II:20, II:48, II:71, II:173, II:263
 influences on I:19, I:232
 literary criticism by II:222 literary criticism on I:305, II:23–24, II:182, II:223
 pastorals and II:217
 Renaissance and II:244
 themes of I:190
 translations of II:167
 works by I:14–15, II:51
Bodies of Water (Cliff) III:96
 Boeschstein, Hermann III:28
 Boethius I:50–51
 influence of I:1, I:168
 influences on I:244
 translations of I:11, I:147
 works by I:189
Boethius (Reiss) I:51
 Bohemund of Antioch I:80
 Böhme, Jakob III:379
 Bohn, William III:23
 Boiardo, Matteo Maria
 influence of II:9, II:48
 influences on I:285
 medieval romance and I:258
 works by II:247
 Boileau-Despréaux, Nicolas II:24–25
 Académie française and II:2
 friends and colleagues of II:190
 influence of II:174
 literary criticism on II:277
 works by I:174
 Bolingbroke, Lord II:228
 Bolívar, Simón II:210, III:269
 Böll, Heinrich III:54–55, III:183
 “Bonaparte” (Hölderlin) III:208
Bondage of the Will (Luther) II:166
Bones of the Cuttlefish (Montale) III:301
 Boniface VIII (pope) I:83, I:143, I:144
 Boniface of Montferrat I:319
Bonjour et adieu à la négritude (Hello and Goodbye to Négritude; Dépestre) III:114
La Bonne Chanson (Verlaine) III:443
 Bonnefoy, Yves III:55, III:224
 Bonner, Anthony II:297
Bonolo and the Peach Tree (Ndebele) III:317
 “Bontsche the Silent” (Peretz) III:347
The Book (Adonis) III:8
 Booker, M. Keith III:378
 Booker Prize (England) III:32, III:77, III:97, III:177, III:226, III:311, III:335, III:354, III:376, III:377
 nominees III:306
Booklist (periodical) III:96
Book of Aeneid. See Roman d’Eneas
Book of Affliction (‘Attār) I:26
The Book of Alexander I:258
The Book of Apollonius I:258
Book of Animals (Al-Jāhiz) I:258
The Book of Chilam Balam of Chumayel. See Chilam Balam of Chumayel, Book of
The Book of Chilam Balam of Tizimin. See Chilam Balam of Tizimin, Book of
The Book of Dede Korkut II:26
The Book of Directives and Remarks (Avicenna) I:35
Book of Documents I:74
The Book of Examples (Ibn Khaldūn). See Kitāb al-’Ibar
Book of Excellence and Rhetoric (Al-Jāhiz) I:145

- Book of Exercises* (Seferis) III:393
Book of Feats of Arms and Chivalry (Christine de Pisan) II:224
The Book of Healing (Avicenna) I:35
Book of Her Life (Teresa of Avila) II:285
The Book of Hours and Constellations (Gomringer) III:173
The Book of Images (Rilke) III:370
The Book of Invasions I:200
The Book of Laughter and Forgetting (Kundera) III:245
The Book of Marco Polo (Polo) I:246–248
The Book of Margery Kempe (Kempe) II:135
The Book of Marvels (Polo) I:246–248
A Book of New Zealand Verse: 1923–45 (Curnow, ed.) III:105
Book of Secrets (Attār) I:26
A Book of Showings (Julian of Norwich). See Revelations of Divine Love
Book of Songs I:51–52
 Confucius and I:51, I:52, I:74
 influence of I:253
 literary criticism on I:252
The Book of Songs (Heine) III:201
The Book of Spectacles (Martial) I:186
The Book of the Chilam Balam of Mani. See Chilam Balam of Mani, Book of Book of the City of Ladies (Christine de Pisan) II:224–225
The Book of the Courtier (Castiglione). See The Courtier
Book of the Dead I:52–54, II:289
The Book of the Duchess (Chaucer) I:313, II:50–51
The Book of the Dun Cow I:201
Book of the First Navigation and Discovery of the Indies (Columbus) II:57
Book of the Foundations (Teresa of Avila) II:285
The Book of the Glory of the Kings of Ethopia. See Kebra Nagast Chronicles
The Book of the Hours: The Book of Monastic Life (Rilke) III:369
Book of the Jaguar Priest II:180
Book of the Three Virtues (Christine de Pisan) II:224
The Book of the Treasure (Latini) I:167
Book of the Year Award (Germany) III:16
The Book of Travels (Çelebi) II:46–47
Book on defeating the Wu (Nguyen Trai). See “Binh Ngo Sach”
The Books of Chilam Balam. See Chilam Balam, Books of Boom movement III:123
 Borges, Jorge Guillermo III:55
- Borges, Jorge Luis III:55–56 comparable writers III:242
 forerunners of III:111
 influence of III:103, III:319
 influences on I:322
 magic realism and III:270
 Borgia, Cesare II:155, II:168
 Borgia, Lucrezia II:20
 Borgia family II:168
 Boris Godunov (Pushkin) III:358
 Born of the Storm (Ostrovsky) III:337
 Boscán, Juan II:274
 Bosnian literature III:21
 Bosnian Story (Andric) III:21
 The Bosnian Trilogy (Andric) III:21
 Bossuet, Jacques-Bénigne II:26–27
 Boswell, Alexander II:27
 Boswell, Euphemia II:27
 Boswell, James II:27–28
 Botchan (Natsume) III:314
 Botticelli, Sandro II:182, II:226
 Bouchard, Norma III:130
 Bouchet, André du III:224
 “Boule de Suif” (“Ball of Fat”; Maupassant) III:286
 Boullata, Kamal III:275
 HMS Bounty (ship) II:16
 The Bounty (Walcott) III:448
 Bourbourg, l’abbé. See Brasseur, Charles-Étienne
 Bourges, Clemence de II:145
 Bourges, Michel de III:383
 Les Bouts de bois de Dieu (God’s Bits of Wood; Sembène) III:395
 Bouvard et Pécuchet (Flaubert) III:148
 The Bow and the Lyre (Paz) III:345
 Bowdon, George III:282
 Bower, Kathrin III:33
 “The Bowge of Court” (Skelton) II:272
 Boxer Rebellion III:256
 The Box Man (Abe) III:2
 “The Boy and the Deer” I:299
 Boyhood (Coetzee) III:97
 Boyhood (Tolstoy) III:428
 “Boys and Girls” (Munro) III:305
 Bozena Nemcová’s Fan (Seifert) III:394
 bpNichol. See Nichol, b(arrie) p(hilip)
 Bradford, William II:28–29
 Bradley, Marion Zimmer I:68
 Bradley, Thomas II:61
 Bradstreet, Anne Dudley II:29–30
 Bradstreet, Simon II:29
 Brahmo Samaj III:421
 Bramante, Donato II:186
 A Branch of the Blue Nile (Walcott) III:447
 Brand (Ibsen) III:216
 Brandt, Sebastian I:302, II:30
 “Branwen, Daughter of Llyr” I:201
 Brasch, Charles III:56–57
- Braschi, Giannina III:57–58
 Brasseur, Charles-Étienne II:230, II:239
 Brathwaite, Edward Kamau III:58–59, 288
 Brathwaite, Lawson Edward. See Brathwaite, Edward Kamau
 Braun, Volker III:59, III:451
 Brazilian literature
 Indianism and III:219
 romanticism in III:174
 writers II:6–7, II:100–101, III:14–15, III:17–18, III:152–153, III:174, III:263–264, III:267–268, III:362, III:376
 “Bread, Hashish, and the Moon” (Kabbani) III:231
 Break at Noon (Claudel) III:95
 Break of Day (Colette) III:99
 “Breast-Giver” (Devi) III:116
 The Breasts of Tiresias (Apollinaire). See Les mamelles de Tirésias
 Brébeuf, Jean de, Saint II:124
 Brecht, Bertolt III:60–61
 friends and colleagues of III:44, III:122 influence of III:59, III:75, III:128, III:134, III:153–154, III:247, III:304
 influences on II:132
 literary criticism by III:247
 literary criticism on III:60–61
 works on III:180
 Bredero, Gerbrand II:30–31
 Bremen Literature Prize III:153
 Brennan, Timothy III:378
 Brenner Prize III:365
 Brentano, Catarina Elizabetha Ludovica Magdalena. See Arnim, Bettina von Brentano, Clemens III:27
 Brentano, Peter Anton III:27
 Br’er Rabbit stories I:232
 Bretano, Clemens III:374
 Breton, André III:62–63
 friends and colleagues of III:40, III:78, III:131, III:434
 influence of III:25, III:344, III:362
 influences on III:84
 literary criticism on III:159, III:319
 translations of III:411
 works by III:107
 Brett, Dorothy III:282
 Breve noticia de la provincia de la Campaña de Jesús en Chile 1593–1736 (Olivares) II:210
 Breytenbach, Breyten III:63–64
 Brezhnev, Leonid III:445
 Briand, Aristide III:348
 Bricriu’s Feast I:200

524 Cumulative Index

- The Bridal Canopy* (Agnon) III:8–9
 “The Bride” (Derzhavin) II:72
The Bride of Texas (Škvorecký) III:404
The Bride Price (Emecheta) III:133
The Bridge of Beyond (Schwarz-Bart).
 See Pluie et vent sur Télumée Miracle
The Bridge on the Drina (Andric) III:21
A Brief and True Report of the New Found Land of Virginia (Hariot)
 II:112
A Brief Life (Onetti). See La Vida Breve
Brief Report of the Destruction of the Indians (Las Casas) II:151–152
Bright Sunny Skies (Hao) III:406
 Brillat-Savarin, Jean-Anthelme
 III:86–87
Bring Larks and Heroes (Keneally)
 III:239–240
 Brink, André III:64, III:64–65
 Brinkmann, Rolf Dieter III:65–66
 Bristo (Ferreira) II:94
 British Council short-story competition
 III:334
 British empiricism II:73
British History (Nennius) I:112
Brittannicus (Racine) II:240
 Britten, Benjamin I:203
 Broch, Hermann III:66–67, III:256
 Brod, Max III:232
 Brodsky, Joseph III:351
 Brodsky, Patricia III:370
 Broeschenstein, Hermann III:256
Broken Branches (Leiris) III:260
The Broken Jug (Kleist) II:137
The Broken Nest (Tagore) III:422
The Broken Wing (Naidu) III:310
 Brontë, Charlotte III:369
 Brontë, Emily III:407
The Bronze Horseman (Pushkin)
 III:358
 Brooke, Rupert III:342
 Brophy, Elizabeth II:245
 Brosin, Edith III:49
Brothers (Ungaretti) III:437
The Brothers Karamazov (Dostoyevsky)
 III:124–125
 Brown, Charles Brockden II:31–32
 Brown, Norman O. II:279
 Brown, William II:277
 Browning, Elizabeth Barrett I:175
 Browning, Robert I:147
 Bruce, James I:158
 Bruman, Simone. See Schwarz-Bart,
 Simone
 Brumble, H. David II:31
 Brunelleschi, Filippo II:4
 Brunham, John II:135
 Bruni, Leonardo II:115
Brunizem (Bhatt) III:51
 Bruno, Giordano II:32–33, II:62,
 III:459
 Brunsdale, Mitzi III:436
Brut (Layamon) I:219
 Brutus I:134
Brutus (Cicero) I:70
Brutus (Voltaire) II:298
 Bryusov, Valery III:67, III:344, III:431
 Buber, Martin III:136
 Büchner, Georg III:67–68
 Büchner Prize. See Georg Büchner Prize
 Buck, Pearl S. II:269
Buddenbrooks (T. Mann) III:281
 Buddha I:123
Buddha (Kazantzakis) III:238
 Buddha parables. See Zen parables
 Buddhism. See also Zen Buddhism
 influence of I:38, I:104, I:122,
 I:191, I:195, I:222, I:279, I:291,
 I:325, I:327, I:334, I:335, I:337,
 I:339, II:43, II:152, II:262
 Jataka tales. See Jataka
 Zen parables I:339–340
 Budé, Guillaume II:115
 Budge, E. A. Wallis I:158
 “Bukit China” (Chinese Hill; Lim)
 III:263
 Bukowsky, Vladimir III:18
 Bulgakov, Afanasy III:68
 Bulgakov, Mikhail II:190, III:68–69
Bulin Waishi (Ju-lin wai-shih, The Scholars, Unofficial History of the Literati; Wu Jingzi) II:41, II:310
Bulletin (periodical) III:451
Bullie’s House (Keneally) III:240
 Buloson, Carlos III:383
 Bultmann, Rudolf Karl III:136
Bumi Manusia (Toer) III:427
 Bunbury, Lydia III:443
Bungakkai (Literary World; periodical)
 III:423
 Bungei Award III:455
Bungei Shuto (Literary Capital; periodical) III:198
 Bunin, Ivan III:69–70, III:90
 Bunin, Julian III:70
 Bunina, Anna II:33
 Bunjil I:206
 Bunraku II:33–34, II:52–54, II:131,
 II:281
 Bunyan, John II:212 “Burda” (“Luminous Stars in Praise of the Best of Mankind”; al-Būsīrī) I:55
 Burger, Gottfried August II:274
Burger’s Daughter (Gordimer)
 III:176–177
The Burgomeister of Stilemonde
 (Maeterlinck) III:270
 Burgos-Debray, Elizabeth III:291
 Buri I:204
The Buried Temple (Maeterlinck)
 III:270
 Burk, Else Anna III:131
 Burkart, Erika III:70–71
 Burke, Peter II:296
El burlador de Sevilla (The Seducer of Seville; Don Juan and the Stone Guest;
 Tirso de Molina) II:287–288, II:289,
 III:447
 Burliuk, David III:287
The Burning Green Tree (Oe) III:332
 Burns, Robert II:263
 Burrus I:275, I:276
 Burton, Sir Richard I:9, I:156, I:305,
 I:306
 Busia, Abena III:71
 Būsīrī, al- I:55
Buson the Haiku Poet (Masaoka)
 III:285
 Buson Yosa III:285
Bus Stop (Gao) III:158
 Bustamante Carlos Inca, Calixto II:43
Bustan (The Place of Sweet Scents; Saadī) I:268
 Butler, Samuel II:60
 Butor, Michel III:321, III:387
Das Butt (The Flounder; Grass) III:180
 Byatt, A. S. I:305
By Jove! (Macrone) I:202
 Byng, Sir John II:300
 Byrhtnoth I:218
 Byron, George Gordon, Lord
 friends and colleagues of II:283
 influence of III:261, III:358,
 III:375
 influences on I:6, II:233, II:288
 literary criticism by I:187
 translations of III:70
 Byzantine Empire, collapse of I:190
 Byzantine literature I:15–16
- C
- The Cabal of the Horse Pegasus* (Bruno)
 II:32
 Cabeza de Vaca, Álvaro Núñez II:35–36
 Cabrera, Infante Guillermo III:72–73
 “Cacamatzin Icuic” (“Song by Cacamatzin”; Cacamatzin) II:36
 Cacamatzin of Texcoco II:36
 Caedmon I:42, I:56–57, I:218
 “Caedmon’s Hymn” (Caedmon) I:56,
 I:218
 Caero, Alberto. See Pessoa, Fernando
 Caesar, Julius I:31, I:63, I:57–59
 contemporaries of I:2, I:62, I:92,
 I:130, I:134, I:270, I:320
 family of I:31
 life of I:69, I:177
 literary criticism on I:58–59

- works on I:15, I:41, I:175, I:228, II:298
- Cahier de verdure* (Notebook of Green; Jaccottet) III:224
- Cahier d'un retour au pays natal* (Return to My Native Land; Césaire) III:84, III:317
- Cain, G. See Cabrera, Infante Guillermo
- Cairo trilogy (Mahfouz) III:272
- Caius Marius I:69
- Calcar, Jan Stephan van II:294
- calculus, invention of II:153
- The Calcutta Chromosome* (Ghosh) III:167
- Calderón de la Barca, Pedro II:36–37, II:288, II:289
- Caligula* (Camus) III:74
- Caligula (emperor of Rome) I:234, I:275
- The Call* (periodical). See Der Ruf
- Calligrammes* (Apollinaire) III:24, III:323
- calligraphers II:136
- Callimachus I:59–60
- contemporaries of I:17, I:18
- influence of I:186, I:250, I:257
- translations of I:62
- “The Call of the River Nun” (Okara) III:334
- The Call of the Toad* (Grass) III:181
- Callot, Jacques II:107
- Calvert, Benedict Leonard II:61
- Calvin, John II:37–38
- Counter-Reformation and II:284–285
- literary criticism by II:177
- Reformation and II:244
- Calvino, Italo III:73–74
- Camagüey Gráfico* (periodical) III:184
- Cambodian literature III:455–456
- A Cambodian Odyssey* (Haing) III:456
- Camion* (film) III:127
- Camões Prize (Portugal) III:17
- Camões, Luíz Vaz de II:38–39
- influence of II:39
- influences on II:94
- sonnets and II:274
- Camp, Maxime du III:147
- Campagne in Frankreich —1792* (The Campaign in France in 1792; Goethe) II:102
- Campanella, Tommaso II:39, II:293
- Campbell, Elaine III:17
- Campe de Thiaroye* (film) III:395
- Campion, Edith III:386
- Campos, Alvaro de. See Pessoa, Fernando
- Camus, Albert III:74–75
- comparable authors III:82
- existentialism and III:137
- friends and colleagues of III:389
- influence of III:146, III:272
- literary criticism by III:62
- literary criticism on III:335
- and Theatre of the Absurd III:424–425
- works on III:42
- Canadian Born* (P. Johnson) III:228
- Canadian writers III:31–32, III:112–113, III:200, III:220, III:227–228, III:243, III:274, III:294, III:305–306, III:323, III:334–335, III:373, III:403–404
- Canavaggio, Jean II:48
- Cancer Ward* (Solzhenitsyn) III:408
- The Candidates* (Munford) II:198
- Candide* (Voltaire) II:85, II:154, II:202, II:243, II:298, II:299–300
- Candle* (Akhmadulina) III:10
- Canetti, Elias III:75–76
- Cannes Film Festival III:1, III:238
- Cannon Shot and Glass Beads: Modern Black Writing* (Lamming, ed.) III:254
- The Canon of Medicine* (Avicenna). See al-Qanun fi al-Thibb
- Cansinos-Assens, Rafael III:55
- canso* I:312
- canso-sirventes* I:318
- Cantar de mio Cid* I:72–73, I:97
- Cantares mexicanas* (Mexican Songs; Bierhorst, trans.) II:201–202
- La Cantatrice chauve* (The Bald Soprano; Ionesco) III:219, III:425
- Cantemir, Antiokh II:232
- Cantemir, Dimitrie II:40, II:232
- The Canterbury Tales* (Chaucer)
- influence of II:167, II:262
- influences on I:68, I:232, I:263, I:302, II:91
- literary criticism on I:190, I:305, II:51–52, II:150
- I Canti* (Leopardi) III:260
- Canticle of the Sun* (Francis of Assisi) I:107
- Canto a Caliope* (Cervantes) II:105
- “Canto a Teresa” (Espronceda) III:136
- Canto General* (Neruda) III:319
- Canto novo* (D’Annunzio) III:110
- Cantos* (Pound) I:147
- Cantos para soldados y sones para turistas* (Songs for Soldiers and Sounds for Tourists; N. Guillén) III:184
- “Cant spiritual” (“Spiritual Song”; March) II:172
- canzonette* II:185
- Canzoniere* (Lyric Poems, Rhymes; Petrarch) II:222–223, II:274
- Cao Bi I:60–61
- Cao Cao (Ts’ao Ts’ao) I:264
- Cao Xuequin (Ts’ao Hsieh-ch’in) I:325, II:40–43, III:210
- Cao Yin II:40
- Cao Zhi (Ts’ao Chih) I:60–61
- capa y espada*. See cloak-and-sword plays
- Capécia, Mayotte III:76
- Capellanus, Andreas I:65, I:66
- Cape of Storms* (Brink) III:65
- Capitale de la douleur* (Éluard) III:131
- Capitana* (ship) II:230–231
- Cappa, Benedetta III:285
- Captain Singleton* (Defoe) II:70
- Captains of the Sands* (Amado) III:17
- The Captive* (Proust) III:357
- The Captive Mind* (Milosz) III:293
- Captives* (Plautus) I:240
- captivity narratives II:252–253, II:276–277
- The Captivity of Hans Staden of Hesse* (Staden) II:277
- Capuana, Luigi III:442
- Les Caractères de Théophraste* (The Characters of Theophrastes; La Bruyère) II:145–146
- Caramurú* (Sea Dragon; Santa Ritta Durão) II:100–101
- Carducci, Giosue III:109
- Carew, Thomas II:78
- Carey, Peter III:76–78
- Caribbean Carnivals* (video) III:253
- Caribbean Eye* videos (Laird) III:253
- Caribbean literature. See also Cuban literature; Jamaican literature
- postcolonialism in III:353
- writers III:16–17, III:49, III:58, III:76, III:84, III:100–101, III:114, III:135, III:241, III:253, III:254–255, III:288–289, III:311–312, III:392, III:446–447
- Caribbean Revolutions and Revolutionary Theory: an Assessment of Cuba, Nicaragua and Grenada* (Meeks) III:288
- “Caribbean Voices” series (BBC) III:254
- Caribbean Writer* III:253
- Carlos Bulosan and the Imagination of the Class Struggle* (San Juan) III:383
- Carlos Trouyat Prize in Letters III:79
- Carlyle, Thomas II:17
- Carmelites, Barefoot. See Barefoot Carmelites
- “Carmen Campidictoris” (“Song of the Campeador”) I:72
- Carmen Saeculare* (Horace) I:135
- Carmi, T. I:138
- The Carnal Prayer Mat* (Li Yu). See Jou pu tuan
- Carroll, Lewis III:424

526 Cumulative Index

- carpe diem I:61–62, I:220, I:298, II:248, II:263
 “Carpe Diem” (Horace) I:135
 Carpentier, Alejo III:78–79, III:270–271
 Carrier, Constance I:250
The Carrier Pigeon (Seifert) III:394
 Carrío de la Vandra, Alonso II:43–44
 Carroll, Evan II:308
Cartas de relación (Cortés) II:64
Cartas desde mi celda (Letters from My Cell; Bécquer) III:46–47
Cartea cu Jucarii (Arghezi) III:27
 Cartesian doubt II:73
cartharsis II:289
 Carus, Titus Lucretius. See Lucretius
 Carver, John II:29
 Carver, Jonathan II:44
 Cary, Joyce III:6
 Casa de las Américas poetry competition (Cuba) III:58
Casa de las Américas (periodical) III:254
 Casaubon, Isaac I:302
Cases of Conscience Concerning Evil Spirits (Mather) II:179–180
 The Cask III:401
Cassandra (Wolf) III:451
 Cassius Dio I:308
 Castel, Étienne de II:224
 Castellanos, Juan de II:45
 Castellanos, Rosario III:79
 Castelvetro, Ludovico II:292
 Castiglione, Baldessare II:45–46
 censorship of II:282
 influence of II:71
 influences on II:21
 Renaissance and II:244
The Castle (Kafka) III:48, III:173, III:233
The Castle of Perseverance II:67
The Castle of Pictures and Other Stories (Sand) III:384
 Castro, Fidel III:26, III:79
 Castro, Guillén de I:72
 Castro, Rosalía de III:79–80, III:268
 Catalan literature II:172
 Catalina de Palacios II:48
Cat and Mouse (Grass). See Katz und Maus
Catastrophes (Breytenbach) III:63–64
Cat Country (Lao She) III:257
 Cate, Curtis III:118 Categories (Aristotle) I:248
 catharsis I:23
La Cathédrale (The Cathedral; Huysmans) III:213–214
 Catherine de Romanet II:240
 Catherine II (empress of Russia). See Catherine the Great Catherine the Great II:46 associates of II:77
 censorship by II:242 life and reign of II:71, II:160
 works on II:72, II:105
 Catholic Church
 and censorship II:73
 Index of Prohibited Books II:62, II:71, II:77, II:169, III:167–168, III:238
 Inquisition II:32–33, II:71, II:99
 conquistadores and II:184 converts to II:130, II:250, II:261, III:26, III:39, III:40, III:95, III:122, III:436, III:443
 critics of II:165–166, II:271
 excommunications by II:93
 influence of III:96
 and science II:62, II:83
 views on II:88, III:369
 works on II:76, II:78, II:89, II:116, II:311, III:61, III:148
 Catiline, Lucius I:69, I:70–71, I:270 Cato
 influence of II:178
 literary criticism on I:174
 works on I:58, I:271
Catone in Utica (Metastasio) II:185
 Cato the Elder I:96
The Cattle Raid of Cooley I:200
 Cattopadhyay, Bankim-Chandra III:80–81, III:88
 Catullus, Gaius Valerius I:62–63
 influence of I:63, I:186, II:71, II:223
 influences on I:60, I:250
 literary criticism on I:249
 translations of II:177
The Caucasian Chalk Circle (Brecht) III:61
Cause, Principle, and the One (Bruno) II:32
 Cavafy, Constantine P. III:81
 Cavalcanti, Guido I:85
 cavalier poets, themes of I:62
Cavalleria Rustica (Rustic Chivalry; Verga) III:441
Cavalleria Rusticana (Mascagni) III:441
 Cawley, A. C. II:90
 Caxton, Thomas II:171
 Caxton, William I:190, I:263
 Cech, Annemarie III:54
 Cela, Camilo José III:82
 influences on III:39
 objectivismo and III:331
 Celan, Paul III:82–83
 friends and colleagues of III:179
 influence of III:33
 Çelebi, Evliya II:46–47
 Celebonovic, Marko III:351
The Celestial Hierarchy (Dionysius the Areopagite) I:249
 Celestine V (pope) I:143
 Céline, Louis-Ferdinand III:83
 Celtic mythology I:199–202, I:257
The Cenci (Artaud) III:30
Cénie (Graffigny) II:107 censorship and Catholic Church II:73
 Index of Prohibited Books II:62, II:71, II:77, II:169, III:167–168, III:238
 Inquisition II:32–33, II:71, II:99
 in China II:159, III:47, III:406, III:426 in Cuba III:72
 in Czechoslovakia III:245, III:394, III:403–404 in East Germany III:285, III:304
 in England II:69, II:188, II:306, II:311 in France II:11, II:21, II:83, II:85, II:251, II:258–259, III:30, III:42, III:310, III:412, III:462 in Germany II:257, III:60, III:196, III:201 in India III:356
 in Indonesia III:426
 in Italy II:62, II:73, II:282, III:285, III:302
 in Kenya III:322
 by Nazis III:32, III:60, III:66, III:75, III:138, III:152, III:201, III:203, III:230, III:244, III:256, III:348, III:368, III:371–372 in Poland III:173, III:293, III:294 in Russia II:46, II:142, II:242, II:290, III:130, III:172, III:202, III:261, III:358, III:461 in South Africa III:65, III:246, III:249 in Soviet Union III:11–12, III:18, III:36, III:69, III:279, III:341–342, III:398–399, III:405, III:408, III:420, III:432, III:444–445, III:457, III:461 in Spain II:164, II:220, III:29
 works on II:85, III:61
 “The Century of Louis the Great” (Perrault) II:2
 Cepeda y Ahumada, Teresa de II:284
Ce qui fut sans lumière (What Was Without Light; Bonnefoy) III:55
 Ceres I:203
 Cerquolini, Bernard I:283
 Cervantes Prize III:155, III:184, III:335
 Cervantes Saavedra, Miguel de II:47–50

- influence of II:49–50, II:161,
II:174–175, III:340
influences on I:302, I:313, II:8,
II:125
literary criticism by II:105
literary criticism on II:48–50,
II:125, II:280
Renaissance and II:244
romance and II:247
themes of I:66
- Césaire, Aimé III:84–85
friends and colleagues of III:396
influence of III:85, III:120
négritude and III:317–318, III:396
postcolonialism of III:353
- Cesare Pavese (O’Healy) III:343
- Cevdet Bey and His Sons (Pamuk)
III:339
- Cézanne, Paul III:462
- Chaerephon I:280–281
- Chagall, Mark II:149
- The Chairs* (Ionesco) III:219–220
- Chamberlain, B. H. I:160
- Chambers, Helen III:149
- Chambers Cyclopedia II:76
- Chamoiseau, Patrick III:84–85,
III:85–86
- Champion, Anne-Toinette II:76
- champu* I:231
- Chandragupta II I:153, I:155
- Chang Heng. See Zhang Heng
- Le Chanson de Roland (Song of Roland)*
I:283–285
content and themes of I:65, I:80
as epic I:97
influence of I:72, I:107, I:285, II:9,
II:233, II:247
literary criticism on I:73, I:283,
I:284–285
medieval romance and I:190,
I:257–258
- chansons de geste*
characteristics of I:65, I:80
influence of I:107
origins of I:190
- chantefable* I:28
- The Chant of Jimmie Blacksmith*
(Keneally) III:240
- Les Chants de Maldoror* (Lautréamont)
III:258
- Chants d’ombre (Songs of shadow;*
Senghor) III:396
- Chants du crépuscule (Twilight Songs;* Hugo) III:212
- Chaos theory III:355
- Chaplin, Charlie II:60, II:92, III:28,
III:44, III:341
- Chapman, George I:99, I:185, II:177
- The Chapters of Coming Forth by Day.*
See Book of the Dead
- Char, René III:86
- Characters* (Theophrastus) I:301–302
- The Characters of Theophrastes* (La Bruyère). See Les Caractères de Théophraste
- Charcot, Jean-Martin III:151
- Charlemagne (emperor of the West)
I:65, I:80, I:189, I:283–285, II:9, II:282
- Charles d’Orléans. See Orléans,
Charles, duc d’
- Charles I (king of England)
English Civil War and II:188 execution of II:219
family of II:27
- Charles I (king of Spain) II:64. See also
Charles V (Holy Roman Emperor)
- Charles II (king of England)
II:218–219
- Charles III (king of Spain) II:210,
II:296
- Charles IV (Holy Roman Emperor)
II:294
- Charles IX (king of France) II:248
- Charles V (Holy Roman Emperor)
II:64, II:164, II:238, II:294. See also Charles I (king of Spain)
- Charles VI (Holy Roman Emperor)
II:184, II:210, II:224
- Charles XII (king of Sweden) II:298
- Charles of Anjou I:167
- Charlotte: A Tale of Truth* (Rowson)
II:253
- Charlotte Temple* (Rowson) II:253
- Charmides* (Plato) I:238
- The Charterhouse of Parma* (Stendahl).
See La Chartreuse de Parme
- La Chartreuse de Parme (The* Charterhouse of Parma; Stendahl)
III:414–415
- Chassaigne, Françoise de la II:192
- Chateaubriand, François-Auguste-René, vicomte de III:86–87
influence of III:212, III:357 literary criticism by II:17, II:44
romanticism in III:375
- Châtelet, Madame du II:298
- Chatterjee, Upamanyu III:87–88
- Chatterji, Bankim Chandra. See
Cattopadhyay, Bankim-Chandra
- Chatterji, Sarat Chandra III:88–89,
III:421
- Chatterton* (Vigny) III:443–444
- Chattoopadhyay, Sarat Chandra. See
Chatterji, Sarat Chandra
- Chauan, Pradyumna S. III:377
- Chaucer, Geoffrey II:50–52
contemporaries of I:39, II:150,
II:218
friends and colleagues of II:106
- influence of I:305, II:113, II:167,
II:262, II:263
influences on I:68, I:229, I:232,
I:261, I:263, I:302, I:313, I:322,
II:91, II:97, II:223, II:271
literary criticism by II:106
literary criticism on I:305,
II:51–52, II:150, II:167
themes of I:66, I:190
works by I:261
- Chausseen Chausseen (Highways* Highways; Huchel) III:211
- Chaves, Jonathan II:312
- The Cheapest Nights* (Idris). See Arjhas
layali
- The Cheat* (Simon). See Le tricheur
- Check Teck Foo I:290
- Cheke, John II:115
- Chekhov, Anton III:89–90
friends and colleagues of III:70
influence of III:178, III:265
influences on III:148, III:433
literary criticism on III:90
realism in III:366
- Cheluvi* (Karnad) III:235
- Chemin d’école (School Days;*
Chamoiseau) III:85–86
- Chen, Jack III:91
- Chen Duxiu III:299
- Cheng, Vincent II:64
- Chen Ming III:119–120
- Chen Yuan-tsung III:91
- Chen Yun (Ch’en Yün) II:268–269
- Chéri* (Colette) III:99
- Chernyshevsky, Nikolay III:91–92
- Cherokee
creation myths I:78
folktales I:216–217
- The Cherry Orchard* (Chekhov) III:90
- Chester cycle II:66
- Chesterton, G. K. II:52
- The Chest of Gold* (Ariosto) II:9
- Chevalier d’Ordre des Arts et des Lettres III:159
- “La Chevelure” (“The Head of Hair”; Baudelaire) III:41
- “Chevrefoil” (“Honeysuckle”; Marie de France) I:186, I:310
- Chiang Su-Hui II:269
- Chiapas Prize III:79
- Chibcha tribe II:124
- Chi-Chen Wang II:41
- Chichi No Shuen Nikki (Diary of My* Father’s Last Days; Kobayashi Issa)
II:139
- Chieko’s Sky* (Takamura) III:423
- Le Chienfant (The Bark Tree; Queneau)*
III:363
- Chikamatsu Hanji II:34

528 Cumulative Index

- Chikamatsu Monzaemon II:34,
II:52–54, II:131–132
Chilam Balam, Books of II:25–26,
II:54–55
Chilam Balam of Chumayel, Book of
II:25–26
Chilam Balam of Mani, Book of
 II:54–55
Chilam Balam of Tizimin, Book of
 II:54
Childhood (Chamoiseau). See Antan d'enfance
Childhood (Sarraute) III:387
Childhood (Tolstoy) III:428
The Childhood of Lovers (Pasternak)
 III:341
Child of All Nations (Toer) III:427
Child of Fortune (Tsushima) III:431
Child of God (Dağlarca) III:108
The Child of Pleasure (D'Annunzio)
 III:110
Child of War, Woman of Peace (Hayslip)
 III:199
 children drama for III:58, III:242 film for III:29
 letters for III:51
 literature for III:15, III:27, III:52,
 III:115, III:116, III:135, III:186,
 III:198, III:251, III:270, III:279,
 III:302, III:327, III:329, III:333,
 III:365, III:380–381, III:409,
 III:434, III:460
 in romanticism III:374
 TV programs for III:323
Children and Fools (Fried) III:153
Children of Heracles (Euripides) I:102
 Children of Lir I:200
 “Children of Manuhiki, Arise”
 (Kauraka) III:237
Children of the Alley (Mahfouz) III:273
The Children of the Sabbath (Hébert).
 See Les Enfants du du Sabbat
Children of the Soil (Sienkiewicz)
 III:401
Children of the Sun (Gorky) III:178
 Children of Tuirenn I:200 Children's and Household Tales (Grimm and Grimm) III:181–182
 “Child's Play” (Higuchi) III:204
Child's Play (Malouf) III:277
 Chilean literature II:210
 Chilean National Prize for Literature
 III:123
 Chilean writers III:122–123, III:296,
 III:318–319
Chills (Akhmadulina) III:10
The Chimeras (Nerval) III:320
chimiky'ana'kowa I:299
- China
 censorship in II:159, III:47,
 III:406, III:426
 Cultural Revolution in III:47,
 III:52, III:91, III:119, III:158,
 III:256, III:300, III:406, III:425
China (periodical) III:119, III:120
China in Her Prime (Tian) III:426
China Reconstructs (periodical) III:158
 Chin Ching-mai III:406
 Chinese literature
 magic realism in III:300 modernism in III:47, III:158,
 III:299–300, III:366
 postmodernism in III:300
 realism in III:366–367
 socialist realism in III:405–406 symbolism in III:300
 works
 through 13th century
 I:51–52, I:252–253
 14th through 18th centuries
 II:125–126
 writers
 through 13th century
 I:37–38, I:60–61, I:73–75,
 I:104–105, I:111–112,
 I:121–123, I:164–166,
 I:168–172, I:226–227,
 I:254–255, I:264, I:289–292,
 I:297, I:324–327, I:334–335,
 I:337–338, I:340
 14th through 18th centuries
 II:40–43, II:158–159,
 II:164–165, II:268–269,
 II:269–270, II:281–282,
 II:307–310, II:310, II:312
 19th and 20th centuries
 III:34, III:47, III:51–52,
 III:91, III:119–120, III:144,
 III:158–159, III:209–210,
 III:210–211, III:256–257,
 III:264, III:265–266,
 III:297–298, III:425–426,
 III:459–460
 Chinese Writers Association III:158,
 III:256, III:297, III:425
 Chinook myths and tales I:63–64
Chin Ping Mei I:325
Chinsa II:152
chin-shih. See jinshi
Chiotki (Akhmatova) III:11
Chippewa. See Ojibway myths and legends chivalry I:64–66
 and Arthurian romance I:65, I:67
 Crusades and I:80
 and Holy Grail I:130
- influence of I:107, I:116,
 I:124–125, I:269, I:329, II:270,
 II:284
 in Middle Ages I:189
 origins of I:257
 practitioners of II:171
 Renaissance adaptations of II:45 troubadour songs and I:146
 works on I:112, I:147, I:212, I:260,
 I:285, I:318, II:271
The Choephoroi (Aeschylus) I:5
Choice of the Elect (Giraudoux) III:169
Choirs (Arghezi) III:26–27
 “Cholera” (Mala'ika) III:274–275
 Cholmondeley Award for Poetry III:51,
 III:105
 Chong Hasang II:130
 Chongjo (king of Korea) II:130
 Chong Zhen (Ch'ung-chen; emperor of China) II:141
chopin II:126
Choon Huang Jun II:55
 “Choose” (Kabbani) III:231
 Chopin, Frédéric III:383
 Chopinel, Jean. See Jean de Meun
 Chrétien de Troyes I:67–69
 influence of I:68, I:115, I:124,
 I:131, I:329, II:171
 influences on I:201, I:311
 and medieval romance I:190,
 I:258
 works by I:65–66, I:130–131,
 II:271
Christ and Satan I:217
The Christian Faith (Ruusbroec) II:255
 Christiani, Johann Rudolph III:146
 Christianity. See also saints converts to I:29, I:30–31, II:181,
 II:209
 critics of I:248
 Crusades and I:79–81
 in Enlightenment II:138
 existentialism and III:136
 Holy Grail and I:130
 influence of I:65, I:124,
 II:128–129, II:135–136, III:9–10
 influences on I:249
 Middle Ages and I:189
 modern view of III:298
 in Roman Empire I:243 spread of I:79, I:86, I:109, I:152,
 I:157
 works on II:216, II:218, III:324,
 III:325
 Christian literature, allegory in II:6
The Christian Philosopher (Mather)
 II:178, II:179
 Christian VIII (king of Denmark)
 III:20

- Christina (queen of Sweden) II:72
 Christine de Pisan. See Pisan, Christine de
 "A Christmas Cradle" (Lope de Vega) II:163
Christ on the Mount of Olives (Nerval) III:319–320
 Christophe, Henri (king of northern Haiti) III:78
Chronicle (Apollodorus) I:17
Chronicle (Jean de Joinville) I:80
Chronicle of a Death Foretold (García Márquez) III:162
Chronicle of the Battle of Ichinotani II:132
Chronicle of the Romanians, Moldavians, and Vlachs (Cantemir) II:40 Chronicle of the Seven Sorrows (Chamoiseau). See Chronique des sept misères
Chronicles (Froissart) II:97
Chronique des sept misères (Chronicle of the Seven Sorrows; Chamoiseau) III:85, III:86 chuan-chi. See zhanji
ch'uan-ch' I. See chuanqi
chuanqi (tales of wonder) 136
 Chubb, Thomas Caldecot I:14–15
 Chudakov, Aleksandar III:90
Ch'u Elegies. See Qu Elegies
 Chughtai, Ismat III:92
Chung-cheng hsiao-tzu lien-huan chien (The Repeated Admonition of an Upright Devoted Son; Luo Guanzhong) II:164–165
Chun Hyang (film) II:55
The Church (Hus). See De Ecclesia
Church on the Mountain (Gunnarsson) III:187 Ch'usa. See Kim Jung Hee
ch'usach'e II:136
Chushingura (The 47 Ronin; Takeda, Miyoshi, and Namiki) II:131, II:281
La Chute (The Fall; Camus) III:75
La Chute d'un Ange (Lamartine). See An Angel's Fall
 Ch'ü Yu. See Qu You ci (tz'u; poetry) I:171, I:226, I:291, I:327 Cicero, Marcus Tullius I:69–71
 contemporaries of I:130, I:299
 influence of I:29, I:30, I:167, I:242, I:293, II:20, II:56, II:62, II:97, II:115, II:221, II:294, III:94
 influences on I:23, I:101, I:302
 literary criticism by I:125
 literary criticism on I:12
 opinions expressed by I:173
 translations of I:167
 works on I:177, I:245
Le Cid (Corneille) I:72, II:2, II:63–64, II:202
 Cid, El I:71–73, I:190, II:63
 Cid Campeador. See Cid, El
 "Cigarettes" (Mishima) III:295
Cikectabea de Poemas (Neto) III:320
Cimitrul Buna-Vestire (Arghezi) III:27
 "Cinderella" (Grimm and Grimm) III:182
 "Cinderella" (Perrault) II:221
Cinna (Corneille) II:64
Cinq-Mars (Vigny) III:443
 "Il Cinque Maggio" (Manzoni) III:284
Cioso (Ferreira) II:94
The Circle Game (Atwood) III:32
The Circle of Reason (Ghosh) III:166
Circulo (Ibn al-Khatib) II:117
The Cistern (Seferis). See E Sterma
Citizen Kane (film) III:154
The City and the House (Ginzburg) III:168
The City in Tears (Seifert) III:394
City of God (Augustine) I:30, I:31
City of Kings (Castellanos) III:79
City of Night (Rechy) I:233
The City of the Sun (Campanella) II:39, II:293
 City Theater of Leipzig III:59
Civilization and Its Discontents (Freud) III:152
 Civil Rights movement III:3, III:353
Civil War (Lucan). See Pharsalia
 Cixous, Hélène III:92–94, III:143, III:264
Claiming an Identity They Taught Me to Despise (Cliff) III:95
Claire Lenoire (Villiers) III:444
 Clare, Monica III:3
 Clare of Assisi, Saint I:107
 "Clare Savage as a Crossroads Character" (Cliff) III:95
Clarimonde (Gautier). See La Mort amoureuse
Clarissa (Richardson) I:66, II:207, II:245–246
 Clarke, Howard W. I:133–134 classical epics I:97 classicism II:55–56, III:94
 French. See neoclassicism humanism and II:56, II:115
 influence of II:277, III:36
 practitioners of II:226, III:208, III:224 Renaissance and II:244, III:93–94
 v. romanticism III:212
 Claudel, Paul III:95
 friends and colleagues of III:348
 influences on III:419
Claude's Confession (Zola) La Confession de Claude
Claudine novels (Colette) III:99
 Claudius (emperor of Rome)
 contemporaries of I:234
 influence of II:50
 influences on I:172
 reign of I:275
 works on I:294
 Clayton, Stephen III:3
Cleanness. See Purity (Pearl poet)
Clear Light of Day (Desai) III:115
Clélie (Scudéry) II:264
 Clemens-Brentano Prize III:243
 Clement of Alexandria I:174
 Clement VII (pope) II:7
 Cleon of Athens I:20, I:308
 Cleopatra I:92
 "Cliff" (Ishigaki) III:223
 Cliff, Michelle III:95–96
 Clifford, James II:280
 Cligés (Chrétien de Troyes) I:68
 Clingman, Stephen III:177
The Cloak (Naubert). See Der Kurze Mantel cloak-and-sword plays (capa y espada) II:162
Close Sesame (Farrah) III:142
 "A Cloud in Trousers" (Mayakovsky) III:287
 "The Cloud Messenger" (Kalidasa). See "Megha Duuta"
The Cloud of Unknowing II:56–57, II:129
Clouds (Aristophanes) I:20, I:282
Clovek Zahrada Sirá (Man: A Broad Garden; Kundera) III:245
The Clown (Böll). See Ansichten eines Clowns
The Coach, or the Debate on Love (Marguerite de Navarre). See La Coche, ou le Debat sur l'Amour
The Coast of Utopia (Stoppard) III:202
La Coche, ou le Debat sur l'Amour (The Coach, or the Debate on Love; Marguerite de Navarre) II:173
 "The Cock and the Pearl" (Phaedrus) I:235
 Cocteau, Jean III:96–97
 friends and colleagues of III:164, III:389, III:439
 influence of III:22, III:103
Codicil of Jean de Meun (Jean de Meun) I:147
 Coetzee, Jacobus III:97
 Coetzee, J(ohn) M. III:97–98
 literary criticism by III:64, III:250
 literary criticism on III:64
Coffee Mill (Krylov) II:142

530 Cumulative Index

- Coffin Texts I:53
Cognitive Space and Patterns of Deceit in La Fontaine's Contes (Grisé) II:148
 Cohen, Abraham I:295–296
A Coin in Nine Hands (Yourcenar). See Denier du rêve
 Colby, William III:141
 “Cold Is the North” (Li He) I:169
Cold Nights (Ba Jin) III:34
 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor influences on I:6, I:306, II:17, II:84, II:296
 literary criticism by II:44
 Colet, Louise III:147
 Colette III:98–99, III:145
 Colima Award for Best Novel (Mexico) III:16
Collected Poems (Feng Zhi) III:144
Collected Stories, 1935–1963 (Sargeson) III:386
The Collected Works of Billy the Kid (Ondaatje) III:334
Collection of Best Secular and Folk Songs (Dmitriev) II:77
Collection of Old and New Japanese Poems. See Kokinshu
A Collection of Plays and Poems, by the Late Colonel Robert Munford (Munford) II:198
The Collectors of Treasures (Head) III:200
 Collège de Sociologie III:260
The Colliget (Averroës) I:33
 Collin, Jonas III:20
 Collymore, Frank III:100, III:254, III:446
La Colmena (The Hive); Cela III:82, III:331
Colombe (Anouilh) III:22
 Colombo, Christoforo. See Columbus, Christopher Colón, Cristóbal. See Columbus, Christopher
Colonel Jack (Defoe) II:70 colonialism and exploration. See also postcolonialism in Africa II:246
 in Australia II:284, II:304 impact on Native Americans II:6, II:35, II:36, II:58, II:151–152 in India II:246
 and Négritude III:120 in North America II:17, II:35–36, II:44, II:45, II:57–58, II:112, II:273, II:306 in South and Central America II:6, II:43–44, II:57–58, II:64–65, II:74, II:124–125, II:159, II:164, II:180, II:184, II:203–204, II:210, II:230, II:235, II:249, II:295 in South Pacific II:230–231
 views on III:142
 works on III:84, III:85, III:97–98, III:241, III:290, III:316–317, III:318, III:321–322, III:332–333, III:389, III:395, III:396, III:410, III:460
Colonialism and Neo-Colonialism (Sartre) III:389
The Colonizer and the Colonized (Memmi) III:290
 Colonna, Vittoria II:187
A Color for Solitude (Bhatt) III:51
The Color of Summer (Arenas) III:26
 “Colours” (Tanikawa) III:423
 Coltraine, John III:288
 “Columbia, Columbia, to Glory Arise” (Dwight) II:79
 Columbus, Christopher II:57–58
 influence of II:295, II:302
 influences on I:247
 works on II:152, III:269
The Column (periodical). See Die Kolonne
 “Come, Africa” (Faiz) III:140
comedia II:161–162
 Comédie-Française II:190, II:191, II:240
La Comédie humaine (The Human Comedy); Balzac III:38, III:366
The Comedy of Bristo (Ferreira) II:94
The Comedy of Death (Gautier) III:163
The Comedy of Errors (Shakespeare) I:240, II:266
 comedy of manners II:58–59, II:254
Comedy of the Florentine Nuns (Boccaccio) II:23
 Comenius, Johann Amos II:59–60
Comento de’ miei sonetti (Comment on My Sonnets; Medici) II:182
Comical Mystery (Fo) III:148
Coming, Coming Home: Conversations II (Lamming) III:255
 “The Coming Back of the Assassinated Poet” (Alberti) III:13
Coming through Slaughter (Ondaatje) III:334
 “Coming to Writing” (Cixous) III:93–94 commedia dell’arte II:60, II:127
commedia erudita II:60
Commentaries on the Attic Orators (Dionysius of Halicarnassus) I:93
Commentary on Lucius Annaeus Seneca’s Two Books on Clemency (Calvin) II:37
Commentary on Romans by Philipp Melanchthon (Melanchthon) II:183
Commentary on the Civil War (Caesar) I:58, I:59
Commentary on the Inca (La Vega) I:199
Commentary on the Timaeus (Proclus) I:249
Commentary on the War in Gaul (Caesar). See De Bello Gallico
Comment on My Sonnets (Medici). See Comento de’ miei sonetti
 Committee of Peasant Unity (CUC) III:290–291
 Commodus, Emperor I:110
Common Sense (Paine) II:212–214
 Commonwealth Literary Fund Awards III:239
 Commonwealth Poetry Prize III:51, III:105, III:263, III:334, III:398 Commonwealth Writers Prize III:77, III:147, III:166, III:297 communism, works on III:304, III:408
 Communist and socialist authors III:1–2, III:25, III:44, III:60–61, III:91–92, III:119–120, III:130, III:140, III:158–159, III:178–179, III:204–205, III:228–229, III:241–242, III:247, III:256–257, III:265–266, III:280, III:287–288, III:288–289, III:297–298, III:336, III:346–347, III:356, III:367, III:398–399, III:400, III:425–426, III:451, III:454–455 Communist Party
 enemies of III:62
 members of III:2, III:13, III:25, III:44, III:59, III:60, III:84, III:91, III:111, III:119, III:127, III:131, III:143, III:245, III:287, III:351, III:361, III:384, III:395, III:400, III:425, III:426, III:434, III:440 persecution of in United States III:281
 supporters of III:43, III:388
 Companion of the Order of Canada III:112
Companions of the Day and Night (Harris) III:193
Companion to Education (periodical) II:105
Compassion (Pérez Galdós) III:347
 La Compiuta Donzella. See Donzella, Compiuta
A Complete Account of the Settlement at Port Jackson (Tench) II:284
The Complete Perfectionist (Jiménez) III:227
Complete Poems (Olmedo). See Poésias completas
Complete Sonnets (Quental) III:363
The Complete Works of Louise Labé of Lyon (Labé) II:144–145 composers III:206

- Comus* (Milton) II:188
 "Concepts of the Caribbean"
 (Lamming) III:255
Concerning the Angels (Alberti) III:13
Concerning the Origin and Location of the Germans (Tacitus) I:293
Concerning the Ruin of Britain (Gildas)
 I:112
Concerning the System of the Mohammedan Religion (Cantemir)
 II:40
 Conchobar Mac Nessa (king of Ulster)
 I:200
Conclusive Evidence (Nabokov) III:309
 Concolorcorvo II:43
Concord (Kochanowski) II:140 concrete movement III:173, III:323
 Condé, duc de II:145
 Condé, Maryse III:100–101
 Condé, prince de II:190
El condenado por desconfiado (The Doubted Damned; Tirso de Molina)
 II:287
 Condillac II:76
Le Con d'Irène (Aragon) III:25
 Condorcet, Antoine-Nicolas de
 II:83
The Conference of the Birds (Attâr)
 I:25–26
Confessionario (Regulations for the Confessors of Spaniards; Las Casas)
 II:152
Confessio Amantis (Lover's Confession; Gower) I:261, II:106–107
La Confession de Claude (Claude's Confession; Zola) III:462
La Confession d'un enfant du siècle (Confessions of a Child of the Century;
 Musset) III:308
Confessions (Augustine) I:29, I:30–31,
 II:222
Confessions (Rousseau) II:251, III:375
Confessions of a Child of the Century
 (Musset). See La Confession d'un enfant du siècle
Confessions of a Hooligan (Yesenin)
 III:457
Confessions of Amant (Gower) II:51
Confessions of a Mask (Mishima)
 III:295
Confessions of Felix Krull (T. Mann)
 III:282
Confessions of Zeno (Svevo). *See La
 Coscienza di Zeno*
 Confiant, Raphaël III:84–85, III:353
 Confucianism
 critics of III:299
 influence of II:43, II:152, II:264,
 III:210, III:265
 works on III:303
 Confucius I:73–75
Book of Songs and I:51, I:52, I:74
 contemporaries of I:165
 family of II:141
 influence of I:38, I:74, I:104, I:122,
 I:171, I:297
 philosophy of I:74–75
 "A Congratulatory Ode on the Occasion of the Feast of Sacrifices" (al-Mutanabbi) I:196
 Congress of South African Writers
 III:275
 Congreve, William II:59
Conics (Euclid) I:101
 Conjuração Mineira II:100
 Connery, Sean III:129
conocimientos de los Tiempos (Koenig and Peralta) II:220
The Conquerors (Malraux) III:278
The Conquest of Canaan (Dwight) II:79 Conquest of Constantinople (Robert of Clari) I:80
The Conquest of Gaul (Caesar). *See De
 Bello Gallico*
The Conquest of Istanbul (Dağlarca)
 III:108
The Conquest of New Granada (Jiménez de Quesada) II:124–125 Conquest of the West Indies (López de Gómara) II:164
La Conquête de Constantinople
 (Villehardouin) I:319
 Conrad, Joseph III:73, III:311, III:381
The Conscious Lovers (Steele) I:300
Conservateur Littéraire (periodical)
 III:212
Considerations on the Causes of the Greatness of the Romans and Their Decline (Montesquieu) II:194
Considerations on the Discourses of Machiavelli (Guicciardini) II:108
Considerations sur la Révolution Française (Thoughts on the French Revolution; Staël) III:411
The Consolation of Philosophy
 (Boethius). See De consolazione philosophiae
The Conspiracy of Catiline (Sallust)
 I:270–271
 Constance, Gertrud Anna III:153
 Constant, Benjamin III:412
 Constant de Rebecque, Benjamin
III:102
 Constantia. See Murray, Judith Sargent
 Constantine (prince of Byzantium)
 I:15–16
 Constitution, U.S.
 influences on II:194, II:293
 supporters of II:75
 Constitutional Convention, U.S. II:96
The Constitution of the Lacedaemonians
 (Xenophon) I:333
The Constraint of What Is Not Compulsory (Al-Ma'rri) I:181
Contares Mexicanos (Mexican Songs)
 I:209
Il Conte de Carmagnola (Manzoni)
 III:284
 "Un conte de la nuit" (Rabéarivelo)
 III:364
conte moral II:120
 "Contemplations" (Bradstreet) II:30
 The Contemporaneous III:429–430
The Contemporary (periodical) III:91
Contemporary Novelists (Rowland)
 III:112–113
Contes à Ninon (Stories for Ninon; Zola)
 III:462
Contes de ma Mère l'Oye (Tales of Mother Goose; Perrault) II:221
Contes d'Espagne et d'Italie (Musset)
 III:308
Contes et nouvelles en vers (Tales and Novels in Verse; La Fontaine) II:148
 Conti, prince de II:190
 Continental Congress, delegates to
 II:95, II:122
 "Continuation" (Nortje) III:327
*Continuation of the History of Aufidius
 Bassas* (Pliny the Elder) I:241
Contra academicos (Against the Skeptics; Augustine) I:29
Contra Arianos liber unus (A Work Against Arians; Fulgentius) I:109
Contradictions, Oppositions and Denials in the Life of the Mind (Pascal) II:217
Contrasts (Allfrey) III:17
Contre Sainte-Beuve (Proust) III:357
Conventions II:217
Conversation for the Freemasons
 (Lessing) II:158
Conversation in a Train, and Other Critical Writings (Sargeson) III:386
Conversations at Curlow Creek (Malouf)
 III:277
Conversations with Indian Poets (Souza)
 III:409
Conversation with a Dinosaur (Kirsch).
See Gespräch mit dem Saurier
The Conversion of St. Paul II:67 conversion plays II:67
Convivio (Banquet; Dante) I:83
 Cook, Ebenezer II:60–61
 Cook, James II:16
 Cook, Robert I:285
 Cooke, E. See Cook, Ebenezer
 Coolidge, Olivia I:71, I:177, I:320
Coolie (Anand) III:19
 "Coolness" (Lasker-Schüler) III:257

- Cooper, Anthony Ashley. See Shaftsbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper, third earl of
- Cooper, Carolyn III:49
- Cop, Nicolas II:37
- Copernican Theory II:62, II:99
- Copernicus* (Armitage) II:62
- Copernicus, Nicolaus II:61–63
critics of II:166
friends and colleagues of II:32
influence of II:32, II:99
Renaissance and II:244
works on II:33, II:160, III:459
- Copies* (Seferis) III:394
- Copland, William II:287
- Copley, Frank O. I:178–179
- Corbaccio* (Old Crow; Boccaccio) II:23
- La corde raide* (The Tightrope; Simon) III:402
- Corinna I:236
- “Corinna’s Going A Maying” (Herrick) I:62
- Corinne* (Staël) III:412
- Corinthian Culture Prize III:192
- Coriolanus* (Shakespeare) III:180
- Corneille, Pierre II:63–64
friends and colleagues of II:25,
II:241
influence of II:174, II:220
influences on I:72, I:203, II:254
literary criticism on II:2, II:299
neoclassicism and II:56, II:202,
III:375
and unities II:292
- Corneille, Thomas II:64
- Coronation* (Donoso) III:122
- La corona trágica* (The Tragic Queen; Lope de Vega) II:162
- The Corpse on the Throne* (Becher). See Der Leichnam auf dem Thron
- Correction* (Bernhard). See Korrektur
- correspondence I:38, I:70, I:93, I:104,
I:243, I:293, II:7, II:17, II:46, II:107,
II:204, II:251, II:265–266, II:303,
III:357. See also entries under Letters
- Corriere Lombardo Prize III:303
- corroboree III:3
- Cortázar, Julio III:102–103
forerunners of III:111
influences on III:56
- Cortés, Hernán II:64–65
associates of II:74, II:159,
II:164
life of II:36, II:203–204, II:235
works on II:164, III:269
- Cortés, Martín II:164
- Cortigiana* (The Courtesan; Aretino) II:8
- Corydon* (Gide) III:167
- La Coscienza di Zeno* (Confessions of Zeno; Svevo) III:418
- Cosmographiae Introductio* (Waldseemüller) II:295
- Cosmos* (Gombrowicz) III:173
- Costa, Cláudio Manuel de II:100
- Coster, Simon II:31
- Costumbrismo III:104
- Cotton, John II:178, II:179
- Cotton, Maria II:179
- Coudenberg, Vrank van II:254
- Coulanges, Marie de II:265
- Council of Clermont I:79, I:80
- Council of Trent II:282
- “Councilor Krespel” (Hoffmann) III:206
- The Counterfeiters* (Gide) III:168
- Counter-Reformation II:71, II:282,
II:284–285
- Countess of Dia I:312–313
- The Countess of Pembroke’s Arcadia* (Sidney) II:270
- The Countess of Tende* (Lafayette) II:147
- “Counting the Stars” (Yun) III:460
- “The Country Mouse and the City Mouse” (Aesop) I:8
- The Country Wife* (Wycherley) II:59
- The Country Without Music* (Hasluck) III:195
- Un Coup de dés Jamais n’abolira le hasard* (Mallarmé) III:276
- Le Coup de grâce* (Yourcenar) III:459
- Coursebook* (periodical). See Kursbuch
- The Courtesan* (Aretino). See Cortigiana
- The Courtier* (Castiglione) II:45–46,
II:71
- courtly love I:64–66
and Arthurian romance I:65–66,
I:67, I:68
chivalry and I:189
influence of I:116, I:269, I:313,
I:329, II:210
influences on I:229
origins of I:257
troubadour songs and I:146, I:311,
I:318
works on I:43, I:147, I:259–261,
I:318, II:270, II:271
- Cousin Bette* (Balzac). See La Cousine Bette
- La Cousine Bette* (Cousin Bette; Balzac) III:38
- Coverdale, Linda III:86
- Coverley, Mrs. Eric. See Bennett, Louise
- Covey, C. II:35
- Coward, David I:267
- The Cowards* (Škvorecký) III:403–404
- “Coyote and Junco” I:341
- Coyote tales
Hopi I:75–77, I:205, I:313
White Mountain Apache I:328
Zuni I:299
- “Crabs” (Carey) III:77
- Cracraft, James II:232
- Crane, Ralph III:227
- Cranmer-Byng, L. I:227
- Crassus I:57
- “Craven” (Han Yu) I:123
- Crayencour, Marguerite de. See Yourcenar, Marguerite
- Creation by the Sword* (Sri Sri) III:411
- Creation Fire* (Espinet) III:135
- creation myths
Finnish I:152
Indian I:152
Mayan II:180, II:229
Native-American I:75, I:77–79,
I:223, I:299, I:314, I:328, I:341
Oceanic I:205–207
oral tradition and I:223
- Creation Myths of Primitive America* (Curtin) I:78
- Creation of Adam and Eve* II:66
- Creations* (Nikolev) II:205
- Creole Folktales* (Chamoiseau) III:86
- Créolité movement III:85
- Le Crève-Coeur* (Aragon) III:25
- Crèvecoeur, J. Hector St. John de II:65
- Crèvecoeur, Michel-Guillaume-Jean de. See Crèvecoeur, J. Hector St. John de
- Crime and Punishment* (Dostoyevsky) III:124
- O crime do padre Amaro* (The Sin of Father Amaro; Queiróa) III:362
- The Crime of S. Karma* (Abe) III:2
- The Crimson Island* (Bulgakov) III:69
- Crispus, Gaius Sallustius. See Sallust
- Cristóbal de Molina I:199
- Criterion* (periodical) III:19
- Critical-Analytical Studies of Metal and Stone Inscriptions* (Li and Zhao) I:170
- critics. See Art critics; literary critics
- Critic’s Prize III:372–373
- A Critique of Judgment* (Kant) II:134
- A Critique of Practical Reason* (Kant) II:133
- A Critique of Pure Reason* (Kant) II:132–134
- Croatian literature II:177–178
- Croce, Benedetto III:301
- Crockett, Roger III:128
- Croesus (king of Lydia) I:6
- Cromwell* (Hugo) III:212, III:375
- “Crónica de Chac-Xulub-Chen” II:54
- Crónica de la conquista de la Nueva España* (López de Gómara) II:164

- Crónica de los muy nombrados Omiche y Haradin Barbarrojas* (López de Gómara) II:164
Crónica de veinte reyes I:72
 Cronin, Jeremy III:104–105, III:114
Cronopios and Famas (Cortázar) III:103
 Cronos I:202, I:203
Crossing Borders (Menchú) III:291
Crossing the Mangrove (Condé) III:101
Crossing the Peninsula and Other Poems (Lim) III:263
Cross Purpose (Camus) III:74
A Crow and a Fox (Krylov) II:142
Crowds and Power (Canetti) III:75
 Crow Indian creation myths I:78
 Crusades I:79–81
 chivalric code and I:65 goals of I:189
 impact of I:257, I:311
 participants in I:107, I:146, I:318, I:319
 works on I:284
Crusts (Claudel). See Le Pain dur
 Cruz, Sor Juana Inés de la II:65–66
 Cruz e Sousa, João III:376
 Cruz Oliveira, José Auto da III:362
The Cry (Munch) III:138
Cry, the Beloved Country (Paton) III:342
 “Cry Mercy” (Brasch) III:57
The Crystal Carrot (Mo) III:297
The Crystal Frontier (Fuentes) III:155
 Ctesias I:92
 Ctesiphon I:90
Los cuatro jinetes del Apocalipsis (The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse) (Blasco) III:54
 Cuauhtlaltzén II:196
 Cuba, censorship in III:72
Cubana (Yáñez, ed.) III:455
 Cuban literature III:26, III:72, III:78–79, III:184, III:455
 Cuban National Prize for Literature III:184 cubism III:23, III:96, III:251
The Cubist Painters (Apollinaire) III:23
 CUC. See Committee of Peasant Unity
 Cu Chulainn I:200
La Cuestión Palpitante (Pardo Bazán) III:340
cuicahuicque I:208
cuicamatl I:208
Cultural Life in Modern America (Hamsun). See Fra det Moderne Amerikas Aansliv
 Cultural Revolution. See China
 Cumani, Maria III:361
Cumhuriyet (Republic; periodical) III:239
 Cummings, E. E. III:150, III:419
The Cunning Man (Davies) III:113
Cura Pastoralis (Gregory) I:11
Curiositiés esthétiques (Aesthetic Curiosities; Baudelaire) III:42
 Curnow, Allen III:105
 Curtin, Jeremiah I:78
 Curzon, Daniel I:233
 Cushing, Frank Hamilton I:299
Cut Glass and Blown Glass (Hayashi Kyoko) III:198
 Cutter, John II:82
Cuvinte Potrivite (Arghezi) III:26
 Cycle of Kings I:199, I:201 cycle plays II:66–68
Cyclopedia II:76
 Cynddlew I:39
 Cynwulf I:217
Cyrano de Bergerac (Rostand) II:21
 Cyril I:225
The Cyropaedia (Xenophon) I:333
 Cyrus (prince of Persia) I:332, I:333
 Czaczkes, Shmuel Yosef. See Agnon, Samuel Joseph
 Czechoslovakia, censorship in III:245, III:394, III:403–404
 Czech writers II:59, II:116, III:197, III:232–233, III:394–395, III:403–404
- D
- Dada III:107
 figures associated with III:25, III:28, III:131, III:434
 influence of III:25, III:140, III:259–260, III:394, III:411
 and Theatre of the Absurd III:424
 Dağlarca, Fazıl Hüsnü III:107–108
 Daibu, Lady I:82
Daily Telegraph (periodical) III:377
The Dailyu Daily (Guillén) III:185
 Dáire, Tadhg Mac I:39
 “The Dairy Maid and Her Milk Can” (Aesop) I:7–8
 Dai Wangshu III:367
 Dakar World Festival of Negro Arts III:326
 Dalí, Salvador III:411
 Dalit literature III:19, III:109, III:117–118, III:353
 Dalit Panthers III:109, III:118
Dal tuo al Mio (Varga) III:442
La dama boba (The Lady Nit-Wit; Lope de Vega) II:162
 Damas, Léon-Gontran III:84, III:317
 Damasus (pope) I:148
Damned for Despair (Tirso de Molina) II:288
 Damon (Lessing) II:157
Dance of the Happy Shades (Munro) III:305
The Dancing Girl (Mori) III:303
The Dancing Socrates, and Other Poems (Tuwim) III:434
Dangerlok (Souza) III:409
A Dangerous Encounter (Jünger) III:230
Dangerous Liaisons (Laclos). See Les Liaisons dangereuses
 “The Dangerous Neighbor” (Pushkin). See “Opasnyi sosod”
 Daniel, Arnaut. See Arnaut Daniel
 Daniélou, Alain I:155, I:156
 Danish literature III:20–21, III:118
 D’Annunzio, Gabriele III:99, III:109–110, III:296
Dansō (periodical) III:222
 Dante Alighieri I:83–85
 allegory in II:6
 classicism in II:56
 contemporaries of I:14, I:143, I:167
 editors of II:20
 epic genre and II:87
 influence of I:66, I:190, II:22–23, II:50, II:172, II:223, II:226, III:38, III:163, III:447
 influences on I:25, I:85, I:203, I:229, I:235, I:250, I:313, I:322
 literary criticism by II:222, II:225 literary criticism on I:84–85, I:128, II:22, II:182, II:223, III:260
 themes of I:66
 works by I:97, I:318, II:182
 works on I:14
Dantons Tod (Danton’s Death; Büchner) III:68
 Danzig trilogy (Grass) III:179–180
Daodejing (Tao Te Ching; Laozi) I:165–166
 Daoism (Taoism)
 founding of I:165
 influence of I:104, I:122, I:168, I:264, I:291, I:334, II:43, III:210
 tenets of I:165–166
Daphnis and Chloë (Longus) I:174–175, II:247
 Dario, Rubén III:110–111
 comparable writers III:363
 and Generation of 1898 III:163
 influences on III:47
 and Latin-American modernism III:299, III:376
 literary criticism on III:269

534 Cumulative Index

- Dario Fo: People's Court Jester* (Mitchell) III:149
- Dark Age I:190
- The Dark Bird* (Burkart). See Der dunkel Vogel
- "Darkness within the Light" (Kauraka) III:237
- Dark Night of the Soul* (St. John of the Cross) II:126
- A Dark Night's Passing* (Shiga) III:399
- Dark Testament* (Abrahams) III:5
- Darwin, Charles III:298
- Darwish, Mahmud III:111–112
- Das, Kamala III:409
- Da Silva da Silva's Cultivated Wilderness* (Harris) III:193–194
- Data* (Euclid) I:101
- Daudet, Alphonse III:210
- Daughter of Fortune* (Allende) III:16
- Daughter of Isis* (Sadawi) III:380
- Daughter of the Sea* (Castro) III:80
- The Daughters of Fire* (Nerval). See Les filles du feu
- Daurat, Jean II:225
- Davanzati, Chiaro I:85, I:85–86
- David* (Michelangelo) II:186
- David Copperfield* (Dickens) III:343
- David of Sassoun* I:86–87
- Davidson, Cathy N. II:31
- David's Psalms* (Rej) II:243
- David's Story* (Wicomb) III:449
- Davies, Robertson III:112–113
- Davies, Rosalind II:15
- Davis, Elizabeth Gould III:143
- Davis, Jack III:3–4
- Davis, Miles III:288, III:423
- Dawes, Kwame III:58, III:135, III:175
- Dawla, Sayfal al- I:196
- Dawlah, 'Ala' ad- I:34
- Dawlah, Shams ad- I:34
- The Dawn Is at Hand* (Noonuccal) III:327
- Dawson, Raymond I:75
- The Day* (Parini) II:214–215
- da ya (ta ya)* I:52
- Day after Day* (Quasimodo) III:361
- The Day Before Yesterday* (Agnon) III:9
- Daybreak* (Nietzsche) III:324
- Daye, Angell I:175
- The Day of Doom* (Wigglesworth) II:305
- Days of Hope* (Malraux). See L'Espoir
- Days of the Turbins* (Bulgakov) III:69
- Dazai Osamu III:431
- D'Costa, Jean III:369
- Deacon Gregor I:224
- Dead Man on Campus* (Škvorecký) III:404
- Dead Roots* (Nortje) III:327
- Dead Sea Scrolls I:49, I:87–89, I:115
- Dead Souls* (Gogol) III:172
- De Amicitia* (On Friendship; Cicero) I:70
- Dean, James III:423
- De animae quantitate* (On the Greatness of the Soul; Augustine) I:29
- Dear Departed* (Yourcenar). See Souvenirs Pieux
- Death and the Compass* (Borges) III:56
- Death and the Fool* (Hofmannsthal). See Der Tor und der Tod
- Death and the King's Horseman* (Soyinka) III:410
- "Death Fugue" (Celan) III:82
- Death in Venice* (T. Mann) III:281
- The Death of Agrippina* (Bergerac) II:21
- Death of a River Guide* (Flanagan) III:146
- The Death of Artemio Cruz* (Fuentes) III:154
- Death of a Son* (Ndebele) III:317
- "The Death of Cuauhtemoc" II:54
- The Death of Ivan Ilyich* (Tolstoy) III:429
- Death of Oleg Drevlianskii* (Ozerov) II:211
- "The Death of Sohrab" (Firdawsī) I:278
- The Death of Virgil* (Broch). See Der Tod des Vergil
- Death on the Installment Plan* (Céline) III:83
- Death's Duel* (Donne) II:78
- Deathwatch* (Genet) III:164
- The Debate Between Folly and Love* (Labé) II:144
- De beata virgine dei matre Maria* (Anchieta) II:6
- De beata vita* (On the Happy Life; Augustine) I:29
- De Bello Gallico* (Commentary on the War in fin de Gaul; Caesar) I:57, I:58–59, I:130
- Debussy, Claude A. III:276
- Début et fin de la neige* (Beginning and End of Snow; Bonnefoy) III:55
- decadence III:113
- figures associated with III:110, III:189, III:213–214, III:315
- in fin de siècle III:145
- influence of III:110
- influences on III:276
- scapigliatura* movement and III:390
- symbolism and III:418, III:419
- Decades* (Livy) II:222
- The Decameron* (Boccaccio) I:14–15, I:190, I:232, I:305, II:23–24, II:48
- De Casibus Virorum Illustrium* (Boccaccio) II:167
- "Declaration" (Bei Dao) III:47
- Declaration of Independence, U.S. authors of II:122
- Enlightenment thought in II:122–123
- impact of II:75
- De Clementia* (On Mercy; Seneca) I:276
- Decolonizing the Mind* (Ngugi) III:322
- De consolatione philosophiae* (The Consolation of Philosophy; Boethius) I:11, I:50–51, I:147, II:51
- Deconstruction III:355
- De Divinatione* (On Divination; Cicero) I:70
- De Ecclesia* (The Church; Hus) II:116
- The Deeds of the Franks* I:80
- De Ente et Uno* (On Being and Unity; Pico della Mirandola) II:224
- "The Deepest Essence of the Soul" (Hadewijch) I:119
- Deep Roots* (Nortje) III:328
- "Deer Park" (Wang Wei) I:326
- deer songs, Yaqui I:78, I:335–337
- The Defence of Poesie* (Sidney) II:270
- Defenders of Peace* (Ba Jin) III:34
- Defense* (Montesquieu) II:194
- The Defense and Illustration of the French Language* (Bellaire). See La Défense et Illustration de la Langue Française
- The Defense of Galileo* (Campanella) II:39
- Defense of the Wolves* (Enzensberger). See Verteidigung der Wölfe
- The Deferred Time* (Bachmann) III:36
- La Deffence et Illustration de la Langue Française* (The Defense and Illustration of the French Language; Bellaire) II:20, II:225–226
- The Defiant Muse: Hispanic Feminist Poets from the Middle Ages to the Present* (Madariaga) III:80
- "De Fide" ("Of Life"; Fulgentius) I:109
- Defoe, Daniel II:69–70, II:87, III:98, III:343
- De Humanis Corporis Fabrica Libri Septem* (Seven Books on the Construction of the Human Body; Vesalius) II:294
- The Dehumanization of Art* (Ortega y Gasset) III:336
- De immortalitate animae* (On the Immortality of the Soul; Augustine) I:29
- De institutione arithmetica* (Principles of Arithmetic; Boethius) I:50
- De institutione musica* (Principles of Music; Boethius) I:50
- De Ira* (On Anger; Seneca) I:276

- Dejemos hablar al viento (Let the Wind Speak; Onetti)* III:335
- De-Ka-Nah-Wi-Da* II:70–71
- De Kok, Ingrid III:113–114
- Delacroix, Eugène III:41
- De la littérature (On Literature; Staël)* III:411–412
- De l'Allemagne (On Germany; Staël)* III:375, III:412
- De la Religion (On Religion; Constant de Rebecque)* III:102
- “De Laudibus Britanniae” (“In Praise of Britain”; Skelton) II:272
- Deledda, Grazia III:442
- De l'esprit de conquête et de l'usurpation (On the Spirit of Conquest and Usurpation; Constant de Rebecque)* III:102
- De libero arbitrio (On Free Will; Augustine)* I:29–30
- “The Delights of Roaming Afar” (Shen Fu) II:269
- The Delights of the Door* (Ponge) III:351
- De l'influence des passions (On the Influence of the Passions; Staël)* III:411
- Della Casa, Giovanni II:71
- Della famiglia* (Alberti) II:3–4
- Delphine* (Staël) III:412
- The Deluge* (Sienkiewicz) III:400
- De magistro* (Augustine) I:30
- The Demesne of the Swans* (Tsvetaeva) III:431
- Demeter I:203
- Demetrius of Phalerum I:234
- Demetz, Peter III:66, III:134
- Demian* (Hesse) III:203
- democracy, origins of I:26
- Demon* (Lermontov) III:261
- Demosthenes I:89–91
- contemporaries of I:27, I:140, I:141
 - literary criticism on I:173
 - works on I:90, I:245
- Demosthenes: Statesman and Orator* (Worthington) I:90
- De musica* (On Music; Augustine) I:29
- De Mysteriis* (Ambrose) I:12
- Den africanske farm (Out of Africa; Dinesen)* III:118
- De natura Deorum* (The Nature of the Gods; Cicero) I:70
- De natura novi orbis* (Acosta) II:2
- De natura rerum liber* (On Nature; Bede) I:41
- Denby, David I:133, I:239, I:281
- Dengaku II:143, II:313
- Denier du rêve (A Coin in Nine Hands; Yourcenar)* III:459
- De Officiis* (On Duties; Cicero) I:70
- De Officiis ministrorum* (Ambrose) I:12
- De oratore (On the Orator; Cicero)* I:70
- De ordine* (On Order; Augustine) I:29
- Depardieu, Gérard III:127
- Dépestre, René III:114
- De procuranda indorum salute* (Acosta) II:3
- De Providentia* (On Fortune; Seneca) I:276
- Deptford trilogy (Davies) III:112
- Derain, André III:23
- De re Militaria (The Art of Chivalry; Vegetius)* I:147
- De re Publica* (On the Commonwealth; Cicero) I:70
- De Rerum Natura (On the Nature of Things; Lucretius)* I:100, I:177–179, I:320
- De Revolutionibus Orbium Coelestium (On the Revolutions of the Heavenly Spheres; Copernicus)* II:62
- Le Dernier chouan, ou la Bretagne en 1800* (Balzac) III:38
- Les Derniers Rois Mages (The Last Magi; Condé)* III:101
- Derrida, Jacques III:40, III:93, III:355
- Derzhavin, Gavriil Romanovich II:71–72
- Desai, Anita III:115
- Desbordes-Valmore, Marceline III:115–116
- Descartes, René II:72–74
- critics of II:296, III:137
 - friends and colleagues of II:215
 - influence of II:73, II:275–276
 - influences on I:277
 - literary criticism on II:72–73
 - neoclassicism in II:56
 - predecessors of II:33
 - works on III:45
- The Descendants of Cain* (Hwang Sun-won) III:214
- Deschamps, Eustace II:50, II:297
- Deschevaux-Dusmesnil, Suzanne III:45
- “Description of a City Shower” (Swift) II:279
- “Description of an American Species of Certhia, or Creeper” (Bartram) II:17
- Description of Moldavia* (Cantemir) II:40
- A Description of New England* (Smith) II:273
- The Description of the World* (Polo) I:246–248
- De Senectute* (On Old Age; Cicero) I:70
- Desert* (Memmi) III:290
- “The Deserted Camp” (Labid) I:164
- Design for Good Government* (Jung Yak Yong). See Kyongse yp'yo
- Desire Under the Elms* (O'Neill) I:203
- Desolation* (Mistral) III:296
- Despair* (Nabokov) III:310
- Destiny's Journey* (Döblin) III:122
- Destito, Teresa II:296
- Destruction* (Ba Jin) III:34
- “The Destruction of the First People” (Sethol) II:181
- Detti* (Jacopone da Todi) I:144
- Il Detto d'Amore* I:261
- deus ex machina I:24, I:91–92, I:102, I:286
- Deutsches Roulette (German Roulette; Köhler)* III:243
- Deutches Theater, Berlin III:59
- Devadas* (Chatterji) III:88–89
- The Development of Creole Society in Jamaica* (Brathwaite) III:58
- The Development of Medieval Aesthetics* (Eco) III:129
- Devi, Mahasweta III:116
- Devi Bhagavata* I:250
- The Devil in the Hills* (Pavese) III:343
- The Devil is Loose!* (Maillet) III:274
- Devil on the Cross* (Ngugi) III:322
- The Devil's Elixir* (Hoffmann) III:206
- Devonshire, duchess of II:253–254
- Devotions* (Donne) II:78
- De vulgari eloquentia* (Eloquence in the Vernacular; Dante) I:84
- Dewey, John III:209, III:210
- Dharmachoti, Ussiri III:117
- dharma* I:46, I:231, I:316
- Dharma Shastra* I:155, I:231
- Dhasal, Namdeo III:109, III:117–118
- Diaboliad* (Bulgakov) III:69
- Les Diaboliques* (Barbey) III:39
- Diaghilev, Sergey III:96
- Dialectic* (Abélard) I:1
- Dialogh: d'amore (Philosophy of Love; Hebreo)* II:101
- Diálogo de los muertos: La causa académica (Dialogue of the Dead: The Academic Case; Peralta)* II:220
- Dialogue between a Philosopher, a Christian, and a Jew* (Abélard) I:1
- Dialogue Concerning the Two Chief Systems of the World* (Galileo Galilei) II:99–100
- “Dialogue in the Mountains” (Li Bai) I:168
- Dialogue of the Dead: The Academic Case* (Peralta). See Diálogo de los muertos: La causa académica
- Dialogue on Nobility* (Parini) II:214
- Dialogue on Orators* (Tacitus) I:254
- Dialogues* (Tasso) II:282
- Dialogues of the Gods* (Lucian) I:176
- Dialogus de Oratoribus* (Tacitus) I:293
- Diamant, Dora III:232

536 Cumulative Index

- Diana I:202
Diana enamorada (Montemayor) II:217
Diana's Hunt (Boccaccio) II:23
Diaries 1899–1941 (Musil) III:307
Diario de la Marina (periodical) III:184 diarists and memoirists I:141–142, I:191–192, I:194–196, II:16–17, II:18–19, II:27–28, II:138–139, II:147, II:218–220, II:246–247, II:268–269, II:307, III:87, III:97, III:111, III:154, III:175, III:290–291, III:301, III:307, III:309, III:314, III:319, III:346, III:372, III:386, III:394, III:459
Diario del '71 e del '72 (Montale) III:301
Diario di Quattro Annini (Montale) III:301
Diary (Gombrowicz) III:173
 “The Diary of a Madman” (Lu) III:265, III:300
Diary of a Mad Old Man (Tanizaki) III:424
 “Diary of a Week” (Radishchev) II:242
The Diary of Michael Wigglesworth, 1653–1657 (Wigglesworth) II:306
Diary of My Father's Last Days (Kobayashi Issa). See Chichi No Shuen Nikki
 Díaz del Castillo, Bernal II:65, II:74, II:164
 Díaz de Vivar, Rodrigo. See Cid, El
The Diabolic Ones (Barbey) III:39
 Dickens, Charles
 friends and colleagues of III:20
 influence of III:226, III:256, III:342, III:428
 influences on I:302, I:306
 translations of III:343
 Dickinson, Emily II:39, III:114
 Dickinson, John II:74–75
Dictionary of Music (Rousseau) II:251 Dictionary of Proper Sino-Korean Pronunciation (Se-jong). See Dongguk jeong-un
Didactic Poems (Hadewijch) I:118
 Diderot, Denis II:75–77
 on the Crusades I:80
 Encyclopedia and II:82, II:85, II:194, II:243, II:250
 Enlightenment and II:85, II:242, II:243, II:258 friends and colleagues of II:4, II:46, II:250, II:251, III:411
 influence of II:157
 influences on II:194
 literary criticism by II:107
 literary criticism on II:76–77
Dido, Queen of Carthage (Marlowe) II:176
Dido Forsaken (Metastasio) II:185
 Diego (count of Oviedo) I:71
 Diego de Guzmán I:336
Die Kolonne (The Column; periodical) III:211
Die Leiden des jungen Werther (The Sorrows of Young Werther; Goethe) II:102–103, II:207, II:245
Different Works (de Bergerac) II:21
Dikter (Poems; Södergran) III:407
Dilemma (Chatterjee) III:88
Dimitrii the Impostor (Sumarokov) II:277
 Din, Lisan al-. See Ibn al-Khatib
 Dinarchus I:27
 Dinesen, Isak III:118
 Ding Ling III:119–120, III:300, III:406
 Diodorus I:92–93
 Dionysius II:56
 Dionysius II (king of Syracuse) I:238
 Dionysius of Halicarnassus I:93, I:173
 Dionysius the Areopagite I:249
 Diop, Alioue III:317
 Diop, Birago III:120
 Diop, David III:120–121
 Diop, Obèye III:35
 “Diotima” (Hölderlin) III:208
The Dipper (periodical) III:119
Dirge for Ignacio Sánchez Mejías (García Lorca) III:160
Discours Antillais (Glissant) III:85
Discourse of Irish Affairs (Sidney) II:270
Discourse on Colonialism (Césaire). See Discours sur le colonialisme
Discourse on Metaphysics (Leibniz) II:153
Discourse on Method (Descartes) II:73
Discourse on Ordering the Popular Government (Guicciardini) II:108 Discourse on the Arts and Sciences (Rousseau) II:250
Discourse on Two New Sciences (Galileo Galilei) II:100
Discourses of Epictetus (Epictetus) I:99
Discourses on Livy (Machiavelli) I:172
Discourses on the First Decade of Titus Livy (Machiavelli) II:169
Discours sur le colonialisme (Discourse on Colonialism; Césaire) III:84, III:318
Disgrace (Coetzee) III:97–98
A Dish of Pork with Green Bananas (Schwarz-Bart and Schwarz-Bart). See Un Plat de porc aux bananes vertes
A Dish of Spices (Huysmans). See Drageoir aux épices
The Disinherited Lady (Pérez Galdós) III:347
Dislocations of Culture (Bahba) III:352
Dismissal of the Grecian Envoys (Kochanowski) II:140
La Disparition (A Void; Percec) III:346
Disputationes Tusculanae (Discussions in my villa at Tusculum; Cicero) I:70
A Dissertation on Greater Exactitude in Navigation (Lomonosov) II:160 “Ditsela! Ditsela” (Malange) III:275 divan III:108
Divan (al-Farazdaq) I:105
Divani Shamsi Tabriz (The Works of Shams of Tabriz; Rumi) I:265
The Divan or the Wise Man's Parley with the World (Cantemir) II:40
The Divided Heaven (Wolf). See Der Geteilte Himmel
 “A Divine and Supernatural Light” (Edwards) II:80
The Divine Comedy (Dante)
 allegory in II:6
 composition of I:83
 content and themes I:25, I:84–85
 as epic I:97, II:87
 influence of I:190, II:23, III:38, III:447
 influences on I:203, I:322
The Divine Names (Dionysius the Areopagite) I:249
 “The Divine Right of Infant-Baptism” (Mather) II:180
Diwan (Hāfiz) II:109
diwans I:3, I:140
 Djebbar, Assia III:121
Djinn (Robbe-Grillet) III:373
 Djojonegoro, Wardiman I:317
Dragtego Zyjemy (Szymborska) III:420
 Dmitriev, Ivan Ivanovich II:77–78, II:105
Dmitrii Donskoi (Ozerov) II:211
 Döblin, Alfred III:122
Le Docker noir (The Black Dockworker; Sembène) III:395
Doctor Faustus (Marlowe) I:203, II:176, II:289
Doctor Faustus (T. Mann) III:282
Doctor in Spite of Himself (Molière) II:191
 “A Doctor's Journal Entry for August” III:6, III:1945” (Seth) III:398
Doctor Zhivago (Pasternak) III:341–342
The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce (Milton) II:188 doctrine of the absurd III:74
 Doe, Paula I:226
Dog Heart: A Travel Memoir (Breytenbach) III:63–64
 Dogood, Silence II:94
Dog Years (Grass). See Hundejahre
Dokimes (Essays on the Greek Style; Seferis) III:394

- dolce stil nuovo* I:85
La Doleur (M. Duras) III:127
 Dollenmayer, David III:122
 Dollimore, Jonathan II:197
A Doll's House (Ibsen) III:217, III:416
 Domenico, Giovan. See Campanella, Tommaso
The Dominica Herald (periodical) III:17
 Dominica Labor Party III:17
 Dominion Drama Festival Award III:112
 Domitian (emperor of Rome) I:99, I:150, I:242, I:294
Dom Juan (Molière) II:190
Dona Flor and Her Two Husbands: A Moral and Amorous Tale (Amado) III:17
 Donati, Gemma I:83
Don Carlos (Schiller) II:260, III:391
Don Catrin de Fachenda (Fernández de Lizardi) II:93
 Donetti, Bice III:361
Dongguk jeong-un (Dictionary of Proper Sino-Korean Pronunciation; Se-jong) II:264
Don Gil of the Green Stockings (Tirso de Molina) II:287
Don Giovanni (Mozart) II:288
 Dong Jieyuan I:325
 Doniger, Wendy I:156
 Don Juan II:287–288
 “Don Juan” (Hoffmann) III:206
Don Juan and the Stone Guest (Tirso de Molina). See El burlador de Sevilla
 Donnadieu, Marguerite. See Duras, Marguerite Donne, John II:78–79
 burial of II:50
 influence of II:30, III:114
 influences on I:313
 Donno, Daniel II:24
 Donohue, Neil H. III:140
 Donoso, José III:122–123
Don Quixote (Cervantes) II:47–50 and chivalry I:66
 influence of II:49–50, II:174–175, III:340
 literary criticism on II:125
 Renaissance and II:244
 as romance II:247
Don Quixote: An Introductory Essay in Psychology (Madariaga) III:269
Don't Die Before You're Dead (Yevushenko) III:457
 Donzella, Compiuta I:93–94
 Doody, Margaret II:279
 “Dopadi” (Devi) III:116
 Dorat, Jean II:20
 Doré, Gustave II:149
La Dorotea (Lope de Vega) II:162
 Dorval, Marie III:443
 Dostoyevsky, Feyodor Mikhailovich III:123–125
 adaptations of III:75
 existentialism in III:136
 friends and colleagues of III:174 influence of III:21, III:146, III:272, III:281, III:402, III:461
 influences on III:384
 literary criticism on III:124–125
 realism in III:366
 works on III:98
 Dostoyevsky, Mikhail III:123
A Double Life (Pavlova) III:344
Double Persephone (Atwood) III:32
Double Suicide at Amijima (Chikamatsu) II:52
The Doubtful Damned (Tirso de Molina). See El condenado por desconfiado
 Douglas, Gavin II:262, II:263
 Douglass, Frederick II:87
The Dove's Necklace (Ibn Hazm) I:65
Down There (Huysmans). See Là-bas
Le Doyen de la Killerine (The Master of Killarney; Prévost) II:231
Le Drageoir aux épices (A Dish of Spices; Huysmans) III:213
The Dragon: Fifteen Stories (Zamyatin) III:461
Dragon Beard Ditch (Lao) III:256
The Dragon's Village (Chen) III:91
La Dragontea (Lope de Vega) II:162
 Drake, Sir Francis II:162 drama
 comedy of manners II:58–59, II:254
 commedia dell'arte II:60, II:127
 cycle plays II:66–68
 farce. See farce
 Kabuki. See Kabuki
 Kyogen II:126, II:143
 in Middle Ages I:190
 miracle plays I:190, I:194, I:198, II:66–68
 morality plays I:190, I:194, I:198, II:66–68, II:90
 mummers' plays I:193–194
 mystery plays I:190, I:194, I:197–198, II:66–68
 naturalism in III:315
 Noh (Nō). See Noh
 pastoral II:217
 in Renaissance II:66
 Restoration II:58–59, II:219
 social comedy II:58
 Theater of Cruelty III:30
 Theater of the Absurd. See Theater of the Absurd tragedy. See tragedy
Dramatic Actions (video) III:253
Draper's Letters (Swift) II:278–279
 “Drawing Close to Love” (Hadewijch) I:119
Drayman Henschell (Hauptmann). See Fuhrman Henschell
 Drayton, Michael II:177
A Dream (Musset) III:308
Dreamers (Hamson) III:191
The Dreamers (Davis) III:4
The Dreaming Youth (Kokoschka) III:243–244
Dream in the Form of a Complaint (Orléans) II:211
Dream of Fair to Middling Women (Beckett) III:45 Dream of Red Mansions. See Dream of the Red Chamber
Dream of the Red Chamber (Cao Xuequin) I:325, II:41–43, III:210
The Dream of the Rood I:217
Dream on Monkey Mountain (Walcott) III:447
A Dream Play (Strindberg) III:416–417
Dreams (Eich). See Träume
Dreams (Quevedo). See Sueños
Dreams and Destinies (Yourcenar) III:459
Dreams of a Rainbow (Kauraka) III:237
Dreams of Georgia (Akhmadulina) III:10
Dream-Stories (Brathwaite) III:59
 Dreamtime III:3
Die drei Sprünge des Wang-lun (The Three Leaps of Wang-lun; Döblin) III:122
Dressed in Light (Seifert) III:395
A Dress of Fire (Ravikovitch) III:365
 Dreyfus, Alfred III:145, III:357, III:462
 Dreyfus affair III:53, III:145, III:357, III:462
Drifting Clouds (Hayashi Fumiko) III:198
Das dritte Buch über Achim (The Third Book about Achim; U. Johnson) III:229
Driven by the Light of the Night (Tsushima) III:431
 Drouet, Juliette III:212, III:213
 “The Drover's Wife” (Lawson) III:259
The Drowned and the Saved (Levi) III:262
 “The Drowning of an Old Cat” (Huang Chunming) III:211
The Drum (periodical) III:177, III:325
The Drum Singers (Lao) III:256
 “Drunkard” (Izmailov) II:120
The Drunkard (Zola). See L'Assommoir
 Drury, Anne II:78

- Dryden, John I:99, I:128, I:237, I:240, I:246, I:322, II:202, II:292
The Dry Heart (Ginzburg) III:168
Dry Valley (Bunin) III:70
A Dry White Season (Brink) III:65
 Du, Nguyen. See Nguyen Du
 “Du beau tétin” (Marot) II:177
Dubliners (Joyce) III:418
 DuBois, W. E. B. III:317
 Ducas, Isadore-Lucien. See Lautréamont, comte de Duchambge, Pauline III:115
 Dudevant, Baron Casimir III:383
 Dudintsev, Vladimir Dmitrievich
III:125–126
 Dudley, Donald R. I:178
 Du Fu (Tu Fu)
 contemporaries of I:326
 influence of I:38
 influences on I:297
 literary criticism by I:168
 literary criticism on I:169
Duino Elegies (Rilke) III:370
 “Du laid tétin” (Marot) II:177
 Dumas, Alexandre (Fils) II:52
 Dumas, Alexandre (Père)
 friends and colleagues of III:20
 influence of III:122
 Dunbar, William II:262, II:263
 Duncan, Isadora III:456–457
The Dunciad (Pope) II:228
 Dunham, William I:101
Der dunkel Vogel (The Dark Bird; Burkart) III:70
 Du Parc, Thérèse II:240
 Dupin, Amandine-Aurore-Lucile. See Sand, George
 Dupin, Jacques III:224
 Duras, Claire de III:126
 Duras, Marguerite III:127–128, III:321, III:387
 Durfort, Amédée-Bretagne-Malo de (duc de Durfort and duc de Duras) III:126
Durgasmandini (Cattopadhyay) III:81
 Dürrenmatt, Friedrich III:128
 Duse, Eleonora III:110
Dusklands (Coetzee) III:97
 “The Dust is Blown Over His Beauties” (Al-Khansā) I:159
 Dutch Academy II:31
 Dutch literature
 Golden Age of II:275, II:301
 humanism in II:115
 stories II:173–174
 writers II:30–31, II:87–89, II:246–247, II:254–255, II:275–276, II:300–301
 Duval, Jeanne III:41, III:42
 Duvalier, François III:114
du-wen movement I:122
Dvärgen (The Dwarf; Lagerkvist) III:250
Dvorák in Love (Škvorecký) III:404
The Dwarf (Lagerkvist). See Dvärgen
 “Dwelling in the Mountains” (Xie Lingyun) I:334
 Dwight, Timothy II:79
Dying Speeches & Counsels of such Indians as dyed in the Lord (Eliot) II:82
 Dylan, Bob III:371
Dyskolos (The Misanthrope; Menander) I:188
- ## E
- “The Eagle and the Beetle” (Aesop) I:7
 Eagleton, Terry II:245
Early Sorrows (Ki?) III:242
Earthchild, with Brain Surgery (Anyidoho) III:24
Earth Erect (Popa) III:352
Earthy Signs (Tsvetaeva) III:432
The Earth of Mankind (Toer) III:427
Earth’s Enigmas (Roberts) III:373
East, West (Rushdie) III:377
 “Easter Wings” (Herbert) III:323
 East German writers III:211, III:241–242, III:246–247, III:247, III:285, III:304–305, III:451
 East German Writers’ Union III:304, III:451
 East Germany, censorship in III:285, III:304
East into Upper East (Jhabvala) III:227
 East Meets West Foundation III:199
Eastward Ho! (Jonson) II:127
 Easwaran, Eknath I:45
 Ebenezer, Bernard III:252
 “The Ebony Horse” I:305–306
The Ecclesiastical History of the English People (Bede). See Historia ecclesiastica gentis Anglorum
Ecclesiastical Ordinances (Calvin) II:37–38 Eclipse of the Stars (Sachs). See Sternverdunkelung
 eclogues II:217
Eclogues (Boccaccio) II:23
Eclogues (Virgil) I:320–321, I:322, II:48, II:217, II:270
 Eco, Umberto III:129–130
L’École des Femmes (Molière) II:58
 écriture féminine III:143
 Ecuadorian writers II:259–260
Ecue-Yamba-O! (Carpentier) III:78
 Edda I:95–96
 Elder I:95, I:204–205
 influence of I:211
 themes of I:190
 Younger Edda (Snorri Sturluson) I:95, I:204, I:269, I:280
 Edgar Huntly (Brown) II:31
The Edge of the Alphabet (Frame) III:151
 Edgerton, Franklin I:232
 Edgerton, Sir Thomas II:78
Edible Woman (Atwood) III:32
Edith Södergran (Schoolfield) III:407
 Les Editions de Minuit III:372
Edouard (C. Duras) III:126 education in ancient Rome I:253–254
 humanism and II:61
 and Native Americans II:82 of women II:199–200
 advocates of III:340
 works on III:133, III:275, III:414
 works on II:4, II:14, II:115, II:199–200, II:251, II:296
The Education of the Human Race (Lessing) II:158
L’Éducation sentimentale (Flaubert) III:148
 Edward I (king of England) I:79, I:189–190
Edward II (Marlowe) II:176
 Edward III (king of England) II:50
 Edwards, Jonathan II:79, II:80–81
 Edwards, Timothy II:80
Effi Briest (Fontane) III:149
 Efron, Sergei III:431, III:432
Efuru (Nwapa) III:328–329
 Egill Skallagrímsson I:279
Egill’s Saga I:269, I:279
 Eglantine guild II:31
The Ego and the Id (Freud) III:152
The Egoists (Fallaci) III:141
 Egyptian Book of the Dead. See Book of the Dead Egyptian literature works I:52–54
 writers III:218, III:272–273
 Ehrenburg, Ilya Grigoryevich III:130
 Eich, Günter III:9, III:130–131, III:183
Eight Comedies and Eight New Interludes (Cervantes) II:48
 Eight Masters I:325
The Eight Names of Picasso (Alberti) III:13
 Einhard I:283
 Einstein, Albert II:276, III:422, III:439
 Ekelöf, Gunnar III:407
 “Ela” (Machado de Assis) III:267
Elahinama (‘Attār) I:26
 El Cid. See Cid, El
Elder Edda I:95
 El Dorado, search for II:124–125

- Eleanor of Aquitaine I:43, I:67, I:257, I:311
- Electra* (Euripides) I:91, I:102
- Electra* (Sophocles) I:286
- Electric Moon* (Roy) III:376
- Elegías de varones ilustres de Indias* (Elegies of Illustrious Men of the Indies; Castellanos) II:45
- elegies I:218–219
- Elegies* (Labé) II:144
- Elegies* (Propertius) I:249–250
- Elegies of Illustrious Men of the Indies* (Castellanos). See Elegías de varones ilustres de Indias
- Elegies of Qu*. See Qu Elegies
- Elegy of the Lady Fiammetta* (Boccaccio) II:23
- Elektra* (Hofmannsthal) III:207
- Elements* (Euclid). See Stoicheia
- Éléments de la Philosophie de Newton* (Voltaire, trans.) II:298
- Elements of a Dream* (Jaccottet) III:224
- Elements of Music* (Euclid) I:101
- Elements of Platonic Theology* (Proclus) I:249
- The Elephant* (Mrožek). See Slon
- The Elephant Clock* (Höllerer). See Die Elefantenuhr
- Die Elefantenuhr* (The Elephant Clock; Höllerer) III:209
- The Elephant Vanishes* (Murakami) III:306
- Eleutheria* (Beckett) III:46
- Eliás Sourasky Prize in Letters III:79
- Eliot, George I:302, III:226
- Eliot, John II:81–82
- Eliot, T. S.
 friends and colleagues of III:301
 influence of I:25, III:301, III:452
 influences on I:131, I:322, III:138, III:276
 literary criticism by II:79, II:176, III:348 translations by I:25, III:348 translations of III:150, III:153, III:215, III:365, III:394
 works by I:6
- Elizabeth I (queen of England) court of II:270
 literary interests of II:266
 reign of II:267, II:274
 works on II:260, III:391
- Elizabeth II (queen of Great Britain) III:312
- Elkann, Alain III:302
- Elle* (periodical) III:392
- Elliott, Emory B., Jr. II:97, II:139, II:178
- “Éloge de la Créolité” (Chamoiseau, Confiant, and Beranbé) III:85
- Éloges* (Perse) III:348
- Eloise to Abelard* (Pope) II:228
- Eloquent Testimony of the Great Calamity* (Ibn ‘Alqama) I:72
- El perro del hortelano* (The Gardener’s Dog; Lope de Vega) II:162
- El Saadawi, Nawal. See Saadawi, Nawal
- Else Lasker-Schuler Prize III:243
- Elsewhere, Perhaps* (Oz) III:337
- Éluard, Paul III:62, III:107, III:131–132
- Elytis, Odysseus III:132
- Emecheta, Buchi III:133
- Emerson, Ralph Waldo II:17
- The Emigrants* (Lamming) III:254
- émigré writers III:338
- Émile (Rousseau) II:250–251, II:251
- Emilia Galotti* (Lessing) II:157
- Emilio’s Carnival* (Svevo) III:418
- Emmerich (king of Hungary) I:318
- Emperor Shaka the Great* (Kunene) III:246
- Empire and Domestic Space in the Fiction of Jamaica Kincaid* (Hughes) III:241
- Empire of Dreams* (Braschi) III:57
- L’Empire Sonhrai* (film) III:395
- empiricism
 British II:73
 in China II:141
 tenets of II:132, II:133
- En attendant Godot* (Waiting for Godot; Beckett) III:45
- Enchanteur pourrissant* (The Rotting Magician; Apollinaire) III:23
- Encheiridion* (Handbook; Epictetus) I:99
- Enchi Fumiko III:134
- The Enchiridion* (Erasmus) II:88
- Enchi Yoshimatsu III:134
- Encountering Sorrow* (Qu Yuan). See Li Sao
- “Encounter with the Ancestors” (Kunene) III:246
- Encyclopedia* (Diderot, ed.) II:82–84
 censorship of II:77
 contents of I:80–81
 contributors to II:4–5, II:76, II:194, II:250, II:251
 Enlightenment and II:85, II:243
- The Encyclopedia of the Dead* (Ki?) III:242
- Endeavour* (ship) II:16
- Endgame* (Beckett). See Fin de partie
- Eneit* (Eneas; Heinrich von Veldeke) I:124–125
- Enemies, a Love Story* (film) III:403
- Les Enfants du Sabbat* (The Children of the Sabbath; Hébert) III:200
- Les Enfants terribles* (The Incorrigible Children; Cocteau) III:96
- Engels, Friedrich III:201
- The Engineer of Human Souls* (Škvorecký) III:404
- England
 censorship in II:69, II:188, II:306, II:311
 Civil War in II:59, II:188
 classicism in II:56
 mythology of I:199–202. See also Arthurian legend
- English, August: An Indian Story* (Chatterjee) III:88
- English literature
 ballads II:84
 bardic poetry. See bardic poetry
 humanism in II:115
 neoclassicism in II:202
 Old English poetry. See Old English poetry English poetry sonnets in II:274
- works
 through 13th century I:15, I:41–43, I:193–194, I:197–198
 14th through 18th centuries II:56–57, II:90, II:271–272
- writers
 through 13th century I:10–11, I:40–41, I:56–57, I:112
 14th through 18th centuries II:14–15, II:16–17, II:22, II:27–29, II:50–52, II:60–61, II:69–70, II:78–79, II:106–107, II:112, II:135–136, II:138–139, II:149–151, II:166–167, II:170–172, II:175–177, II:188–189, II:218–220, II:227–229, II:245–246, II:252–254, II:266–268, II:270–271, II:272–273, II:278–280, II:283–284, II:304, II:305–306, II:306–307, II:310–311
- Englishmen, Frenchmen, Spaniards* (Madariaga) III:269
- The English Patient* (Ondaatje) III:334–335
- English Poems* (Pessoa) III:349
- English Speaking Union prize III:377
- The English Teacher* (Narayan) III:313
- The Enigma of Arrival* (Naipaul) III:311
- “Enjoy the Passing Hour” (Horace) I:61
- Enlightenment II:84–86
 characteristics of II:82
 Christianity in II:138
 critics of II:249–250

- figures associated with II:2, II:4, II:75–76, II:82, II:85, II:102, II:151, II:153–154, II:158, II:194–195, II:232, II:233, II:258, II:259, II:277, II:297–300, II:300
 influence of II:93
 influences on I:244
 prominent works in II:82–84, II:85 rationalism and II:85, II:101, II:160, II:242–243, II:249–250 reaction against II:102
 Renaissance and II:244
 romanticism and II:132, III:374
 in Russia II:46
 and U.S. Declaration of Independence II:122–123
En ménage (Huysmans) III:213
Enneads (Plotinus) I:244, I:248
 Ennius, Quintus I:96
 Enomoto Kikaku II:110
 “An Enquiry into Slander” (Han Yu) I:122–123
Enriquillo (Galván) III:219
En route (Huymans) III:213, III:214
En Route (Sargeson) III:386
L'Envers et l'endroit (The Wrong Side and the Right Side; Camus) III:74
The Envoy from Mirror City (Frame) III:151
 Enwonwu, Ben III:333
 Enzensberger, Hans Magnus III:134–135
 Ephorus I:92
 epic(s) I:96–98, II:86–87
 African I:98–99, II:16, II:275
 Armenian I:86–87
 Brazilian II:100–101
 Chinese I:327, II:308
 classical I:97
 Croatian II:177–178
 Crusades and I:80
 English I:39, I:41–43, I:217
 Finnish I:152–153
 folk I:97
 French I:283–285, II:298
 German II:287
 Germanic I:124–125, I:211–212
 Greek I:60, I:127, I:131–134, II:228
 Indian I:181, I:315
 influence of I:67, II:15, II:25
 Italian II:9–10, II:282–283
 literary criticism on I:23, I:186, II:264
 Mayan II:141, II:180–182
 medieval literature and I:190, I:258 mock II:215
 oral literature and I:223
 Persian I:277–278
 Peruvian II:220
 Portuguese II:38
 Roman I:96, I:228, I:321–322
 romantic II:247
 Russian I:283
 satires of I:28
 Spanish I:72
 Spanish-American II:45
 Sumerian I:113
 themes in I:136
 types of I:97, II:86
 v. romance II:247
 writers of II:161
Epicocene, or the Silent Woman (Jonson) II:127
 Epic of Bamana Segu. See Bamana Segu, Epic of
The Epic of Gallipoli (Dağlarca) III:108
Epic of Gilgamesh. See Gilgamesh
Epic of Komam Q' Anil. See Komam Q' Anil, Epic of
The Epic of Sheik Bedrettin (Hikmet) III:204
Epic of Son-Jara I:9, I:98–99, I:223, I:289
Epic of Sundiata II:16
The Epic of the Kings (Levy, trans.) I:278
Epic of the Three Martyrs (Dağlarca) III:108
 Epictetus I:99
 Epicureanism I:99–100, I:177, I:277
 Epicurus I:99–100
 contemporaries of I:187, I:301
 influence of I:57, I:177, I:320
 themes of I:61
Epigrams (Kochanowski) II:140
Epigrams (Martial) I:186–187
 Epimetheus I:203
 Epinician Odes (Pindar) I:236
The Epistle of Discretion in the Stirrings of the Soul II:56
 “The Epistle of Forgiveness” (Al-Ma`rri) I:180
The Epistle of Prayer II:56
The Epistle of Privy Counsel II:56
 “Epistle on the Art of Poetry” (Sumarokov) II:277
 “Epistle on the Russian Language” (Sumarokov) II:277
Epistles (Horace) I:135
 epistolary novels. See novels, epistolary
Epistulae ex Ponto (Letters from the Black Sea; Ovid) I:228
Epistulae morales (Seneca) I:275–276
Epitaph for the Young (Walcott) III:446
 “Epithalamia” (Sappho) I:272
Epodes (Horace) I:135
 Epstein, Isidore I:295
An Equal Music (Seth) III:398
 Equiano, Olaudah II:87, II:289
The Erasers (Robbe-Grillet) III:372
 Erasmus, Desiderius II:87–89
 censorship of II:282
 contemporaries of II:238
 friends and colleagues of II:30
 humanism in II:115
 influence of II:183, II:237
 influences on I:254, I:302
 Reformation and II:47
 Renaissance and II:244
 works by II:272
Erec (Hartmann von Aue) I:124
Erec and Enide (Chrétien de Troyes) I:65–66, I:67
L' Ere de soupçon (The Age of Suspicion; Sarraute) III:387
 Ernst August II (king of Hanover) III:182
Eros at Breakfast (Davies) III:112
Éros dans un train chinois (Eros in a Chinese Train; Dépestre) III:114
Eros in a Chinese Train (Dépestre). See Éros dans un train chinois
 Ervast, Pekka I:153
 Eschenbach, Wolfram von. See Wolfram von Eschenbach
 Esenin, Sergey. See Yesenin, Sergey
Esmond in India (Jhabvala) III:226
España (Madariaga) III:269
 Espinel, Vicente II:161
 Espinet, Ramabai III:135
L'Espoir (Days of Hope; Malraux) III:278
L'Espresso (periodical) III:129
 Espronceda y Delgado, José de III:135–136
Essai historique, politique, et moral sur les révolutions anciennes et modernes (Historical, Political, and Moral Essays on the Ancient and Modern Revolutions; Chateaubriand) III:87
 “Essai sur les coniques” (Pascal) II:215 essay, development of II:192
An Essay for the Recording of Illustrious Providences (Mather) II:179
Essay of Dramatic Poesy (Dryden) II:292
Essay on Criticism (Pope) II:202, II:228
Essay on Man (Pope) II:228
Essay on Merit and Virtue (Shaftsbury) II:76
An Essay on Projects (Defoe) II:69
Essay on Taste (Montesquieu) II:194
Essay on the Manners and the Spirit of Nations (Voltaire) II:298
Essay on the Origin of Languages (Rousseau) II:251
Essays (Bacon) II:14

- Essays* (Montaigne) II:115, II:192–194
Essays on the Greek Style (Seferis). See Dokimes
 Essen, Baroness Siri von, III:415
The Essential Gesture: Writing, Politics, and Places (Gordimer) III:177
Es steht geschrieben (It Is Written; Dürrenmatt) III:128
The Estate (Singer) III:403
The Estate and Other Poems (Brasch) III:57
 Este, Alfonso d' II:9, II:282
 Este, Luigi d' II:282
Esther (Racine) II:240–241
 Esther May Bedford Prize III:317
Estoria del Cid I:72
 Étales, Jacques Lefèvre d' II:115
Été (Summer; Camus) III:74
 Eternal Feminine III:419
The Eternal Feminine (Castellanos) III:79
Eternity to Season (Harris) III:193
 Etherege, Sir George II:59
Ethics (Spinoza) II:276
Ethics, or Know Thyself (Abélard) I:1–2
Ethics of Ambiguity (Beauvoir) III:43
Étincelles (Sparks; Depestre) III:114
 Etna-Taormina literary prize (Italy) III:12
L'Étoile vesper (Colette) III:99
L'Étranger (The Stranger; Camus) III:74, III:82
L'Être et le néant (Being and Nothingness; Sartre) III:388–389
 “Étroits sont les vaisseaux” (“Narrow are the Vessels”; Perse) III:348
L'Étudiant Noir (The Black Student; periodical) III:84, III:317, III:396
 Eu, Jean de Brienne, count of I:147
Euclid I:100–101
Eugene, or Fatal Consequences of a Poor Upbringing (Izmailov) II:120
Eugene Onegin (Pushkin) III:358–359
Eugénie (Beaumarchais) II:19
 Eumenes I:92
The Eumenides (Aeschylus) I:5–6
 Eunapius I:173
The Eunuch (Terence) I:300
 Eupilino, Ripano. See Parini, Giuseppe
Euripides I:101–103
 contemporaries of I:101, I:102, I:280, I:286
 and deus ex machina I:91–92, I:102
 influence of I:174, II:241
 literary criticism on I:24, I:102–103, I:173
 themes in I:136, I:137
 and unities II:292
 works by I:91–92, I:137, I:177
 works on I:21
Eurydice (Anouilh) III:22
Euthyphro (Plato) I:238
Eva Luna (Allende) III:16
L'Eve Future (Villiers) III:444
 Evelyn, John II:219
Evening (Akhmatova) III:11
 “Evening” (Parini) II:215
 “Evening Album” (Tsvetaeva) III:431
 “Evening Meditations on the Majesty of God” (Lomonosov) II:160
Evenings on a Farm Near Dikanka (Gogol) III:171
An Evening Thought, Salvation by Christ, with Penitential Cries (Hammon) II:111
Even the Dead (Cronin) III:105
 Evers, Larry I:336
Everyman II:67, II:90
Every Man in His Humor (Jonson) II:127
Every Man Out of His Humor (Jonson) II:127
 Ewe people III:22
Examination of the Methods of Proof Concerning the Doctrines of Religion (Averroës). See Kashf al-Manahij
An Examination of the Nature of Monarchy (Cantemir) II:40
 “The Executioner” (Espronceda) III:136
The Execution of Justice (Dürrenmatt) III:128
Exemplar of Korean Medicine (Huh Joon). See Tongui pogam
Exemplary Novels (Cervantes) II:48
 Exeter Book I:217, I:219
Exil (Exile; Perse) III:348
Exile (Perse). See Exil
Exile (Vondel) II:301 existentialism III:136–137
 critics of III:224
 influence of III:22
 practitioners of III:42, III:82, III:302
 Sartre and III:387–389
 surrealism and III:62
 Theater of the Absurd and III:424
 works on III:362
Expériences Nouvelles (Pascal) II:215
Experiments (Hu) III:210
Explorations (Harris) III:193
 explorers. See colonialism and exploration
Explosion in a Cathedral (Carpentier) III:79
Exposition of the Faith, of the Ten Commandments and of the Lord's Prayer (Hus) II:116 expressionism III:138
 influence of III:32
 practitioners of III:44, III:122, III:244, III:257, III:430
The Expulsion of the Triumphant Beast (Bruno) II:32
The Extraordinary Adventures of Julia Jurenito and His Disciples (Ehrenburg) III:130
The Eye of the Scarecrow (Harris) III:193
Eyes of the Wilderness (Roberts) III:373
 Eyquem, Raymon II:192
Eyrbyggja Saga I:269–270
 Ezra I:295
- F
- Fabian. See Lagerkvist, Pär fable Mayan II:180–182
 moral II:120
 v. allegory II:5
 writers of II:77, II:92, II:106, II:142–143, II:149, II:157, II:211, II:263
Fable of Polyphemus and Galatea (Góngora y Argote). See Fábula de Polifemo y Galatea
Fable of Pyramus and Thisbe (Góngora y Argote). See Fábula de Piramo y Tisbe
Fables (Dmitriev) II:77
Fables (Krylov) II:142
Fables (La Fontaine) I:232
Fables (Phaedrus). See Fabulae Aesopiae
Fables and Dialogues of the Dead (Fénelon) II:92
Fables choisies, mises en vers (Selected Fables, Put into Verse; La Fontaine) II:149
 “Fables of Bidpai” I:235
 fabliaux I:267, II:91–92
Fábula de Piramo y Tisbe (Fable of Pyramus and Thisbe; Góngora y Argote) II:106
Fábula de Polifemo y Galatea (Fable of Polyphemus and Galatea; Góngora y Argote) II:106
Fabulae Aesopiae (Fables; Phaedrus) I:234–235
The Face of Another (Abe) III:2
Faces in the Water (Frame) III:151
 Fadeyev, Aleksandr Aleksandrovich III:139
The Faerie Queene (Spenser)
 allegory in II:6
 as epic I:97
 influences on I:68, I:203, I:313, I:322, II:9
 as romance II:247

542 Cumulative Index

- Fairy Tales* (Dmitriev) II:77 fairy tales, writers of II:77, II:221, III:20 Faiz Ahmed Faiz III:140
fakhr I:13, I:298
 Falkner, Gerhard III:140, III:182
The Fall (Camus). See La Chute
 Fallacci, Oriana III:141
Fallacies (Euclid) I:101
The Fallen Oaks (Malraux) III:278
Fall of Lucifer II:66
The Fall of Paris (Ehrenburg) III:130
The Fall of Princes (Lydgate, trans.) II:167 false friend, as literary theme II:90
Falten und Fallen: Gedichte (Grüsbein) III:183
Familiar Ground (De Kok) III:113
Familiar Letters (Richardson) II:245
Family (Ba Jin) III:34, III:367
The Family (Emecheta) III:133
The Family Idiot (Sartre). See L'Idiot de la famille
The Family in Renaissance Florence (Alberti) II:4
The Family Moskat (Singer) III:403
The Family of Pascal Duarte (Cela) III:82
The Family Reunion (Eliot) I:6
Family Sayings (Ginzburg) III:168
The Family Schroffenstien (Kleist) II:137
Family Ties (Lispector) III:264
Family Well-Ordered (Mather) II:179
Famous Women (Boccaccio) II:23
Le Fanal bleu (Colette) III:99
 Fan Chengda (Fan Ch'eng-fa) I:104–105
La Fanfarlo (Baudelaire) III:41
 Fanon, Frantz III:76
Fantasia: An Algerian Cavalcade (Djebbar). See L'amour, la fantasia
 Faraday, Michael III:439
 Farah, Nuruddin III:141–142
 Farazdaq, al- I:105 farce II:92
 Roman, influence of II:60 writers of II:31, II:48, II:173, II:174, II:198–199
The Farce of Simon without Sweetness (Bredero) II:31
The Farce of the Cow (Bredero) II:31
The Farce of the Miller (Bredero) II:31
The Farewell Party (Kundera) III:245
Far from Medina (Djebbar). See Loin deMedine: filles d'Ismail
 Farīd od-Dīn. See `Attār, Farīd od-Dīn
The Far Journey of Oudin (Harris) III:193
Farmer's Letters (Dickinson) II:75
The Far-off Journey. See Yuanyu
 Farouk (king of Egypt) III:273
 Farrell, Edith II:144
Fashionable Wife (Dmitriev) II:77
Fasl al-Maql (On the Harmony of Religion and Philosophy; Averroës) I:33
Fasti (Religious Holidays; Ovid) I:228
 "Fatalities" (Dario) III:111
Fate of Illustrious Men (Boccaccio) II:23
 "Father against Mother" (Machado de Assis) III:267–268
Father Goriot (Balzac). See Le Père Goriot
Father of a Family (Diderot). See Père de famille
 "The Father of Indian Corn" I:215
Fathers and Sons (Turgenev) III:433
 Father Sky I:206
Father Sky and Mother Earth (Noonuccal) III:327 Father's Writings Have Been Republished" (Huang) III:211
 "The Fat Man in History" (Carey) III:77
 Faulkner, William
 adaptations of III:75
 influence of III:76, III:146, III:154
 influences on II:50
 literary criticism on III:161
Faust (Goethe) II:102–103, III:170
 fauvism III:251
Favolello (Latini) I:167
 "The Fawn Will Not Make Flowers" I:336
The Fear (Keneally) III:240
The Feast of the Goat (Vargas) III:441
Felling (Mistral) III:296
 Fellini, Federico I:233 feminism and women's issues III:142–143 activists III:310, III:340 black III:71 impact on literary canon II:79
 influence of III:159
 magic realism and III:271
 Négritude and III:318
 writers and works on III:10, III:32, III:42–43, III:51, III:79, III:88, III:93–94, III:115, III:116, III:119, III:133, III:135, III:144–145, III:159–160, III:205, III:231, III:275, III:328–329, III:330, III:332, III:380, III:382, III:412, III:415, III:436, III:450
 Féministes Révolutionnaires III:450
 Fénelon, François de Salignac de la Mothe II:92–93, II:175
 Feneon Prize for Literature III:372
feng I:51–52
 Feng Zhi III:144
 Fenian Cycle I:199, I:200–201
 Fenrir I:205
 Ferdinand (king of Aragon) II:57
Ferdydurke (Gombrowicz) III:172, III:173
 Ferguson, Adam III:102
 Ferguson, Elizabeth Graeme II:195
 Ferguson, James III:85
 Ferlosio, Rafael Sánchez III:331
 Fernández de Lizardi, José Joaquín II:93
 Fernandez de Quirós, Pedro II:230–231
 Fernando I (king of Castile) I:71
 Ferré, Rosario III:144–145
 Ferreira, António II:93–94
 "Ferryboat and Traveler" (Han) III:191
Ein Fest Für Boris (A Party For Boris; Bernhard) III:50
The Festival of the Greasy Pole (Depestre) III:114
Fêtes Galantes (Verlaine) III:443
Fetish (Harris) III:193
 feudalism
 and chivalry I:64
 Middle Ages and I:189
Feu de Joie (Aragon) III:25
Feuilles d'automne (Autumn Leaves; Hugo) III:212
 feuilletons III:68
 Ficino, Marcilio II:224, II:226
Fictions (Borges) III:56
Fiddler on the Roof (musical) III:14
 Fiedeler, Hans. See Döblin, Alfred
 Fielding, Henry
 influence of II:157, III:234
 influences on I:175, II:207, II:280
 romance and II:247
 works by II:245
The Fiery Angel (Bryusov) III:67
The Fifteen (Queiróz) III:362
15 Poems of Isabel Fraire (Fraire) III:150
Fifteen Poets of the Aztec World (León-Portilla, trans.) I:209
The Fifth Book (Rabelais) II:238
Fifth Business (Davies) III:112
The Fifth Son (Wiesel) III:450
Fifty Caribbean Writers III:17, III:100, III:369
53 Days (Perec) III:346
Le Figaro (periodical) III:155, III:270, III:284, III:383
Figure in the Carpet (periodical) II:309 Figures (Euclid) I:101 file I:39
Filis (Aregensola) II:8
La Fille d'Aristide (Graffigny) II:107
La Fille Élisa (Goncourt) III:175

- Les filles du feu* (The Daughters of Fire; Nerval) III:320
- Filocolo* (Boccaccio) II:23
- Filodemo* (Camões) II:38
- Filostrato* (Boccaccio) II:23
- Fima* (Oz) III:337
- Final Exam* (Cortázar) III:103
- fin'amor*. See courtly love
- The Financial Expert* (Narayan) III:314
- Fin de partie* (Endgame; Beckett) III:45
- fin de siècle III:145–146
 in Europe III:113
 examples of III:207
 figures associated with III:189
 influences on III:276
 symbolism and III:419
 works on III:214
- A Fine Balance* (Mistry) III:297
- Finégal* (Ozerov) II:211
- Fineman, Joel II:267
- Finkel, Andrew III:339
- Finley, John H., Jr. I:308
- Finn I:190
- Finnegan, Ruth I:9
- Finnegan's Wake* (Joyce) I:201, III:44–45, III:276
- Finnish national epic I:152–153
- Fionn, Gofraidh I:39
- Il Fiore* I:261
- Firdawsī, Abū ol-Qāsem Mansūr I:106–107, I:277–278
- Firdousi, Abū ol-Qāsem Mansūr. See Firdawsī, Abū ol-Qāsem Mansūr
- Firefly* (periodical). See Kunang-Kunang
- Fire on the Mountain* (Desai) III:115
- “Fireweed” (Ōba) III:330
- First All-Union Congress of Soviet Writers III:405
- First Cantos* (Gonçalves Dias). See Primeiros cantos
- The First Circle* (Solzhenitsyn) III:408
- The First Heavenly Adventure of Mr. Antipyrine* (Tzara). See La Première Aventure céleste de Monsieur Antipyrine
- The First Madman* (Castro) III:80
- First Municipal Poetry Prize III:415
- The First Principles of Metallurgy* (Lomonosov) II:160
- First Spring* (D'Annunzio). See Primo Vere
- Firth, Felicity III:350
- Fischer, Caroline Auguste III:146
- Fischer, Christian August III:146
- Fischer Publishing Co. III:9
- Fisher, James III:148
- Fisher King I:130–131
- “The Fisherman and the Genie” I:305
- “The Fisherman's Invocation” (Okara) III:334
- “The Fishes and the Frying Pan” (Aesop) I:8
- Fitzgerald, Edward I:220
- The “Five Authors” II:63
- Five Cantos* (Ariosto) II:9
- Five Great Odes* (Claudel) III:95
- 500 Great Books by Women* (1994) III:151
- Five Minutes* (Alencar) III:14
- The Five Temptations of la Fontaine* (Giraudoux) III:169
- The Five Treasures* (Nezāmī). See Khamse
- Five Women* (Musil) III:307
- Flaccus, Lucius I:70
- Flaccus, Quintus Horatius. See Horace
- Flanagan, Richard III:146–147
- Flannery, Tim II:284
- Flatha, Fear I:39
- Flaubert, Gustave III:147–148
 friends and colleagues of III:174, III:286, III:433
 influence of III:280
 influences on II:238, III:384
 literary criticism on III:147–148, III:387
 and modernism III:298
 realism in III:366
 works on III:389
- Flaws in the Glass* (White) III:448
- Flemish literature II:301
- Fleurette, Catherine II:189
- Les Fleurs du mal* (Flowers of Evil; Baudelaire) III:41–42, III:298, III:419, III:442
- The Flies* (Sartre). See Les Mouches
- Fliess, Wilhelm III:151
- “Flight” (Hwang Tonggyu) III:215
- Flight to Arras* (Saint-Exupéry) III:381
- Flint and Feather* (P. Johnson) III:228
- A Floating Bridge of Dreams* (Kurahashi) III:247
- Floating the River in Melancholy* (Tanikawa) III:423
- Floire et Blancheflor* I:28
- Flood* (Ding Ling) III:119
- flood myths I:77, I:114, I:115, I:328
- Flora Nwapa and Co. III:328
- Florentine Codex I:209
- Florentine Histories* (Guicciardini) II:108
- Flores de poetas ilustres* (Flowers of Illustrious Poets; 1603) II:106
- Florida* (Apuleius) I:19
- Florida del Inca* (The Florida of the Incas; Garcilaso de la Vega) II:101
- The Florida of the Incas* (Garcilaso de la Vega). See Florida del Inca
- The Flourder* (Grass). See Das Butt
- The Flower* (Castro) III:80
- Flowers of Evil* (Baudelaire). See Les Fleurs du mal
- Flowers of Illustrious Poets* (1603). See Flores de poetas ilustres
- Flowers of Mould* (Arghezi) III:26
- flower songs. See xochicuicatl
- Flugasche* (Flying Ash; Maron) III:285
- “The Fly” (Mansfield) III:283
- Flyaway Peter* (Malouf) III:277
- Flying Ash* (Maron). See Flugasche
- The Flying Man* (Abe) III:2
- “The Flying of Dunbar and Kennedie” (Dunbar) II:263
- Fo, Dario III:148–149
- Foe* (Coetzee) III:97–98
- The Folk Culture of Jamaican Slaves* (Brathwaite) III:58
- folk epics I:97, II:86
- The Folly of Affection* (Molière). See Les Précieuses ridicules
- Fons Vitae* (The Well of Life; Ibn Gabirol) I:138–139
- Fontane, Theodor III:149, III:350
- Fontane Prize III:229
- The Fool in Christ, Emanuel Quint* (Hauptmann). See Der Narr in Christo, Emanuel Quint
- “The Foolish Girls” I:215
- Fools and Other Stories* (Ndebele) III:317
- “A Fool's Life” (Akutagawa) III:13
- A Foot-bound Butterfly* (Yamada) III:455
- Footfalls* (Beckett) III:45
- Footsteps* (Toer) III:427
- For a New Novel* (Robbe-Grillet) III:321, III:372
- Forbidden Colors* (Mishima) III:295
- The Forbidden Stitch: An Asian-American Women's Anthology* (Lim, ed.) III:263
- Force of Circumstance* (Beauvoir) III:42
- The Force of Habit* (Bernhard). See Die Macht der Gewohnheit
- Ford, Ford Madox III:368
- Ford Foundation III:71, III:173
- “For Don Drummond” (Goodison) III:176
- Forefathers* (Mickiewicz) III:293
- The Forefathers Eve* (Mickiewicz) III:292
- A Forest in Full-Bloom* (Mishima) III:294
- “For Her Brother” (Al-Khansā) I:159
- “The Former Cloud” (Kalidasa) I:153–154
- Forms of Distance* (Bei Dao) III:47
- Forster, E. M. III:81, III:226, III:417
- For the Voice* (Mayakovsky) III:288

544 Cumulative Index

- A Fortnight in Paris* (Fischer). See Vierzehn Tage in Paris
- "Fortune Is Often Met in the Path of Reason" (Montaigne) II:193
- "The Fortune-Teller" (Machado de Assis) III:267
- Forty Immortals II:2
- Foscolo, Ugo III:150
- Fossil and Psyche* (Harris) III:194
- Foucault, Michel III:40, III:355
- Foucault's Pendulum* (Eco) III:129
- Foucher, Adèle III:212
- Founding and Manifesto of Futurism* (Marinetti) III:155–156, III:284
- The Founding of Lima or Conquest of Peru* (Peralta). See Lima fundada o conquista del Peru
- "The Fountain of Bakhchisarai" (Pushkin) III:358
- Fouquet, Nicolas II:148
- "The Four Branches of the Mabinogian" I:201
- Four Doctors of the Church I:12
- The Four Dreams of Linchuan* (Tang) II:282
- Four Generations Under One Roof* (Lao) III:256
- The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse* (Blasco). See Los cuatro jinetes del Apocalipsis
- Fourier, Charles II:293
- Four Plays for Primary Schools* (Brathwaite) III:58
- Four-Seven Debate II:152
- The Four Temptations* (Ruusbroec) II:255
- The Fourth Book* (Rabelais) II:238
- The 47 Ronin* (Takeda, Miyoshi, and Namiki). See Chushingura
- Les Fous de Bassan* (In the Shadow of the Wind; Hébert) III:200
- Fowles, John III:126
- Fox, Matthew I:128
- A Fox and Grapes* (Krylov) II:142–143
- "The Fox and the Grapes" (Aesop) I:7
- "The Fox and the Grapes" (La Fontaine) II:149
- "The Fox and the Stork" (Phaedrus) I:234
- The Fox Hunt* (Verga) III:442
- Fra det Moderne Amerikas Aansliv* (Cultural Life in Modern America; Hamsun) III:189–190
- Fraggle Rock* (TV show) III:323
- Fragments* (periodical) III:89
- Fragonard, Jean-Honoré II:149
- Fraire, Isabel III:150
- Frame, Donald II:193, II:299
- Frame, Janet III:150–151
- Frampton, John I:247
- France
- censorship in II:11, II:21, II:83, II:85, II:251, II:258–259, III:30, III:42, III:310, III:412, III:462
- Enlightenment and II:84, II:242–243
- feminist movement in III:143
- fin de siècle in III:145
- humanism in II:115
- Francés, Bruno I:62
- Francesca da Rimini* (D'Annunzio) III:110
- Franciscan Order I:107
- Francis I (king of France) II:172, II:177
- Francis of Assisi, Saint I:107–108
- influence of I:143, II:127, II:286
- works by I:189
- works on III:369
- Franco, Francisco III:13, III:29, III:269
- Franklin, Benjamin II:94–96
- contemporaries of II:160
- friends and colleagues of II:17, II:75, II:139, II:212
- influence of II:87, II:121
- influences on II:306
- Franklin, James II:94
- Franz Kafka Prize III:192
- Frappier, Jean I:67, I:68
- "Das Fräulein von Scuderi" (Hoffmann) III:206
- Frears, Stephen II:146
- Frederick II (Holy Roman Emperor) I:318, II:273
- Frederick the Great (king of Prussia) II:298, II:299
- Frederick William II (king of Prussia) II:133
- Freedom Literary Award III:214, III:342
- Free Enterprise* (Cliff) III:96
- Free Literature Prize III:339
- The Freeman's Journal* (periodical) II:97
- free speech, origins of II:85–86
- The Freethinker* (Lessing) II:157
- free verse, origins of III:371
- The Free West Indian* (periodical) III:288
- Frega, Donnalee II:246
- French-Canadian writers III:200, III:274, III:294
- French Catholic renaissance III:95
- French literature
- decadence in III:113
- naturalism in III:315–316
- neoclassicism in II:202, III:375
- New Novel in III:321, III:331
- realism in III:366
- romanticism in III:375
- sonnets in II:274
- symbolism in III:418–419
- troubadours. See troubadours
- works
- through 13th century I:28–29, I:259–264, I:283–285
- 14th through 18th centuries II:82–84, II:91, II:92
- writers
- through 13th century I:1–2, I:3–4, I:24–25, I:43–44, I:67–69, I:116–117, I:146–148, I:185–186, I:266–267, I:317–318, I:319–320
- 14th through 18th centuries II:4–5, II:11, II:19, II:20, II:21, II:24–25, II:26–27, II:63–64, II:72–74, II:75–77, II:92–93, II:97–98, II:107, II:144–149, II:151, II:156–157, II:172–173, II:174–175, II:177, II:189–195, II:215–217, II:221, II:225–226, II:231–232, II:237–239, II:239–241, II:248–249, II:249–252, II:258, II:263–264, II:265–266, II:296–300
- 19th and 20th centuries III:21–22, III:23–24, III:30–31, III:37, III:38–39, III:40–42, III:42–43, III:55, III:62, III:74–75, III:76, III:86–87, III:95, III:96–97, III:98–99, III:102, III:115–116, III:126, III:147–148, III:167–168, III:169, III:175, III:212–213, III:213–214, III:219–220, III:224, III:253, III:259–260, III:270, III:275–277, III:277–278, III:286–287, III:308, III:319–320, III:346, III:348, III:356–357, III:370–371, III:372–373, III:380–381, III:386–387, III:402, III:411–412, III:462
- French Revolution
- Enlightenment and II:85
- figures associated with II:251, II:252, II:258–259
- influence of II:46, III:87, III:115, III:202, III:207, III:340, III:374, III:411
- influences on II:194

neoclassicism and III:94
 romanticism and III:375
 roots of II:250
 supporters of II:133
 views on II:103, III:170
 witnesses to III:147
 works on II:2, II:5, III:391

French romanticism III:87, III:253,
 III:308, III:319, III:375, III:383–384,
 III:411–412, III:414–415

Freneau, Philip Morin II:96–97

Fréole III:85

Freud, Sigmund III:151–152
 expressionism and III:138
 influence of III:62, III:84, III:93,
 III:112, III:203, III:298, III:355
 influences on I:203, III:206
 precursors of III:417

Freumbichler, Johannes III:50

Freyja I:205

Freyre, Gilberto de Mello III:152–153
 influences on III:15
 literary criticism by III:267

Frias, Miguel III:16

Friberg, Eino I:153

Frick, Grace III:458–459

Fried, Erich III:153

Friedman, Edward H. II:162

Friedrich Hölderlin Prize III:242

Friedrich Schiller Memorial Prize
 III:131

“Friend Mussunda” (Neto) III:320

Friends (Abe) III:2

Frigate Pallada (Goncharov) III:174

Frighten and Other Poetries (Jaccottet)
 III:224

A Fringe of Leaves (White) III:448

Frisch, Max III:153–154

Frobisher, Sir Martin II:270

“The Frog Prince” (Grimm and Grimm) III:182

Frogs (Aristophanes) I:21

Froissart, Jean I:66, I:190, II:50,
II:97–98, II:210

From a Crooked Rib (Farah) III:142

From Exile to Diaspora: Versions of the Filipino Experience in the United States (San Juan) III:383

From Heaven Lake (Seth) III:398

From the Masses, to the Masses (San Juan) III:383

From the Other Shore (Herzen) III:202

Frost (Bernhard) III:50

Frost, Robert I:62, III:114

The Fruits of the Earth (Gide) III:167

fu (poetry) I:253, I:291, I:338, I:340

Fuenteovejuna (Lope de Vega) II:162

Fuentes, Carlos III:154–155
 The Boom and III:123
 friends and colleagues of III:161

influences on III:56, III:345
 magic realism and III:270–271
 precursors of III:335

The Fugitive (Toer) III:427

Fuhrman Henschell (Drayman Henschell; Hauptmann) III:196

Fujimori, Alberto III:441

Fujiwara Michinaga I:108, I:194

Fujiwara no Kaneie I:191

Fujiwara no Kinto I:221

Fujiwara no Teika I:108

Fujiwara no Yasumasa I:14

Fujiwara Sadaie. See Fujiwara no Teika

Fujiwara Shunzei I:108

Fulbright scholarships III:397, III:459

Fulcher of Chartres I:80

Fulgentius, Saint I:108–109

Fulgentius of Ruspe. See Fulgentius,
 Saint

Full Powers (Giraudoux) III:169

“Funeral in Accra” (Laing) III:252

Funeral Rites (Genet) III:164

A Funeral Toast (Mallarmé) III:276

Für Dich (periodical) III:285

Fur Hat (Voinovich) III:445

Furukawa Tomiko III:424

Fury (Rushdie) III:377

Fūshi Kaden (Zeami) II:313–314

The Future of an Illusion (Freud)
 III:152

futurism III:155–156
 figures associated with
 III:284–285, III:287
 influence of III:204, III:394
 practitioners of III:341

The Futurist Cookbook (Marinetti)
 III:155

G

Gaban: The Stolen Jewels (Premchand)
 III:356

Gabo. See García Márquez, Gabriel

Gabriela, Clove and Cinnamon
 (Amado). See Gabriela, cravo e canela

Gabriela, cravo e canela (Gabriela, Clove and Cinnamon; Amado) III:17

Gaius Octavius. See Augustus

Galaska, Christian Jean-Marc III:63

Galatea (Cervantes) II:48

Galateo (Della Casa) II:71

Galba (emperor of Rome) I:253

Galen I:110–111
 influence of I:35, II:39, II:61,
 II:115, II:294
 influences on I:129
 translations of II:237

Galérie Louise Leiris III:260

Galician Songs (Castro) III:80

Galician writers III:79–80

Galilei, Galileo II:99–100 censure of II:62, II:73, II:99
 contemporaries of II:112
 influence of II:216
 influences on II:33
 Renaissance and II:244
 works on III:61

Galileo. See Galilei, Galileo

Galileo (Brecht) III:61

Galland, Antoine I:304–305

Gallienus (emperor of Rome) I:244

Gallus, Cornelius I:250

Galván, Manuel de Jesús III:219

Gama, José Basilio da II:100–101

The Gambler (Dostoyevsky) III:124

Gamboa, Pedro Sarmiento I:199

A Game of Chess (Kochanowski) II:140

A Game of Contemporaneity (Öe)
 III:332

The Game of Love and Chance
 (Marivaux) II:175

Ganantaya theater group III:116

Gandhi, Mohandas K (aramchand)
III:157–158
 critics of III:356
 friends and colleagues of III:310
 influence of III:1, III:353
 influences on I:46, III:429
 literary criticism by III:310
 works on III:19

Ganivet y García, Ángel III:163

Ganjavī, Elyās Yūsuf Nezami. See
 Nezāmī

Gao Ming I:111–112

Gao Xingjian III:158–159, III:300

Gaçoão Tinoco, Diogo III:219

García Lorca, Federico III:159–160
 forerunners of III:269
 influences on III:163
 works on III:13

García Márquez, Gabriel III:160–162
 The Boom and III:123
 friends and colleagues of III:441
 influence of III:378
 influences on III:56
 literary criticism on III:330
 magic realism and III:270–271,
 III:353
 precursors of III:335

Garcilaso de la Vega I:199, II:48, II:101

The Garden (Akhmadulina) III:10

“The Garden” (Ibn Gabirol) I:138–139

Garden, Ashes (Ki?) III:242

The Gardener’s Dog (Lope de Vega). See
El perro del hortelano

“The Garden of Forking Paths”
 (Borges) III:56

The Garden of Repose (Ba Jin) III:34

The Garden Party (Havel) III:197

546 Cumulative Index

- “The Garden Party” (Mansfield) III:282–283
The Gardens of Toledo (Tirso de Molina) II:287
Gargantua (Rabelais) II:238
The Garlic Ballads (Mo) III:297
 Garn, Walid III:121
The Gates of Language Unlocked (Comenius) II:59
 Gaulle, Charles de III:278
 Gauthier-Villars, Henri III:99
 Gauthier-Villars, Henri III:99
 Gautier, Théophile III:162–163, III:276
 Gavidia, Francisco III:110
 Gay, Delphine III:443
 Gay, John II:278, II:280, III:61
The Gay Science (Nietzsche) III:324–325
Gazette de Liège (periodical) III:401
 “Gedicht” (“Poem”; Köhler) III:243
Gedichte (Poems; Huchel) III:211
Gedichte (Poems; Kaschnitz) III:236
Gefängnis-Tagebuch (Prison Diary; Rinser) III:372
 Gemma I:295–296
 Gemmei (empress of Japan) I:160
 gender studies III:143
Genealogies of the Pagan Gods (Boccaccio) II:23
General Confession (Davies) III:112
The General History of Peru (Garcilaso de la Vega) II:101
General History of the Indies (Las Casas) II:152
General History of the Kingdom of Chile (Rosales). See Historia general del Reino de Chile
General History of the Order of Mercy (Tirso de Molina) II:288
The General History of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles (Smith) II:273
The General in His Labyrinth (García Marquez) III:162
General Natural History and Theory of the Heavens (Kant) II:133 Generation of 1898 III:163
 influences on III:347
 members of III:39, III:227, III:268, III:269, III:435–436
 Generation of 1927 III:13
 Generation of Coimbra III:363
Genesis of the Clowns (Harris) III:194
Genesis poem I:219
 Genet, Jean III:164, III:389, III:425
The Genius of Christianity (Chateaubriand) III:87
 Gent, E. C. See Cook, Ebenezer
The Gentleman from San Francisco (Bunin) III:70
 Gentry, Francis I:211
Genuine Consistency (Nikolev) II:205
 Geoffrey of Monmouth I:112
 influence of I:219, II:171
 influences on I:201
 works by I:67, I:189, II:271
Geographical Relation of Tezcoco (Pomar) I:209
Geographical Sketches (Strabo). See The Geography (Strabo)
The Geography (Geographical Sketches; Strabo) I:288
Georg Büchner (Reddick) III:68
 Georg Büchner Prize
 about III:68
 winners of III:37, III:49, III:50, III:83, III:128, III:134, III:154, III:180, III:182, III:229, III:236, III:304, III:451
 George, Arthur I:278
 George, Stefan III:113, III:165, III:207
 George Circle III:165
 George III (king of Great Britain)
 American Revolution and II:75
 in U.S. Declaration of Independence II:123
 “George Lamming’s In the Castle of My Skin” (Ngugi) III:254
The Georgics (Simon) III:402
Georgics (Virgil) I:127, I:320–321, I:322
 Georg Trakl Prize for Poetry III:9
Die gerettete Erde (The Saved Earth; Burkart) III:70
Die Gerettete Zunge (The Rescued Tongue; Canetti) III:75
 German Academy for Language and Literature III:229
 German Academy of Arts III:180
German Epic Poetry (Gentry, ed.) I:211
Germania (Tacitus). See Concerning the Origin and Location of the Germans
 German literature classical period of II:56
 expressionism in III:138
 sagas. See sagas
 sonnets and II:274
 works
 through 13th century I:210–211
 14th through 18th centuries II:286–287
 writers
 through 13th century I:115–116, I:123–125, I:128–129, I:324, I:329–331
 14th through 18th centuries II:101–104, II:113–114, II:132–134, II:137–138, II:153–154, II:157–158, II:165–166, II:183, II:206–207, II:257–258, II:260–261, II:261, II:286, II:302–303
 19th and 20th centuries III:27, III:28, III:33, III:44, III:48–49, III:54, III:60–61, III:65–66, III:67, III:70–71, III:75, III:82–83, III:122, III:130–131, III:134–135, III:140, III:146, III:149, III:153–154, III:165, III:169–171, III:179–181, III:181–182, III:182–183, III:192–193, III:195–197, III:201, III:203, III:207–208, III:209, III:228–229, III:229–230, III:232–233, III:236, III:243, III:255–256, III:257–258, III:280–282, III:285, III:304–305, III:316, III:323–325, III:367–368, III:369–370, III:371–372, III:379, III:390–392
 German romanticism II:101, II:206–207, II:261, III:23, III:170, III:181, III:201, III:206, III:374–375
German Roulette (Köhler). See Deutsches Roulette
 Germany
 censorship in II:257, III:60, III:196, III:201
 humanist movement in II:30
Germany: A Winter’s Tale (Heine) III:201
Germinal (Zola) III:462
Germinie Lacerteux (Goncourt and Goncourt) III:175
 Gerould, Gordon Hall II:84
 Gertrude (Hesse) III:203
Gerusalemme Liberata (Tasso) II:6
Gesprach mit dem Saurier (Conversation with a Dinosaur; Kirsch) III:242
Der Geteilte Himmel (The Divided Heaven; Wolf) III:451
 “Getting a Jump on Dragon Ball” (Wyatt) II:309
Getting Married (Strindberg) III:416
 Geziød II:105
 Ghālib, Mirzā III:165–166, III:222
 Ghana, literature of. See Ashanti tales ghazal I:105, I:298, II:109, III:165–166, III:222
 Ghazali, al- I:33
 Ghosh, Amitav III:166–167
Ghosts (Ibsen) III:217
Ghosts in the Mirror (Robbe-Grillet) III:373
 Gia Long (emperor of Vietnam) III:322

- Gibbon, Edward III:411
 Gibbs, Marion I:329–330
 Gide, André III:167–168
 friends and colleagues of III:164,
 III:276, III:422, III:438
 literary criticism by III:291
Gift of the Cow (Premchand). See Godān
Gigi (Colette) III:99
Gijsbrecht van Aemstel (Vondel) II:301
 Gikandi, Simon III:96
 Gildas I:112
 Giles, J. A. I:40–41
 Giles, Lionel I:290
Gilgamesh I:113–115
 as epic I:97
 flood myth in I:77, I:114, I:115
 influence of I:115
 literary criticism on I:113–115
 oral literature and I:223
 themes of I:61
 as travel narrative II:289
 Gilgamesh of Uruk I:113
 Gilkes, Harris III:194
 Gill, Roderick II:163
 Gilles de Rais III:40
 Gilmore, Michael T. II:31
 Gilmour, David III:255
Gimpel the Fool (Singer) III:403
 Ginsberg, Allen I:339, III:186
 Ginzburg, Leone III:168
 Ginzburg, Natalia III:168
La Gioconda (D'Annunzio) III:110
Il Gioco Segreto (Morante) III:302
 Girardin, marquis de II:251
 Giraudoux, Jean III:22, III:169
 “The Girl and the Little Ahayuuta”
 I:341
The Girl from the Coast (Toer) III:426
 “The Girl Who Took Care of the Turkeys” I:299
The Girl with the Jug (Lope de Vega).
See La moza de cántaro
Giselle (Gautier) III:163
Gitañjalī (Offering of Songs; Tagore)
 III:422
Giustizia e Liberata (periodical) III:262
Giving Offence (Coetzee) III:98
Die gläsernen Runge (Rings of Glass; Rinser) III:371–372
 Glass, Andrew II:10
The Glass Bead Game (Hesse) III:203
The Glass Bees (Jünger) III:230
The Glass Palace (Ghosh) III:166
The Gleaner (Murray) II:199
 Glenn, Jerry III:140
Gli Asolani (Bembo) II:20
 Glissant, Édouard III:85
 Globe Award III:223
Glosses on Logic (Abélard) I:1
Glottal Stop: 101 Poems (Celan)
 III:82–83
 Gluck, Christoph W. von II:185
 “Go Ahead” (Tian) III:425
 “God” (Derzhavin) II:72
Godān (Gift of the Cow; Premchand)
 III:356
 Goddard, Pliny Earle I:327–328
The Godforsaken World (Espronceda)
 III:136
 Godfrey of Bouillon I:80
 Godfrey of Lagny I:68
Godhorse (Laing) III:252
 Godinho, P. N. I:158
 “Gododdin” (Anerin) I:39
The God of Small Things (Roy) III:376
The God of Socrates, Plato and his Doctrines (Apuleius) I:19
Gods and Heroes of the Celts (Sjoestedt)
 I:201
God’s Bits of Wood (Sembène). See Les
Bouts de bois de Dieu
God’s Controversy with New England
 (Wigglesworth) II:305
Gods of Our Time (Serote) III:397
 Goebbels, Joseph III:190, III:203
 Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von
II:101–104, III:169–171
 classicism in II:56
 on Copernicus II:62–63
 and epistolary novel II:207
 friends and colleagues of II:102,
 II:260–261, III:27, III:292,
 III:391
 influence of II:103, II:207, II:262,
 III:163, III:170–171, III:205,
 III:357
 influences on I:154, I:203, I:263,
 II:114, II:133, II:138, II:245,
 II:276
 literary criticism by I:175, II:138
 literary criticism on II:103, II:138,
 III:170–171, III:208
 romanticism and III:374
 sonnets and II:274
 translations of III:319, III:349
 works by I:250, II:283
 works on III:392
 Goethe Prize III:230, III:282
Goethe’s Briefwechsel mit einem Kinde (Goethe’s Correspondence with a Child; Arnim) III:27
Goethe’s Correspondence with a Child
 (Arnim). See Goethe’s Briefwechsel
mit einem Kinde
 Gogol, Nikolay III:171–172
 friends and colleagues of III:432
 influence of III:69, III:265, III:402
 realism and III:366
Going-on Talking: Tales of a Great Aunt
 (Wright) III:452
Go-Kuden (Go-Toba) I:279
The Golden Apple (Popa) III:352
The Golden Ass (Apuleius). See
Metamorphoses
 “Golden Bells” (Bai) I:38
 “The Golden Cockerel” (Pushkin)
 III:359
The Golden Fountain Café (Pérez
 Galdós) III:348
Golden Gate (Seth) III:398
Golden Legend (Longfellow) I:124
Golden Lotus (Xiao Xiaosheng). See Jin
Ping Mei
 Golden Odes. See Hanged Poems
 “The Golden Pot” (Hoffmann) III:206
The Golden Threshold (Naidu) III:310
 “The Golden Verses” (Nerval) III:320
 “Goldfinch-Astronomer” (Izmailov)
 II:120
 Goldoni, Carlo II:104, II:254
 Goldsmid, Clara III:278
 Goldsmith, Oliver II:59
 Golenishchev-Kutozov, Pavel Ivanovich
II:104–105
Golestan (The Rose Garden; Saadī)
 I:268
Golpitha (Dhasal) III:118
 Gombrowicz, Witold III:172–173
 Gomringer, Eugen III:173
 Gonçalves de Magalhães, José II:101
 Gonçalves Dias, António II:101
 Gonçalves Dias de Margalhães,
 Domingos José III:14
 Gonçalves Dias Dias, António III:174,
III:219
 Goncharov, Ivan III:174, III:366
 Goncourt, Edmond and Jules III:175,
III:315
 Goncourt Academy III:363
 Goncourt Prize. See Prix Goncourt
 Góngora, Luis de I:313, III:224
 Góngora y Argote, Luis de II:105–106
 critics of II:8, II:235–236
 sonnets and II:274
 works by II:285
 Gontard, Jacob III:207
 Gontard, Susette III:207–208
 Gonzaga, Tomás António II:100
 Gonzalez Prada, Manuel III:439
 “Good-bye, Mr. Nothingness” (Yu)
 III:459
Goodbye and Stories (Onetti) III:335
 Goodison, Lorna III:175–176
Good Morning Midnight (Rhys)
 III:368–369
The Good Shepherd (Gunnarsson)
 III:187

548 Cumulative Index

- “The Good Shepherd” (Lope de Vega)
 II:163
The Good Soldier Schweik (Hašek)
 III:194
 Goodwin, Grenville I:327–328
The Good Woman of Setzuan (Brecht)
 III:61
 “The Goose with the Golden Eggs”
 (Aesop) I:8
 Gordian III (emperor of Rome) I:244
 Gordimer, Nadine III:64, III:176–177,
 III:353
 Gordon, William III:16
 Gorenko, Anna Andreyevna. See
 Akhmatova, Anna
 Gorky, Maxim III:178–179
 friends and colleagues of
 III:35–36, III:70, III:90, III:185,
 III:461
 literary criticism on III:287
 and socialist realism III:405
 Gorky Institute of Literature III:10
 Gorodetsky, Sergey III:7
 Goshirakawa (emperor of Japan) I:279
Goshuishi (1086) I:142
The Gospel According to Jesus Christ
 (Saramago) III:385
The Gospel According to St. Matthew (film) III:341
The Gospel of the Gospels (Pascal)
 II:217
 Gossen, Gary H. II:181
 Go-Toba (emperor of Japan) I:108,
 I:279
Gottfried Benn (Ritchie) III:49
 Gottfried von Strassburg I:115–116
 contemporaries of I:329
 literary criticism by I:125
 literary criticism on I:309
 medieval romance and I:258
 works by I:65
 Go-Uda (emperor of Japan) I:337
Gould’s Book of Fish (Flanagan) III:147
 Governor General’s Award III:112,
 III:200, III:274, III:323, III:335,
 III:404
 Gower, John I:229, I:261, II:50, II:51,
II:106–107, II:167
 Grabo, Norman S. II:65, II:283
 Graça Aranha Foundation prize III:362
 Grace Leven Poetry Prize III:277,
 III:452
The Graduate (Ogot) III:333
 Graffigny, Françoise (Madame) de
II:107, II:207
 Graham, Peter. See Abrahams, Peter
 Henry
 Graham, R. B. Cunninghame II:199
A Grain of Truth (Hasluck) III:195
Grammar (Lomonosov) II:160
 “La grandeza mejicana” (Balbuena)
 II:15
 Grand National Prize for Poetry III:55
 “Un grand poète noir” (Breton) III:84
Graphite (Shalamov) III:399
 Grass, Günter III:179–181
 Gruppe 47 and III:183
 literary criticism by III:229
Grass on the Wayside (Natsume) III:314
 “A Grave for New York” (Adonis) III:8
 Graves, Robert III:447
 Gravina, Vincenzo II:184
 Gray, Elizabeth II:110
 Gray, Thomas I:237, II:105, II:304
Grazyna (Mickiewicz) III:292
 Great Assembly I:295
 Great Austrian State Prize III:192
 Great Awakening II:81, II:111, II:209
The Great Didactic (Comenius) II:59
 The Great Dionysia I:20–21
The Great Invention of Algebra (Hariot)
 II:112
 “The Greater Common Good” (Roy)
 III:376
The Greater Hope (Aichinger). See Die
Größere Hoffnung
The Greater Morgante (Pulci) II:9
 Great Fire of London (1666) II:219
 “The Great Fish” I:331
The Great Improvisation (Mickiewicz)
 III:293
Great Instauration (Bacon) II:14–15
 Great Order of Merit III:230
The Great Shame (Keneally) III:240
 Greco, Juliette III:363
 Greece, classical Attic orators. See Attic orators farce in II:92
 figures associated with I:280–282
 humanism and II:115
 influence of II:2, II:88, II:102–103,
 II:160, II:186, II:225, II:248–249,
 II:270, II:297, II:301,
 III:393–394. See also classicism; neoclassicism rediscovery of II:87, II:237, II:244
 works on II:261, II:279
 writers I:4–8, I:10, I:13–14,
 I:16–18, I:20–24, I:37, I:59–60,
 I:89–91, I:92–93, I:99–103,
 I:125–128, I:129–130, I:131–134,
 I:140–141, I:173–175, I:176,
 I:179, I:187–188, I:236–239,
 I:271–273, I:286–288, I:300–303,
 I:306–309, I:332–334
 Greek literature and neoclassicism III:94
 writers
 through 13th century I:99,
 I:110–111, I:232–233,
 I:245–246, I:248–249, I:277,
 I:288–289
 19th and 20th centuries
 III:81, III:132, III:238,
 III:393–394
Greek Lyrics (Quasimodo) III:361
 Greek mythology I:202–204, I:228,
 I:260
 Greek Orthodox Church, excommunications by III:238
The Greek Way (Hamilton) I:6
 Green, Peter I:17
 Greenblatt, Stephen II:197
 “Green Deer” (Pak) III:339
Greenfield Hill (Dwight) II:79
 Gregor, Deacon I:224
 Gregory, Horace I:229
 Gregory, Saint I:11, I:12
 Gregory of Nyssa I:244
 Gregory the Great II:286
 Gregory VII (pope) I:189
 Gregory VIII (Pope) I:79
 Grenville, Richard II:112
Griane (Bredero) II:31
 Grieg, Edvard III:217
 Griffing, Jasper I:69
 Griffin, Robert II:9
 Griffiths, Hannah II:195
 Grimarest, Jean Leonor II:191
 Grimm, Jacob and Wilhelm
III:181–182
 influence of III:180
 influences on I:124, I:232, III:316
 literary criticism by I:116
 romanticism and III:374
 works comparable to I:76
Grimus (Rushdie) III:377–378
 Grinyer, Peter I:290
 griots I:98
 Gris, Juan III:439
 Grisé, Catherine II:148
 Groote, Gerard II:286 Die Größere Hoffnung (The Greater Hope; Aichinger) III:9
 Grosholz, Emily II:73
 Grosz, George III:75
The Ground Beneath Her Feet (Rushdie)
 III:378
Groundwork for the Metaphysics of Morals (Kant) II:134
The Group (Warren) II:303
 Group III:1925 III:122
Group Portrait with Lady (Böll). See
Gruppenbild mit Dame
Growing Old Alive (Han Yu) I:123
The Growth of the Soil (Hamsun). See
Markens Grøde
 Grünbein, Durs III:140, III:182–183
 Grünzweig, Dorothea III:183
 Gruppe 47 III:183–184

- critics of III:192
influences on III:54
members of III:9, III:131, III:134,
III:179, III:209
Gruppe 47 award III:36, III:54, III:183
Gruppenbild mit Dame (Group Portrait with Lady; Böll) III:54
Guan Moye. See Mo Yan
O Guarani (The Guarani Indian;
Alencar) III:15, III:219
The Guarani Indian (Alencar). See *O
Guarani*
The Guarani Warrior (Alencar) III:219
The Guardian (British periodical)
III:302
Guardian (Trinidadian periodical)
III:446
Guardian Prize for Children's Fiction
III:115
Guardo, Juana de II:161–162
Guatemalan writers III:290–291
Guberina, Peter III:84
Gubudele and the Cannibals (Ndebele).
See UGubudele namazimuzimu
Gudzy, N. K. II:12
Les Guérillères (Wittig) III:450
La Guerra Desde Londres (The War from London; Madariaga) III:269
La Guerre de Troie n'aura pas lieu [The Trojan War will not take place] Tiger at the Gates; Giraudoux) III:169
Guerrillas (Naipaul) III:311
Guerrilla Theater III:29
A Guest of Honor (Gordimer) III:176
Guest of Reality (Lagerkvist) III:251
Guest the One-Eyed (Gunnarsson)
III:187
Guèye, Lamine III:396
Guía del lector del Quijote (Madariaga)
III:269
Guicciardini, Francesco II:108
Guichon, Marie II:221
The Guide (Narayan) III:313
The Guide to the Perplexed
(Maimonides) I:183
Guillame de Dôle I:147
Guillaume de Lorris I:116–117
influence of I:147, II:97
medieval romance and I:258
themes of I:65
works by I:259–261
works on II:224
Guillaume de Machaut II:51, II:97
Guillén, Jorge III:184
Guillén, Nicolás III:184
Guillet, Pernette du II:145
The Guilty Mother (Beaumarchais)
II:19
Guilty of Dancing the Chachacha
(Cabrera) III:73
Guinea woman (Goodison) III:176
Guinizelli, Guido I:85
Guinness Book of Records III:398
The Guitar Player of Long Thanh
(Nguyen) III:322
Gukovskii, G. A. II:46
Gulag Archipelago (Solzhenitsyn)
III:408
Gulliver's Travels (Swift) I:176, II:202,
II:280, II:290
Gumilev, Nikolay III:7, III:11,
III:185–186, III:279
Gunesequera, Romesh III:186
Gunnar's Daughter (Undset) III:436
Gunnarsson, Gunnar III:186–187
Günter, Erich. See Eich, Günter
Gunzō New Writer's Prize III:199,
III:306, III:330
Gustafson, Thomas II:122, II:212,
II:213, II:214
Gustav's Aberrations (Fischer). See
Gustavs Verirrungen
Gustavs Verirrungen (Gustav's Aberrations; Fischer) III:146
Gustavus Vassa. See Equiano, Olaudah
"A Gust of Wind" I:215
Gutenberg, Johannes I:190, II:244
Gutzwiller, Kathryn J. I:60
Guyer, Foster I:258
Guy of Blois II:97
Guyon, Madame II:92
Guys, Constantin III:41
Gvozdenovic, Nedjeljko III:351
Gwalmchai I:39
Gwylwm, Dafydd ap I:39
Gypsy Ballads (García Lorca) III:160
- H
- Haac, Oscar II:175
Haakon IV (king of Norway) I:269,
I:280
Habakkuk, commentaries on I:89
Habibi, Emile III:188
Hades I:202, I:203
Hadewijch I:40, I:118–119
Hadewijch of Antwerp II:255
hadith I:162, I:192
Hadrian (emperor of Rome) I:150,
I:184
Hāfez. See Hāfiz
Hāfiz I:220, II:109–110
Haft Paykar (Seven Beauties; Nezāmī)
I:210
Hagiwara, Sautarō III:188–189
haiku II:110–111
literary criticism on III:285–286
tanka and I:296
writers of II:18, II:139–140, II:256,
III:422
"Hail Motherland" (Chattopadhyay).
See "Vande Materam"
Haing Ngor III:456
Hair (musical) III:447
Haitian writers III:114
Hakim, "Mad" Caliph I:79
Hakluyt, Richard II:112
Hakuin I:339
Halevi, Judah I:120, I:139
Halevi, Yehuda Benjamin Samuel. See
Halevi, Judah
Half a Life (Naipaul) III:312
Hall, Claude III:207
Hall, Tony III:253
Halle, Adam de la. See Adam de la Halle
Hallelujah for a Garden-Woman (Dépestre). See Alléluia pour une femme-jardin
The Hall of Beautiful Spring (Wang Shifu) I:326
Halloran's Little Boat (Keneally) III:240
The Hallucination (Maupassant). See Le Horla
Halter, Erika. See Burkart, Erika
hamartia I:23, I:24, I:136
al-Hamasa (Heroism; Abū Tammām)
I:3
Hamburger, Michael III:49
Hamilton, Edith I:4, I:6, I:128
Hamlet (Shakespeare) I:204, II:27,
II:267, II:277, III:350
Hamlet (Sumarokov) II:277
Hammerken, Thomas. See Thomas à Kempis
Hammon, Jupiter II:111–112
Hammond, J. R. II:70
Hampton, Christopher II:146
Hamsun, Knut III:189–191, III:335
HaNagid, Samuel I:138
Handbook (Epictetus). See Encheiridion
Handel, George F. I:203, II:185
Han d'Islande (Hugo) III:212
Handke, Peter III:192–193, III:355
The Handmaid's Tale (Atwood) III:32
The Hand That Feeds You (Hasluck)
III:195
Hanford, S. A. I:58
Hanged Poems (Mu`alaqāt; Seven Odes; Golden Odes) I:120–121 history of I:298
poets included in I:13, I:140,
I:164, I:297, I:298
The Hangover (Sargeson) III:386
Hanneles Himmelfahrt (The Assumption of Hannele; Hauptmann) III:196
Hanning, Robert II:45–46
Hans (periodical) III:356
Han Shan I:121–122, I:297
Hanska, Eveline III:38

550 Cumulative Index

- Hans Staden: The True History of His Captivity* (Staden) II:276–277
- Han Xin (Han Hsin) I:290
- Han Yongun III:191
- Han Yu (Han Yü) I:122–123, I:169, I:226
- Hao Ran III:406
- Happy Days* (Beckett) III:45, III:425
- The Happy Prince* (Wilde) III:55
- Happy Valley* (White) III:448
- Hard-Boiled Wonderland and the End of the World* (Murakami) III:306
- Hardenberg, Friedrich Leopold von. See Novalis
- Hard Labor* (Pavese) III:343
- Hardouin di Galese, Maria III:110
- Hardy, Thomas III:226, III:390
- Hare and Hornbill* (p'Bitek) III:345
- “The Hare and the Tortoise” (Aesop) I:7
- Hargeul II:264
- Harington, John II:9
- Hariot, Thomas II:112
- Harith, al- I:120, I:298
- Harlem Renaissance III:317
- Harlequin II:60
- Harley, Robert II:69
- Harmonies* (Lamartine) III:253
- The Harmony of the Three (Synoptic Gospels)* (Calvin) II:38
- Harold (king of England) I:189
- Harold U. Ribelow Prize III:25
- Haroun and the Sea of Stories* (Rushdie) I:306, III:378
- Harrington, James II:121, II:293
- Harriot, Thomas. See Hariot, Thomas
- Harris, Jocelyn II:246
- Harris, Wilson III:193–194
- Harte, Bret III:210
- Hartmann von Aue I:123–124, I:329
- A Harvest of Our Dreams with Elegy for the Revolution* (Anyidoho) III:22
- The Harz Journey* (Heine) III:201
- Haʿek, Jaroslav III:194
- hashish, users of III:42
- Hasluck, Nicholas III:195
- Hassall, Anthony J. III:77–78
- Hateship, Friendship, Courtship, Loveship, Marriage* (Munro) III:306
- The Hat on the Letter O* (Hasluck) III:195
- Hatzfeld, Helmut II:285
- Hauptmann, Gerhart III:195–197
- Der Hausierer (The Peddler; Handke)* III:192
- Le Haut Livre de Graal* I:131
- Havel, Vacláv III:197, III:425
- Hayashi Fumiko III:198
- Hayashi Kyōko III:198–199
- Haydn, Franz Joseph II:56, II:104
- Hayslip, Le Ly III:199
- Head, Bessie III:199–200
- Head Above Water* (Emecheta) III:133
- Headbirths, or the Germans Are Dying Out* (Grass) III:181
- “The Head of Hair” (Baudelaire). See “La Chevelure”
- Heaney, Seamus III:114
- Heartease* (Goodison) III:176
- Hear the Wind Sing* (Murakami) III:306
- Heartland* (Harris) III:193
- Heart of a Dog* (Bulgakov) III:69
- Heart of Darkness* (Conrad) III:311, III:381
- Heart of Heaven, Hearth of Earth, and Other Mayan Folktales* II:181
- Heat and Dust* (Jhabvala) III:226
- Heaven and Earth* (film) III:199
- Heavenly Questions. See Tian Wen*
- Heavensent* (Lao She) III:257
- Hébert, Anne III:200
- Hebreo, Leo II:101
- Hebrew Bible I:47–50
- creation story in I:77
- Dead Sea Scrolls and I:87–89
- Hebrew literature. See also Israeli literature
- works I:47–50, I:87–89, I:294–296
- writers I:120, I:138–139, I:149, I:183–184, III:8–9, III:14, III:18–19
- Hecale* (Callimachus) I:60
- Hecataeus of Abdera I:92
- Hecuba* (Euripides) I:102
- Hecyra* (The Mother-in-Law; Terence) I:300
- Hedda Gabler* (Ibsen) III:160, III:217
- Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich
- critics of II:262
- friends and colleagues of III:207
- influence of III:91, III:137, III:201, III:292
- influences on II:133
- hegira I:193
- Heidegger, Martin
- influence of III:36, III:93, III:331, III:388
- influences on I:339
- literary criticism by III:208
- Heike Monogatari* (Kamo) I:157
- Heimskringla* (Snorri Sturluson) I:280
- Heine, Heinrich III:201
- influence of III:407
- literary criticism on III:46
- Heinrich Heine Prize III:59, III:183
- Heinrich Mann Prize III:59, III:304
- Heinrich von Veldeke I:124–125
- Heirs of Stalin* (Yevtushenko) III:457
- Hel I:205
- Heliodorus I:174, II:270
- Hellados Periegesis* (Description of Greece; Pausanias) I:232–233
- Hellenica* (Xenophon) I:333
- Heller, Joseph III:138
- Hello and Goodbye to Négritude* (Dépestre). See Bonjour et adieu à la négritude
- “Hell Screen” (Akutagawa) III:13
- Héloïse I:1–2
- influences on I:229
- language of I:189
- translations of I:147
- Héloïse (Hébert) III:200
- Helps, Arthur III:27
- He Lu (king of Wu) I:289–290
- Helvetius II:121
- Hemingway, Ernest
- friends and colleagues of III:368
- influence of III:127, III:372
- influences on III:39, III:163
- Hemley, Cecil III:403
- Hen, Llywarch I:39
- Henat* (periodical) III:265
- La Henriade* (Voltaire) II:298
- Henrietta Maria (queen of England) II:27
- Henry II (king of England) I:15, I:43, I:186
- Henry III (king of France) II:298
- Henry IV (emperor of Germany) I:189
- Henry IV (king of England) II:50
- Henry IV (king of France; Henry of Navarre) II:11, III:280
- Henry IV* (Shakespeare) II:267–268
- Henry IV (The Living Mask; Pirandello)* III:349–350
- Henry V* (Shakespeare) II:267–268
- Henry VI* (Shakespeare) II:267–268
- Henry VIII (king of England)
- court and associates of II:272
- literary interests of II:88, II:272
- reign of II:78, II:115, II:274
- works on II:272
- Henry, King of France* (H. Mann) III:280
- Henry, Patrick II:198
- Henry Christophe. See Christopher, Henri
- Henry Christophe* (Walcott) III:446
- Henry of Ofterdingen* (Novalis) II:207
- Henryson, Robert II:112–113, II:262, II:263
- Henry the Navigator II:57
- hEoghusa, Eochaidh Ó I:39
- Hephaestus I:203
- Heptaméron des Nouvelles (Heptameron of Stories; Marguerite de Navarre)* II:173
- Heptaplus* (Pico della Mirandola) II:224

- Hera I:202
L'Herbe (Simon) III:402
 Herbert, George III:323
Hercules Enraged (Seneca) I:276
 Herder, Johann Gottfried II:102–103,
II:113–114, II:252, II:276
Here: A Novel (Sarraute) III:387
Herémakhonon (Welcome Home; Condé) III:101
 Héricart, Marie II:148
 Hermann of Thuringia I:329
 hermeneutics II:290
 Hermes I:202
 Hermias I:22
The Hermit (Ionesco) III:220
La hermosura de Angélica (Lope de Vega) II:161, II:162
 Hernandez Cruz, Victor II:140
 Hernani (Hugo) III:212
Hérodiade (Mallarmé) III:276
 Herodotus I:125–127
 contemporaries of I:125, I:286
 influences on I:17
 literary criticism on I:92, I:307
 works by I:14, I:280
Heroic and Elegiac Song of the Lost Second Lieutenant of Albania (Elytis) III:132
The Heroic Frenzies (Bruno) II:32
Heroides (Ovid) I:227
A Hero of Our Time (Lermontov) III:261
A Hero's Battle Song (Tian) III:425–426
 Herrick, Robert I:14, I:62
 herstories III:4
 Hertzog Prize for Afrikaans Literature III:65
 Herzen, Aleksandr Ivanovich III:202–203
 Hesiod I:127–128
 literary criticism on I:173
 themes in I:137, I:202
 works by I:203
Hesitation (Lu) III:265
 Hesse, Herman III:203
The Hessian Courier (Büchner). See Der Hessische Landbote
Der Hessische Landbote (The Hessian Courier; Büchner) III:68
 Hestia I:203
 Hetata, Sherif III:380
Het Pascha (The Passover; Vondel) II:300–301
 “Heuhueh Cuicatl” (Axayacatl) II:12–13
He Who Must Die (film) III:238
Hexagon (periodical) III:294
Hiawatha II:70–71
hibakusha III:199
 Hicks, R. D. I:100
The Hidden Face of Eve (Sadawi) III:380
Hidden Grass (periodical) III:144
Hieroglyphic History (Cantemir) II:40
 Hieron of Syracuse I:4, I:37
 Hieronymus, Sophronius Eusebius. See Jerome, Saint Hieronymus of Cardia I:92
Highways Highways (Huchel). See Chausseen Chausseen
 Higuchi, Ichiyo III:204
hija (lamprooning) I:105
hijra. See hegira
 Hikmet, Nazim III:204–205, III:234
 Hildegard von Bingen I:118, I:128–129, I:189
Hildegard von Bingen's Mystical Visions (Fox) I:128
 Hilton, Ian III:211
Himlens Hemlighet (The Secret of Heaven; Hagerkvist) III:250
 Hina-of-the-moon (goddess) I:206
 Hinckaert, Jan II:254–255
Hind Swaraj (Indian Home Rule; Gandhi) III:158
 Hinduism I:154, II:262. See also Bhagavad Gita; Mahabharata; Panchatantra; purana; Ramayana
 Hippocrates I:110, I:129–130, II:39, II:61, II:237
Hippocratic Corpus I:129
 Hippocratic Oath I:129
Hippolytus (Euripides) I:102, II:241
 Hippolytus, Cardinal II:9
 Hiraoka Kimitake. See Mishima Yukio
 Hirazawa Teijirō III:223
 Hiroaki Sato I:279
Hiroshima, Mon Amour (film) III:127
 Hirtius, Aulus I:58, I:130
 “His Son's Big Doll” (Huang Chunming) III:211
Histoire de Charles XII (Voltaire) II:298
Histoire de ma vie (Sand) III:384
Histoire des Girondins (History of the Girondists; Lamartine) III:253
Histoire d'un voyage fait en la terre de Brésil (History of a Voyage to the Land of Brazil; Léry) II:156–157
Histoire memorable de la ville de Sancerre (A Memorable History of the City of Sancerre; Léry) II:157
L'Histoire universelle (d'Aubigné) II:11
Historia abbatum (Lives of the Abbots; Bede) I:41
Historia de España vindicada (Peralta) II:220
La historia de las Indias y conquista de México (López de Gómara) II:164
Historia de la vida del buscón (The Scavenger; Quevedo) II:236
Historia de los indios de Nueva España (History of the Indians of New Spain; Motolinía) II:198
Historia ecclesiastica gentis Anglorum (The Ecclesiastical History of the English People; Bede) contents of I:56–57, I:218
 influence of I:15, I:41, I:112
 language of I:189
 translations of I:11
Historia General de Etiopia Alta (Teilez) I:158
Historia general del Reino de Chile (General History of the Kingdom of Chile; Rosales) II:249
Historia militar, civil y sagrada de lo acaecido en la conquista y pacificación del Reino de Chile (Olivares) II:210
Historia naturalis (Natural History; Pliny the Elder) I:241–242
Historia natural y moral de las Indias (Acosta) II:2–3
Historia Regum Britanniae (History of the Kings of Britain; Geoffrey of Monmouth) I:67, I:112, I:189, I:219
Historia Roderici I:72
Historia verdadera de la conquista de la Nueva España (The True History of the Conquest of New Spain; Díaz del Castillo) II:74
Historical, Political, and Moral Essays on the Ancient and Modern Revolutions (Chateaubriand). See Essai historique, politique, et moral sur les révolutions anciennes et modernes
Historical Sketches (Strabo) I:288 Historic Cycle. See Cycle of Kings histories of Africa I:158
 of American Revolution II:303 of Americas II:2–3, II:152, II:273 of ancient civilizations I:92 of ancient Greece I:125–127, I:307–308 of Brazil II:156–157 of Byzantium I:16
 of Chile II:210, II:249 of China I:226
 of classical world I:93 of conquistadores II:74, II:164, II:210, II:220 of Crusades I:80, I:319 of England I:15, I:67, I:112, I:189, I:219, II:197 of English religious history I:41 of Florence II:108
 of France II:11, II:157 of Greece I:17, I:307–308, I:333 of Haiti III:84 of Incan civilization II:101

- of Italy II:108, II:169 of Jesuits in South America II:199 of the Jews I:149
Mayan II:25, II:54–55
of Mexican Indians II:198 of Moldavia II:40 of Native Americans I:81 of New England II:307 of North Africa II:118–119 of Norway III:436
of Ottoman Empire II:40 of Peru II:220
of Rome I:96, I:172, I:241,
I:270–271, I:288, I:293–294
of Russia III:235 of Spain II:118–119
of Sweden II:298
of United States II:22, II:29
Histories (Tacitus) I:293–294
History (Herodotus) I:125–127, I:136
History (Monrante). See La Storia
The History and Present State of Virginia
(Beverly) II:22
History as a System (Ortega y Gasset)
III:336
History of a Crime (Hugo) III:213
History of Astronomy (Leopardi) III:260
History of a Voyage to the Land of Brazil (Léry). See Histoire d'un voyage fait en la terre de Brésil
History of Ethiopia (Almeida) I:158
A History of Finnish Literature (Ahoas)
I:153
The History of Greek and Roman Poetry
(Schlegel) II:261
The History of Italy (Guicciardini)
II:108
History of Jerusalem (Robert and Monk)
I:80
The History of Mr. Cleveland (Prévost).
See L'Histoire de Monsieur Cleveland
History of My Calamities (Abélard) I:2
The History of New England 1630–1649
(Winthrop) II:307
The History of Polish Literature (Milosz)
III:294
History of Reynard the Fox (Caxton)
I:263
The History of Richard III (More)
II:197
The History of Rome from Its Foundation
(Livy) I:172
A History of Sanskrit Literature (Keith)
I:154
The History of Sir Charles Grandison
(Richardson) II:207, II:245
History of the Crusades (Runciman)
I:81
History of the Germanic Wars (Pliny the Elder) I:241
History of the Girondists (Lamartine).
See Histoire des Girondins
The History of the Growth and Decay of the Ottoman Empire (Cantemir)
II:40
The History of the Holy Widow Judith
(Marulić) II:177–178
History of the Incas (Gamboa) I:199
History of the Indians of New Spain (Motolinía). See Historia de los indios
de Nueva España
The History of the Ingenious Gentleman
Don Quixote of La Mancha. See Don
Quixote (Cervantes)
History of the Jugurthine War (Sallust).
See War against Jugurtha
History of the Kings of Britain (Geoffrey of Monmouth). See Historia Regum Britanniae
History of the Kings of Ethiopia
(Agrippa) I:158
History of the Peloponnesian War
(Thucydides) I:307–308
History of the Persian Wars (Herodotus).
See History (Herodotus)
History of the Rise, Progress and Termination of the American Revolution (Warren) II:303
History of the Roman Republic (Sallust)
I:270
History of the Russian State (Karamzin)
III:235
Hitchcock, Alfred III:373
The Hitchhiker (Simenon) III:401
Hitler, Adolf II:169, III:190, III:230,
III:281
The Hive (Cela). See La Colmena
Hobbes, Thomas I:308
The Hobbit (Tolkien) I:95
Hoby, Thomas II:45
Ho Chi Minh III:454
Hochschule für Gestaltung III:9
Ho Chun. See Huh Joon
Hockley, Prudence III:151
Hodges, David I:169
Hoffmann, E.T.A. III:205–206, III:206,
III:374
Hoffmann, Wilhelm III:255
Hofmannsthal, Hugo von III:113,
III:165, III:206–207
Hofmeyer, Jan III:342
“Hogwash” (Sri Sri) III:411
Hohokam Indians I:222
Hoil, Don Juan Josef II:25
Hojoki (An Account of My Hut; Kamo)
I:157
Hölderlin, Friedrich III:207–209,
III:224
Holding up the Sky: Aboriginal Women
Speak (collection) III:4
Holland, Philemon I:245
Hollander, Robert I:84
Höllerer, Walter III:209
Holloway, Julia Bolton I:167
Hollywood, writers in III:60
Holmes, Urban I:68
Holocaust
influence of III:9
Presidents Commission on III:450
U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council
III:450
victims of III:242, III:449–450
works on III:24–25, III:33,
III:82–83, III:240, III:262,
III:338, III:379, III:457
Holub, Robert III:324
Holy Grail I:130–131
and Arthurian legend I:65, I:68
courtly love and I:311
influence of I:331
Tristan and Iseult and I:309
works on I:115, I:190, I:258,
I:329–330
Holy Smoke (Cabrera) III:73
Holzmann, Johannes III:257
Homage to Sectus Propertius (Pound)
I:250
Homage to the Lame Wolf (Popa)
III:352
Home and Exile (Achebe) III:6
Home and Exile (Nkosi) III:326
The Home and the World (Tagore)
III:422
Home Ground (Brasch) III:57
Home in Three Worlds (Hayashi Kyōko)
III:198
Homer I:131–134
contemporaries of I:127
epic genre and II:86
influence of I:16, I:17, I:108, I:132,
I:174, I:236, I:269, II:160, II:175,
II:193, II:228, II:282, III:94,
III:238, III:340, III:393
influences on I:115, I:203
literary criticism on I:10, I:23–24,
I:84, I:97, I:133–134, I:173,
I:176, I:322, II:277
oral literature and I:223
themes in I:61, I:136, I:202 translations of II:226, II:228,
III:224, III:361
views on I:227
works by II:289
works on II:92
“Homesick for Motherland” (Tsvetaeva)
III:432
L'Homme Révolté (The Rebel; Camus)
III:75

- L'Homme aux sandales de caoutchouc*
(The Man in the Rubber Sandals;
Yacine) III:454
- Homo Faber* (Frisch) III:154
- homosexuality
in ancient Rome I:233
in authors III:26, III:81, III:99,
III:145, III:160, III:164, III:167,
III:295, III:302, III:340, III:371,
III:443, III:450, III:458–459
fin de siècle and III:145
persecution of III:160
works on III:26, III:302, III:459
- The Honeymoons* (Fischer). See Die Honigmonathe
- “Honeysuckle” (Marie de France). See “Chevrefoil”
- Hongjong (king of Korea) II:136
- Die Honigmonathe* (The Honeymoons; Fischer) III:146
- Hood, Stuart III:153
- Hooker, Thomas II:81
- Hopi
Coyote Tales I:75–77, I:205, I:313
tuuwutsi narratives I:313–314
“The Hopi Boy and the Sun” I:314
Hopi Coyote Tales (Malotki and Lomatuway'ma) I:76
“The Hopis and the Famine” I:299
- Hopkinson, Slade III:253
- Hopscotch* (Cortázar) III:103
- Horace I:134–136
contemporaries of I:32, I:134,
I:172, I:249, I:299
influence of I:61–62, I:63, I:168,
II:8, II:20, II:25, II:71, II:72,
II:97, II:148, II:161, II:193,
II:222, II:228, II:248
influences on I:10, I:60, I:237,
I:302
life of I:234
literary criticism on I:135–136,
I:227, I:235
themes of I:61, I:172
translations of II:160
- Horace* (Corneille) II:64
- Horace* (Sands) III:384
- Le Horla* (The Hallucination; Maupassant) III:286
- Horner, Jack III:3
- The Hornets* (Handke). See Die Hornissen
- Die Hornissen* (The Hornets; Handke)
III:192
- The Horn of My Love* (p`Bitek) III:345
- Horoz* (Dağlarca) III:108
- Hortensius* (Cicero) I:30
- “Hosay” (Laird) III:253
- The Hostage* (Claudel). See L'otage
- Hosties noires* (Black victims; Senghor)
III:396
- Hôtel de Bourgogne (Théâtre de l'Hôtel de Bourgogne) II:240
- Hototogisu* (periodical) III:285
- Houdetor, Sophie d' II:250–251
- Hourglass* (Ki?) III:242
- The Hour of the Star* (Lispector) III:264
- House Committee on Un-American Activities III:60
- A House for Mr. Biswas* (Naipaul)
III:311
- The Householder* (Jhabvala) III:226
- A House in the Country* (Donoso)
III:123
- The House of Bernarda Alba* (García Lorca) III:160
- The House of Fame* (Chaucer) I:322,
II:51, II:263
- House of Glass* (Toer) III:427
- House of Liars* (Morante). See Menzogna e Sortilegio
- The House of the Dead* (Dostoyevsky)
III:124
- The House of the Medlar Tree* (Verga)
III:442
- The House of the Spirits* (Allende)
III:15, III:16, III:271
- The House of Ulloa* (Pardo Bazán)
III:340
- The House on the Lagoon* (Ferré)
III:145
- The House Where Living Things Are Gathering* (Tsushima) III:431
- Hovnan of Khout I:86
- Howard, Elizabeth Jane III:27
- Howard's End* (film) III:226
- Howarth, William II:19
- “How Dog Came to the Indians” I:215
- Howell, Peter I:186, I:187
- Howling at the Moon* (Hagiwara)
III:189
- How Many Years* (Yourcenar) III:459
- “How the Deer Got His Horns” I:216
- How the Steel Was Tempered*
(Ostrovsky) III:337
- “How to Build a Time Machine” (Jarry)
III:225
- “How Wang-Fo Was Saved”
(Yourcenar) III:458
- Ho Xuan Huang III:205
- Hoy* (periodical) III:184
- Hozumi Ikan II:53
- Hroswitha of Gandersheim I:300
- H-shi Award III:223
- hsiao ya* I:52
- Hsieh Wan-ying. See Bing Xin
- Hsuan-Tsang (Triptaka) II:308
- Hsüan-tsung. See Xuanzhong
- Huai (king of Qu) I:254
- Huang Chunming III:210–211
- Huang Zunxian (Huang Tsun-hsien)
III:299
- Hubbard, Margaret I:250
- Hubert, Judd II:190
- hubris I:23, I:136–137
- Huchel, Peter III:211–212
- Hudibras* (Butler) II:60
- Hu Feng III:406
- Hughes, Langston III:184, III:317
- Hughes, R. B. III:241
- Hugo, Giles III:146
- Hugo, Léopoldine III:213
- Hugo, Victor III:212–213
fin de siècle and III:145
friends and colleagues of III:20,
III:308, III:340, III:443
influence of III:110, III:162,
III:344
influences on I:322, II:238
literary criticism by III:116
romanticism and III:375
translations of III:12, III:68
- Hu hai ji* (Hu-hai chi; Poems from the Lakes and Seas; Kong Shangren)
II:141
- Huh Joon II:114
- Huidobro, Vicente III:439
- Hui-pao I:325
- Huis-clos* (No Exit; Sartre) III:389
- Human, All Too Human* (Nietzsche)
III:324
- The Human Comedy* (Balzac). *See La
Comédie humaine*
- humanism II:114–116
characteristics of II:87
and classicism II:56, II:115 development of II:22 and education II:61
in England, introduction of II:196 figures associated with II:177,
II:222
influence of II:183
influences on I:254
origins of II:87
proponents of II:20–21, II:30,
II:87–88, II:223–224, II:226,
II:233, II:237, II:249
Reformation and II:47
Renaissance and II:22, II:114–115,
II:211, II:244
travel narratives and II:289
works on II:20
- Human Landscapes* (Hikmet)
III:204–205
- Human Poems* (Vallejo) III:440
- Human Rights Award III:383
- Hume, David II:133, II:251
- The Humiliation of the Father* (Claudel).
See Le Père humilié

Humphries, Rolfe I:229
Humphry Clinker (Smollett) II:207
Humulus the Mute (Anouilh and Aurenche) III:21
Hundejahre (Dog Years; Grass) III:179–180
 Hundred Flowers Campaign III:119, III:406
 Hundred Years War II:97, II:210, II:222, II:255, II:271
Hunger (Hamsun). See Sult
 “Hunger” (Tian) III:425
The Hungry Stone and Other Stories (Tagore) III:422
Hummin jeongeum II:264
A Hunter’s Sketches (Turgenev) III:433
 Huron tribe II:124
 Hus, Jan II:116
 Hu Shih III:209–210, III:299–300, III:366, III:367
 Huss, John. See Hus, Jan
 Husserl, Edmund III:388
 “Huswifery” (Taylor) II:283
 Hutcheson, Francis II:122–123
 Hutchinson, Thomas II:303
 Hu Yepin III:119
 Huygens, Christian II:153
 Huysmans, Joris-Karl III:113, III:213–214, III:315
 Hwang Sun-won III:214–215, III:215
 Hwang Tonggyu III:214, III:215
hyakushu-uta I:279
The Hydra Head (Fuentes) III:155
Hymns (Ronsard) II:248
Hymns to the Night (Novalis) II:207
Hyōsatsu nado (Nameplates, Etc.; Ishigaki) III:223
Hyperaspistes (Erasmus) II:89
 Hyperides I:27, I:141
Hyperion (Hölderlin) III:208
Hypnos Waking (Char) III:86
The Hypochondriac (Molière). See Le Malade imaginaire

I

- I, Rigoberta Menchú* (Menchú) III:291, III:353
I, Tituba, Black Witch of Salem (Condé). See Moi, Tituba, sorcière de Salem
I Am a Cat (Natsume) III:314
I Am a Creature (Ungaretti) III:437
I Am a Martinician Woman (Capécia). See Je suis Martiniquaise
 “I Am a Terrorist” (Kabbani) III:231
I Am Becoming My Mother (Goodison) III:176
Iambi (Callimachus) I:60
 “I Am Looking for a Word” (Szyborska). See “Szukam słowa”
Ibadan, The Penkelemes Years, A Memoir: 1946–1965 (Soyinka) III:409
 “I Bear Witness That There Is No Woman But You” (Kabbani) III:231–232
Ibis (Callimachus) I:60
 Ibn al-Khatib II:117, II:118
 Ibn ‘Alqama I:72
 Ibn Bassam I:72
 Ibn Ezra, Moshe I:138
 Ibn Gabirol, Solomon ben Yehuda I:138–139, I:304
 Ibn Hasan, Yequtieli I:138
 Ibn Hazm I:65
 Ibn Hujur. See Imru’ al-Qays
 Ibn Jabirul, Abu Ayyub Sulaiman Ibn Yahya. See Ibn Gabirol, Solomon ben Yehuda
 Ibn Khaldūn II:117–119, II:118
 Ibn Shaddad, Antara I:120–121, I:298
 Ibn Sinā. See Avicenna
 Ibn Zamraq II:117
Ibrahim, or the Illustrious Basha (Scudéry). See Ibrahim, ou le basse illustre
Ibrahim, ou le basse illustre (Ibrahim, or the Illustrious Basha; Scudéry) II:264
 Ibsen, Henrik III:216–217
 comparable writers III:416
 feminism in III:160
 friends and colleagues of III:52–53
 literary criticism on III:190
 unities and II:292
I Canti (Leopardi) III:260
The Iceland (Hagiwara) III:189
 Icelandic literature works I:95–96. See also sagas writers I:279–280, III:186–187
 “Iconoclast” (Okara) III:334
Icuic Nezahualpilli yc Tlamato Huexotzinco (Song of Nezahualpilli during the War with Huexotzinco; Nezahualpilli) II:203
Idandre and Other Poems (Soyinka) III:410
 Ida of Nivelles I:40
I’d Die Tonight If I Didn’t Think It Had Been Worth It (Fo) III:149
Identity (Kundera) III:245
 “Identity Card” (Darwish) III:111
I diloghi (Aretino) II:7
The Idiot (Dostoyevsky) III:124
L’Idiot de la famille (The Family Idiot; Sartre) III:389
 Idris, Yūsuf III:218
 Idu (Nwapa) III:328
Idylls (Theocritus) II:217
Idylls of the King (Tennyson) I:68, I:131
If I Die (Gide) III:167
If Not Now, When (Levi) III:262
If on a Winter’s Night a Traveler (Calvino) III:74
If This Is a Man (Levi) III:262
Ignatius His Conclave (Donne) II:78
 Ignatius of Loyola, Saint II:119–120, II:124, II:284–285
The Ignoramus (Jaccottet) III:224
 Ihara Saikaku III:204
 Ihenfeld, Christa. See Wolf, Christa
Ikhtayyi (Such a Pity; Habib) III:188
 Ilacomilus, Martinus. See Waldseemüller, Martin
The Iliad (Homer) contents and themes of I:97, I:131–134, I:136
 epic genre and II:86
 influence of I:16, I:97, I:322, II:175, III:340, III:393–394
 influences on III:226, II:228
 translations of II:226, II:228
The Ill-Fated Peregrinations of Fray Servando (Arenas) III:26
Illuminations (Rimbaud) III:371
Illusions perdues (Lost Illusions; Balzac) III:38
 Illustre Théâtre troupe II:189–190
The Illustrious House of Ramires (Queirós) III:362
Illywhacker (Carey) III:77
The Image (periodical) III:339
Image of Complaint (Faiz). See Naqsh-e Faryadi
 Images Caraïbes festival III:253
Images of Divine Things (Edwards) II:80
Imaginary Homelands: Essays and Criticism 1981–1991 (Rushdie) III:377
The Imaginary Invalid (Molière). See Le Malade imaginaire
An Imaginary Life (Malouf) III:277
 Imalayan, Fatima Zohra. See Djebar, Assia
 Imam ‘Alī. See ‘Alī ibn Abī Talīb
The Imitation of Christ (Thomas à Kempis) II:64, II:286
 Immermann Prize III:230
The Immigrants (White) III:448
The Immoralist (Gide) III:167
I’m Not Still (Frisch) III:154
Impartial Judgements in the Garden of Literature (Zheng Hou) I:290
 Imperial Order of Culture III:424
 Imperial Poetry Bureau I:157
Impromptu Verses on the Four Seasons of the Countryside (Fan Chengda) I:104
The Improvisator (Andersen) III:20
 “Improvised on the Road” (Yuan Hungdao) II:312
Les Impudents (M. Duras) III:127

- Imraz* (periodical) III:140
 Imru` al-Qays I:120–121, I:139–140, I:298
 Inada, Miles II:308
In a Free State (Naipaul) III:311
In a German Pension (Mansfield) III:282
In a Green Night (Walcott) III:447
In an Antique Land (Ghosh) III:166
 El Inca. See Garcilaso de la Vega Incas
 creation myths I:77
 myth of Manco Capac I:77, I:198–199, I:223
 works on II:101
In Catilinam (Cicero) I:70–71
The Incoherence of the Incoherence (Averroës). See Tahafat al-Tahafat
The Incoherence of the Philosophers (al-Ghazali) I:33
The Incurable Children (Cocteau). See Les Enfants terribles
The Increased Difficulty of Concentration (Havel) III:197
In Custody (Desai) III:115
The Indelible Seal (Langgässer). See Das Unauslöschliche
In den Wohnungen des Todes (In the Habitations of Death; Sachs) III:379
 Independent Socialist Democratic Party III:60
In Desert and Wilderness (Sienkiewicz) III:401
 Index of Prohibited Books II:62, II:71, II:77, II:169, III:167–168, III:238
 India
 censorship in III:356
 first war of Independence III:166
India: A Million Mutinies Now (Naipaul) III:117, III:312
India: A Wounded Civilisation (Naipaul) III:312
Indiana (Sand) III:383–384
 “Indian Cuisine” (Espinete) III:135
Indian Express (periodical) III:166
Indian Home Rule (Gandhi). See Hind Swaraj
 Indianism III:15, III:174, III:219
 Indian literature. See also Dalit literature
 Benghal renaissance III:421
 Dalit literature III:19, III:109, III:117–118, III:153 works I:45–47, I:154–156, I:181–183, I:230–232, I:250–251, I:256–257 writers I:153–154, I:315–317, III:1, III:19, III:50–51, III:80–81, III:87–88, III:88–89, III:92, III:115, III:116, III:117–118, III:157–158, III:165–166, III:166–167, III:220–222, III:235–236, III:289, III:310–311, III:312–314, III:355–356, III:356, III:376, III:389–390, III:397–398, III:409, III:410–411, III:421–422
 Indian National Congress Party III:310, III:311
 Indian People’s Theatre Association (IPTA) III:1
Indirections: A Memoir (Brasch) III:57
In Divers Tones (Roberts) III:373
Indochina in Chains (periodical) III:278
Indonesia (periodical) III:426
 Indonesia, censorship in III:426
 Indonesian writers III:426–427
 Indra I:256
The Industrious Bee (Sumarokov) II:277
Inês de Castro (Ferreira) II:94
Infante’s Inferno (Cabrera) III:73
Inferno (Dante) I:84
The Infinite Plan (Allende) III:16
The Infinite Universe and Worlds (Bruno) II:32
 “Ingeborg Bachmann Dies in Rome” (Köhler). See “Ingeborg Bachmann Stirbt in Rom”
 “Ingeborg Bachmann Stirbt in Rom” (“Ingeborg Bachmann Dies in Rome”; Köhler) III:243
 Ingrid Jonker Prize III:104, III:397
Inhibitions, Symptoms and Anxiety (Freud) III:152
Al-Inkshafi (Abdallah) II:1
 “In Looking at at Winter Orchids” (So) III:404 in medias res II:86
In Memoriam (Tennyson) III:373
In My Father’s Court (Singer) III:403
The Inner Face (Tzara) III:434
Inner Voices (Hugo). See Voix intérieures
Inni Sacri (Manzoni) III:283–284
 Innocent III (pope) I:107, I:319
L’Innommable (The Unnameable; Beckett) III:45
In Other Worlds (Spivak) III:352
Inoyiya (Otherland; Yesenin) III:456
In Porter’s Lodge (Verga) III:441
 “In Praise of Britain” (Skelton). See “De Laudibus Britanniae”
In Praise of Folly (Erasmus) II:88–89
 “In Praise of God” (Ibn Gabirol) I:139
Inquilab: A Novel of the Indian Revolution (Abbas) III:1
 Inquisition
 impact of II:282
 supporters of II:71, II:162 victims of II:32–33, II:99
 works on II:299, III:61
Inscribed Landscapes (Strassberg) I:252, I:325
In Search of Lost Time (Proust). See À la recherche du temps perdu
In Search of Love and Beauty (Jhabvala) III:227
 “Insel Seili” (“The Island of Seili”; Grünzweig) III:183
Inshallah (Fallaci) III:141
Inside (Cronin) III:104–105
Inside and Out (Cronin) III:105
The Inspector General (Gogol) III:171–172
Institutes of the Christian Religion (Calvin). See Institutio Christianae Religionis
Institutio Christianae Religionis (Institutes of the Christian Religion; Calvin) II:37
 Institut National (France) II:2
 “Instructions for My Wife, the Vice-Governor’s First Lady” (Izmailov) II:120
The Insulted and Injured (Dostoyevsky) III:124
Intercenales (Alberti) II:4
The Interesting Narrative of the Life of Olaudah Equiano, Or Gustavus Vassa (Equiano) II:87
 “The Interest without the Capital” (Rumi) I:265
Inter Ice Age 4 (Abe) III:2
The Interior Castle (Teresa of Avila) II:285
 “Interiors” (Malouf) III:277
L’Intermezzo di rime (D’Annunzio) III:110
International Affairs (periodical) III:288
 International Literary Festival III:118
 International Peace Award III:238
The Interpretation of Dreams (Freud) III:151–152
Interview with History (Fallaci) III:141
In the Castle of My Skin (Lamming) III:254
In the Dark (Ding Ling) III:119
In the Ditch (Emecheta) III:133
In the Eyes of the Beholder (Idris) III:218
In the Fog of the Season’s End (La Guma) III:250
In the Habitations of Death (Sachs). See In den Wohnungen des Todes
In the Heart of the Country (Coetzee) III:97
In the Labyrinth (Robbe-Grillet) III:372

556 Cumulative Index

- In the Shadow of the Wind* (Hébert). See Les Fous de Bassan
- In the Skin of the Lion* (Ondaatje) III:334
- “In the Storm of Roses” (Bachmann) III:37
- “In the Storm That Is to Come” (Lawson) III:259
- In the World* (Gorky) III:179
- Intimacy* (Sartre). See Le Mûr
- Introduction to Cosmology, With Certain Necessary Principles of Geometry and Astronomy* (Waldseemüller) II:302
- Introduction to Theology* (Abélard) I:1
- “Introduction to Volate” (Metastasio) II:185
- The Intruder* (Maeterlinck) III:270
- Inuit literature, Ipellie in III:220
- Inuktitut* (periodical) III:220
- “Inventur” (Eich) III:131
- Invisible Cities* (Calvino) III:73
- “The Invisible Woman in West Indian Fiction” (Espinet) III:135
- The Invitation* (Simon) III:402
- Involuntary Journey to Siberia* (Amalrik) III:18
- In Which Annie Gives It Those Ones* (Roy) III:376
- Ionesco, Eugène III:137, III:219–220, III:425
- Ion of Chios I:286
- Ipellie, Alooook III:220
- Iphigenia at Aulis* (Euripides) I:177
- Iphigénie* (Racine) II:240
- Ipnicholcomics* (bpBichol) III:323
- Iqbāl, Muhammad III:140, III:220–222
- Iracema* (Alencar) III:15, III:219
- Iraqi writers III:274–275
- Irele, Abiole III:318
- Irene (empress of Byzantium) I:16
- Irène* (Voltaire) II:299
- Irish mythology I:199–202
- Irish writers III:44–46
- Iron Earth, Copper Sky* (Kemal) III:239
- Irons, Jeremy III:16
- Iroquois literature II:70–71
- Iroquois tribe II:124
- Irving, John III:181
- Irwin, James I:206
- Irwin, Robert I:304, II:118
- Isabel de Urbina II:161
- Isabella* (Aregensola) II:8
- Isabella* (queen of Spain) II:57
- Isaev, I:27, I:140, I:141
- Isaev, Maria III:124
- I Saw a Blue Horse* (Hayashi Fumiko) III:198
- I Saw in My Dream* (Sargeson) III:386
- Ischia, bishop of II:296
- Iseult. See Tristan and Iseult
- Ishigaki, Rin III:222–223
- Ishigaki Rin Shishū* (Ishigaki’s Rin Poetry Anthology; Ishigaki) III:223
- Ishigaki’s Rin Poetry Anthology* (Ishigaki). See Ishigaki Rin Shishū
- Isis (Villiers) III:444
- Iskandar-Nama* (Nezāmī) I:210
- Islam. See also Koran
- converts to I:2, I:159, I:164
- Crusades and I:79–81
- figures associated with I:11–12, I:25–26
- founding of I:192
- influence of I:298, II:275, III:108, III:381
- influences on I:244
- spread of I:79, I:189
- works on I:285, I:331
- Islamic law I:162, I:193
- “The Island of Seili” (Grünzweig). See “Insel Seili”
- The Island of Tears* (Ogot) III:333
- The Island of the Day Before* (Eco) III:130
- Islands* (Brathwaite) III:58
- Isocrates I:27, I:140, I:141, I:141, II:188
- “The Isolation of Two Million Light Years” (Tanikawa) III:423
- Israel, works on III:231
- Israel Antiquities Authority I:87
- Israeli literature III:24–25, III:337, III:338, III:365
- Israel Prize III:19, III:25, III:188, III:337
- Issa Valley* (Milosz) III:293
- “Issues in Contemporary Arabic Poetry” (Mala’ika). See Qadaya al-shi’r al-mu’asir
- Italian Folktales* (Calvino) III:73
- Italian Journey* (Goethe) II:104, III:171
- Italian literature
- futurism in III:155–156
- genres II:60
- humanism in II:115
- neorealism in III:343
- scapigliatura* in III:390
- three crowns of II:22, II:223
- writers
- through 13th century
- I:14–15, I:83–86, I:93–94, I:107–108, I:143–144, I:167–168, I:246–248, I:303–304, I:318–319
- 14th through 18th centuries
- II:3–4, II:5, II:7–8, II:8–9, II:9–10, II:20–21, II:32–33, II:39, II:45–46, II:57–58, II:71, II:104, II:108, II:154–156, II:168–170, II:182, II:184–188, II:199, II:214–215, II:221–225, II:226–227, II:232–233, II:282–283, II:295, II:296
- 19th and 20th centuries
- III:73–74, III:109–110, III:129–130, III:141, III:148–149, III:168, III:255, III:260, III:283–284, III:301, III:302–303, III:340–341, III:343, III:349–350, III:360–361, III:417–418, III:442
- Italos, John I:16
- Italy, censorship in II:62, II:73, II:282, III:285, III:302
- Itami Jūzō III:331
- Itami Yukari III:331
- The Itching Parrot* (Fernández de Lizardi). See El periquillo sarniento
- It Is an Ill Wind That Blows No Good* (Ruiz de Alarcón). See No hay mal que por bien no venga
- It Is Written* (Dürrenmatt). See Es steht geschrieben
- Itsuka* (Kogawa) III:243
- “IV” (Köhler) III:243
- Ivanov* (Chekhov) III:89
- Ivory, James III:226
- “I Want to Sleep” (Storni) III:415
- Iwein* (Hartmann von Aue) I:124
- I Will Marry When I Want* (Ngugi) III:322
- “I Worship Mother” (Chattopadhyay). See “Vande Materam”
- Ixlilxochitl of Texcoco II:36
- Ixtlilxóchitl, Alva I:209
- Izevbaye, D. S. III:447
- Izmailov, Aleksandr II:120
- The Izu Dancer* (Kawabata) III:237
- Izumi Kyōka Memorial Prize III:247
- Izumi school II:143
- Izumi Shikibu I:141–142, I:222, I:296
- Izumi Shikibu Diary* (Izumi Shikibu). See Izumi Shikibu Nikki
- Izumi Shikibu Nikki* (Izumi Shikibu Diary; The Tale of Izumi Shikibu; Izumi Shikibu) I:142
- Izvestya* (periodical) III:139

J

- Jaccottet, Philippe III:224–225
- J’Accuse* (Zola) III:145, III:462
- “Jackfruit” (Ho) III:205
- Jack Maggs* (Carey) III:77
- Jackson Knight, W. F. I:97
- Jacobs, Joseph I:263
- Jacopo dei Benedetti. See Jacopone da Todi
- Jacopone da Todi I:143–144

- Jacques le fataliste et son maître* (Jacques the Fatalist and his master; Diderot) II:77
- The Jaguar Smile* (Rushdie) III:377
- Jāhiz, `Abu `Uthmān `Amr ibn Bahr ibn Mahbūb al-Jāhiz I:144–145
- Jakaltek Mayan literature II:141 (Jamaica) Dialect Verses (Bennett) III:49
- Jamaica Labrish* (Bennett) III:49
- Jamaican literature III:49, III:175–176
- Jamaican National Dance Theatre Company III:447
- James I (king of England) court and associates of II:14 literary interests of II:78, II:128 reign of II:127
- James I (king of Scotland) II:262
- James II (king of England) II:69
- James IV (king of Scotland) II:263
- James, Henry III:433
- James, Louis III:193
- James Tait Black Prize III:377
- Jane Eyre* (Brontë) III:369
- Jansenists II:215–216, II:239–240
- Japanese Academy prize III:238
- Japanese literature
- Bunraku. See Bunraku
 - haiku. See haiku
 - Kabuki. See Kabuki
 - Kyogen II:126, II:143
 - modernism in III:314
 - Noh (Nō). See Noh
 - works I:160, I:296–297
 - writers
 - through 13th century I:82, I:108, I:141–142, I:156–157, I:159–160, I:191–192, I:194–196, I:213–214, I:221–222, I:225–226, I:273–274, I:279, I:337
 - 14th through 18th centuries II:17–19, II:52–54, II:126, II:139–140, II:256, II:281, II:313–314
 - 19th and 20th centuries III:1–2, III:12–13, III:134, III:188–189, III:198, III:204, III:222–223, III:237–238, III:247, III:285–286, III:294–295, III:303, III:306–307, III:314, III:330, III:331–332, III:399, III:422–423, III:424, III:431, III:455, III:458
- Japanese Literature Grand Prize III:134
- Japanese Literature Patriotic Association III:422
- Jara, Faama Da II:16
- Jara, Monzon II:16
- Jara, Ngolo II:16
- El Jarama* (The One Day of the Week; Ferlosio) III:331
- The Jardin des Plantes* (Simon) III:402
- Jaroslav of Kiev I:225
- Jarry, Alfred III:23, III:103, III:225, III:424, III:425
- Jataka I:145–146, I:230, I:235, I:317
- Jatib, al-. See Ibn al-Khatīb Jaufré Rudel I:43, I:44, I:146–147, I:318
- Jaurès, Jean III:48
- “Jaw” (Laing) III:252
- Jayyusi, Salma K. III:111
- Al-Jayyusi, Salma al-Khadra III:225–226
- Jazz and the West Indian Novel* (Brathwaite) III:58
- Jealousy* (Robbe-Grillet) III:372
- Jean de Joinville I:80
- Jean de Meun I:147–148
- influence of II:51, II:210, II:271–272
 - influences on I:2, I:311
 - themes of I:65
 - works by I:116–117, I:258, I:259–261
 - works on II:224
- Jefferson, Thomas II:121–123
- contemporaries of II:95, II:133
 - influences on II:122–123, II:306
- Jejak Langkah* (Toer) III:427
- Jensen, Frede I:146, I:318
- Jerome, Saint I:148
- as Doctor of the Church I:12, I:148
 - influence of I:168
 - influences on I:254
 - works by I:177, I:189
- Jerusalem* (Lagerlöf) III:251
- Jerusalem Conquered* (Tasso) II:282
- Jerusalem Delivered* (Tasso) I:80, II:247
- Jerusalem Revisited* (Tasso) II:282–283
- “Jessie’s Spine” (Yamada) III:455
- Je suis Martiniquaise* (I Am a Martinician Woman; Capécia) III:76
- Jesuit Relations* (periodical) II:123–124
- Jesuits
- characteristics of II:124
 - disputes II:216
 - founding if II:119–120
 - missionaries II:210, II:249
- Jewish Antiquities* (Josephus) I:149
- Jewish Daily Forward* III:403
- Jewish literature. See also Hebrew literature; Israeli literature; Yiddish literature
- writers III:32–33, III:33, III:35–36, III:52, III:56–57, III:66–67, III:75, III:82–83, III:151–152, III:153, III:201, III:232–233, III:242, III:255–256, III:257–258, III:262, III:289–290, III:337, III:338, III:346–347, III:365, III:379, III:402–403, III:433–434, III:450
- Jewish War* (Josephus) I:149
- The Jew of Malta* (Marlowe) II:176
- Jews. See also antisemitism; Holocaust
- persecution by Italian fascists III:262
 - persecution by Nazis III:257, III:290, III:403, III:433
- The Jews* (Lessing) II:157
- Jews and Arabs* (Memmi) III:290
- Jeyifu, Biodun III:318
- Jhabvala, Ruth Praver III:226–227
- Jiandeng xinhua* (New tales written while cutting the wick; Qu You) II:136–137
- Jiang Bingzhi. See Ding Ling
- Jiang Qing III:406
- Jian Leng II:309
- Jiménez, Juan Ramón III:163, III:227, III:268
- Jiménez de Quesada, Gonzalo II:124–125
- Jin Ping Mei* (Chin P’ing Mei; The Plum in the Golden Vase; Golden Lotus; Xiao Xiaosheng) II:41, II:125–126, II:269
- jinshi* (chin shih) I:104, I:111, I:122, I:291, I:327
- Jippensha Ikku II:126
- Jiuge* (Chiu-ko; Nine Songs) I:252
- jnana* I:46
- Jnanpith Award III:236, III:390
- Joan of Arc II:224
- Jocelyn* (Lamartine) III:253
- Jodelle, Étienne II:225
- Jogues, Isaac II:124
- Johannes B. Becher Prize III:247
- John II (emperor of Byzantium) I:16
- Johnno* (Malouf) III:277
- John of Gaunt II:50–51
- John of Hexham I:40
- John of the Cross, Saint II:126–127, II:285
- Johnson, John William I:98–99
- Johnson, Pauline III:227–228
- Johnson, Samuel
- friends and colleagues of II:27–28
 - literary criticism by II:28, II:228
 - neoclassicism and II:202
 - works by II:28
- Johnson, Sidney I:329–330
- Johnson, Uwe III:228–229
- The Joke* (Kundera) III:245
- Joker* (periodical). See Ulenspiegel
- The Joker of Seville* (Walcott) III:447

558 Cumulative Index

- Jonathan Edwards* (Miller) II:81
 Jones, Barbara III:135
 Jones, C. W. I:41
jongleur I:311
 Jonson, Ben II:127–128
 classicism in II:56
 influence of II:58
 influences on I:14, I:17, I:245,
 I:254, I:302, II:177
 literary criticism by II:128
 Renaissance and II:244
 works by II:78
jōruri II:34
Joseph and His Brothers (T. Mann)
 III:281–282
Joseph Andrews (Fielding) II:207
 Joseph of Arimathea I:130, I:131
 Josephus, Flavius I:149
Jou pu tuan (The Carnal Prayer Mat; Li Yu) II:159
Journal and Major Essays (Woolman)
 II:307
Journal des Goncourts (Goncourt and Goncourt) III:175
 journalists II:212–214, III:141
 Journalists' Association Prize III:239
Journal of a Resistance Fighter
 (Beauvoir) III:43
Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides
 (Boswell) II:28
The Journal of Madame Knight (Knight)
 II:139
Journal of the Arts (periodical). See
 Blätter für die Kunst
Journal of the First Voyage (Columbus)
 II:57
Journal of the Plague Year (Defoe)
 II:69–70
Journals (Riebeeck) II:246–247
Journey Across Three Seas (Nikitin)
 II:204–205
Journey Continued: An Autobiography
 (Paton) III:342
A Journey from St. Petersburg to Moscow
 (Radishchev) II:242, II:290
The Journeys of Celia Fiennes (Fiennes)
 II:289
Journeys to England in Victoria's Early Days (Fontane) III:149
Journey through Genius (Dunham)
 I:101
Journey to Armenia (Mandelstam)
 III:279
Journey to Portugal (Saramago) III:385
Journey to the End of the Night (Céline)
 III:83
 “A Journey to the Skeleton House”
 I:314
The Journey to the West (Wu Chengen)
 II:41, II:308–310
- A Journey to the Western Isles* (Johnson)
 II:28
 Jouvenel des Ursins, Henri de III:99
 Jouvett, Louis III:22, III:169
 Joyce, James
 friends and colleagues of
 III:44–45, III:301, III:368, III:418
 influence of III:76, III:122, III:154,
 III:256
 influences on I:201, II:296, III:138,
 III:276
 literary criticism on III:48
Joyful Ill (Pirandello) III:349
Joy of the Worm (Sargeson) III:386
The Joys of Motherhood (Emecheta)
 III:133
 “The Joys of the Wedding Chamber”
 (Shen Fu) II:268
Joyzelle (Maeterlinck) III:270
 Juana (queen of Spain) II:295
 Juan Carlos (king of Spain) III:29
 Juan de Garay III:55
 Juan de Yepes. See John of the Cross,
 Saint
Jubiabá (Amado) III:17
 Judaism. See Hebrew Bible
Judas Eye (Breytenbach) III:63
Judith (Giraudoux) III:169
Judith, Juliana, and Elene I:218
Juju Island (Okara) III:333
 Julian of Norwich I:40, I:189, II:56,
 II:128–129, II:135
Julie, or the New Heloise (Rousseau)
 II:245, II:250–251
Julius Caesar (Shakespeare) I:245–246
July's People (Gordimer) III:177
 Jung, Carl
 friends and colleagues of III:152
 influence of III:112, III:203,
 III:372
 influences on III:206
 and myth I:203–204
 Jünger, Ernst III:229–230
The Jungle (Sinclair) III:176
 Jung Mong Joo (Chong Mong-ju)
 II:129
 Jung Yak Yong (Chong Yagyong)
 II:129–130
Junius Brutus (Canetti) III:75
 Junius manuscript I:217
The Junk Museum (Ōba) III:330
 Juno I:202, I:321
 Junto Club II:94
 Jupiter I:202, I:321
Jürg Reinhart (Frisch) III:153
The Just Assassins (Camus) III:75
Justice of the Monarch's Will (Prokopovitch) II:232
Justin (Metastasio) II:185
Justine (Sade) II:259
- Justinian (emperor of Byzantium)
 I:121, I:140
 “just war” concept I:80
 Juvenal I:150–151
 contemporaries of I:150, I:186,
 I:254
 influence of I:168, II:160
 influences on I:302
 Juvenalis, Decimus Junius. See Juvenal
 Juzjani I:35
- ### K
- Ka'aba I:120, I:121
ka'atsa narratives I:313, I:314
 Kabbani, Nizar III:231–232
 Kabuki II:131–132
 associated genres II:34 writers for II:52–53, II:281
 Kafka, Franz III:232–233
 expressionism and III:138
 influence of III:93, III:98, III:146,
 III:256
 literary criticism on III:28, III:48,
 III:173
 magic realism and III:270
 Kafur I:196
Kagekiyo Victorious (Chikamatsu) II:52
Kagero Diary (Mother of Fujiwara
 Michitsuna) I:191
 Kahlschlag (Clean Sweep) movement
 III:131
Kairi III:253
kakekotoba I:222
Kakyo (The Mirror of the Flower; Zeami) II:314
 Kalb, Jonathon III:305
Kalevala I:152–153
 as epic I:97
 oral literature and I:223
 Kalidasa I:153–154, I:181, I:317
Kalidasakavyasambhavam (Pandey)
 I:154
kama I:231
Kama Sutra I:154–156, I:231
Kamen (Stone; Mandelstam) III:279
 Kamo no Chomei I:156–157
Kamouraska (Hébert) III:200
 Kana'ti I:216
 Kane I:206
 Kanetoshi Mashita III:295
Kangaroo Notebook (Abe) III:2
 K'ang-Lo, Duke of. See Xie Ling-yun
 Kangxi (Kang-hsi; emperor of China)
 II:40–41
 Kanik, Orhan Veli III:233–234
 El Kanil. See Komam Q' Anil, Epic of Kan Kikuchi III:237
 Kannami Kiyotsugu II:205, II:313
 Kanová, Maria III:280

- Kant, Immanuel II:132–134
 influence of II:102–103, II:137, II:260, II:262, III:66, III:336, III:391–392
 influences on II:154, II:278
- Kantemir, Antiokh II:40
- Kantemiroglu. See Cantemir, Dimitrie
- Kanze. See Kannami Kiyotsugu
- Kaoru Osanai III:134
- Kao Tsing-Jen. See Gao Xingjian
- Kaozhengxue (Kao-cheng hsueh; “Empirical studies”) II:141
- Kara Kitap (The Black Book; Pamuk)* III:339
- Karamzin, Nikolai Mikhailovich III:234–235
 critics of II:72, II:105
 friends and colleagues of II:77
 influence of II:120, II:242, III:123
 works published by II:204
- Karamzinians* II:233
- Karl August (duke of Saxe-Weimar) II:102, III:170
- Karlinsky, Simon III:279
- karma* I:46
- Karma Cola: Marketing the Mystic East* (Mehta) III:289
- al-Karmel* (magazine) III:112
- Karnad, Girish III:235–236
- Karobran: The Story of an Aboriginal Girl* (Clare) III:3
- Kaschnitz, Marie Luise III:236
- Kaschnitz-Weinberg, Marie Luise von. See Kaschnitz, Marie Luise
- Kashf al-Manahij (Examination of the Methods of Proof Concerning the Doctrines of Religion; Averroës)* I:33
- Kate of Heilbronn* (Kleist) II:137
- Katherine Newman Award III:383
- Katsuragi (prince of Japan) I:213
- Katz und Maus (Cat and Mouse; Grass)* III:179–180
- Kauffman, Philip III:245
- Kauraka Kauraka III:236–237
- Kawabata Yasunari III:237–238, III:295
- Kawabata Yasunari Literary Award III:199, III:431
- Kawashima, Terry I:222
- Kay, Sarah I:260
- Kaye, Harvey J. II:212, II:214
- Kazantzakis, Nikos III:94, III:238
- Kazin, Nadezhda III:279
- Keaton, Buster III:44
- Keats, John I:19, III:103, III:255, III:310
- Kebra Nagast Chronicles I:157–158
- Keene, Donald II:54, II:281
- Keith, Arthur Berriedale I:154
- Kelly, Ned III:77
- Kemal, Yascedillaar III:238–239
- Kempe, John II:135
- Kempe, Margery II:129, II:135–136
- Keneally, Thomas III:239–240
- Kennedy, Ellen III:121
- Kennedy, Philip I:298
- kennings I:95, I:204, I:218
- Kenreimon-in Ukyo no Daibu. See Daibu, Lady
- Kenrei Mon'in Ukyo no Daibu shu* (The Journal of Kenreimon-in Ukyo no Daibu; Daibu) I:82
- Kenya, censorship in III:322
- Kenya Council of Women III:332
- Kerouac, Jack I:339, II:19, III:186
- Ketchian, Sonia I. III:11
- Keter Malkhut* (A Crown for the King; Ibn Gabirol) I:139
- The Key* (Tanizaki) III:424
- Key Into the Languages of America* (Williams) II:306
- The Keys to the Kalevala* (Ervast) I:153
- A Key to Annihilating Ignorance* (Lee Yul Kok). See Kyongmong Yogyol
- Khadija I:192
- Khal, Yusef al- III:8
- Khamse (The Five Treasures; The Quintuplet; Nezāmī)* I:210
- Khansā, al- I:158–159, I:180
- Khayyāmī, Gheyā od-Dīn Abū ol-fath Omar ebn Ebrahim al-. See Omar Khayyām
- Khel (Play; Dhasal)* III:118
- Khmer Rouge III:456
- Khomeini, Ayatollah Ruhollah III:141, III:377
- “Khor and Kalinich” (Turgenev) III:432–433
- Khosrow and Shīrīn* (Nezašmiš) I:210
- Khrushchev, Nikita III:400
- Khun Det* (Dharmachoti) III:117
- Kidnapped* (Stevenson) III:73
- Kierkegaard, Søren III:21, III:137, III:388
- Kifah Tiba (Struggle at Thebes; Mahfouz)* III:272–273
- Kilmer, Nicholas II:248
- Kim Jung Hee (Kim Chung-hui) II:136
- Kim Shi-sup (Kim Sisup) II:136–137
- Kincaid, Jamaica III:241
- King, Queen, Knave* (Nabokov) III:309
- Kingdom* (Walcott) III:447
- The Kingdom Come* (George). See Der neue Riech
- The Kingdom of Lovers* (Ruusbroec) II:255
- The Kingdom of This World* (Carpentier) III:78
- King Harald's Saga* (Snorri Sturluson) I:280
- The Kingis Quair* (or Quhair; James I of Scotland) II:262
- King Lear* (Shakespeare) II:267
- King Mark and Iseult the White* (Chrétien de Troyes) I:67
- “The King of Asine” (Seferis) III:393–394
- King Philip's War II:82, II:252
- King Phoenix* (Davies) III:112
- King Se-Jong II:114
- King Torrismondo* (Tasso) II:282
- King Ubu* (Jarry). See Ubu roi
- Ki no Tsurayuki I:159–160, I:221, II:289
- Kinsakin, Matsuo. See Bashō
- Kipling, Rudyard III:55, III:73, III:417
- Kirsch, Rainer III:242
- Kirsch, Sarah III:241–242, III:247
- Kiš, Danilo III:242
- Kissinger, Henry III:141
- Kitab al-Bayan wa al-tabayyun* (The Book of Excellence and Rhetoric; Al-Jāhiz) I:145
- Kitab al-Hayawan* (Book of Animals; Al-Jāhiz) I:145
- Kitab al-'Ibar* (The Book of Examples; Ibn Khaldūn) II:118–119
- Klarmann, Adolf D. III:44
- Klausner, Amos. See Oz, Amos
- Kleist, Heinrich von II:137–138, III:93
- Kleist, Ulrike II:137
- Kleist Prize III:257, III:285
- Klinger, F. M. II:113
- Klopstock, Friedrich Gottlieb II:138, III:208
- “Kneel Down and Lick My Feet” (Yamada) III:455
- Knight, Sarah Kemble II:138–139
- The Knight from Olmedo* (Lope de Vega) II:162, II:289
- Knighthood of Arts and Belles Lettres (France) III:112
- The Knight of the Grail* (Chrétien de Troyes) I:329
- Knights* (Aristophanes) I:20
- “The Knight's Tale” (Chaucer) II:167, II:262
- Knoerle, Jeanne II:43
- koan I:339
- Kobayashi Issa II:111, II:139–140
- “Kobayashi Issa” (Hernandez Cruz) II:140
- Kobayashi Yatarō. See Kobayashi Issa
- Kobun (emperor of Japan) I:213
- Kochanowski, Jan II:140–141
- Koenig, Eva II:157
- Koenig, Juan Ramón II:220
- Kogawa, Joy III:243
- Köhler, Barbara III:243
- Kojiki* I:160, I:214

560 Cumulative Index

- Kokinshu* (Collection of Old and New Japanese Poems; Ki no Tsurayuki, ed.) I:159, I:221
- Kokoro* (Natsume) III:314
- Kokoschka, Oskar III:243–244, III:430
- Kokusen II:256
- Kolb, Jacqueline III:24
- Kolokol* (The Bell; periodical) III:202
- Kolyma Tales* (Shalamov) III:399
- Komachi, Ono no. See Ono no Komachi
- Komachishu* (Ono no Komachi) I:221
- Komam Q`Anil, Epic of* II:141
- Komensk?, Jan Ámos. See Comenius, Johann Ámos
- Komuna* (periodical) III:194
- Konde, Sogolon I:98
- Kongfuzi. See Confucius
- Kong Qiu. See Confucius
- Kong Shangren (Kung Shang-jen) II:141–142
- Konigsberg, Ira II:245
- Konrad Wallenrod* (Mickiewicz) III:292
- Kopernik, Mikotaj. See Copernicus, Nicolaus
- Koran I:161–163
 authority of I:145
 authorship of I:192
 influence of I:34, I:164, I:180, I:193, I:265
 literary criticism on I:161–163
 v. Bible I:162, I:163
- Korean Independence Movement III:191
- Korean literature
 works II:55
 writers II:114, II:129–130, II:136–137, II:152–153, II:264–265, III:191, III:214, III:215, III:339, III:404, III:460
- Korrektur* (Correction; Bernhard) III:50
- Kosakiewicz, Olga III:43
- Kosan Kugok* (Nine Songs of Kosan; Lee Yul Kok) II:153
- Kostrowitzky, Wilhelm Apollinaris de. See Apollinaire, Guillaume
- Kostrowitzky, Angelica de III:23
- Kotik Latayev* (Bely) III:48
- Kramer, Erich Paul. See Remarque, Erich Maria
- Kranji-Bekasi Jatuh* (Toer) III:427
- Krapp, Katherine II:183
- Krapp's Last Tape* (Beckett) III:45
- The Kreutzer Sonata* (Tolstoy) III:429
- Krishnakanta's Will* (Cattopadhyay) III:81
- Krispyn, Egbert III:131
- Kristeva, Julia III:93, III:143, III:355
- Kristin Lavransdatter* (Undset) III:436
- Kroeger, Nelly III:280
- Krohn Rüdiger I:116
- Kropotkin, Pyotr III:34
- Krsna Vyasa I:182
- Krylov, Ivan II:142–143
- Krzyzacy* (Sienkiewicz) III:401
- Ku I:206
- Kubla Khan* (Coleridge) II:17
- Kubrick, Stanley III:310
- Kühn, Sophie von II:206
- Kullark* (Davis) III:3
- Kulthum, `Amr ibn. See `Amr ibn Kulthum
- Kultura III:293
- Kulubaly, Mamani Biton II:16
- Kumagai Tomihiro III:247
- Kumagai Yumiko. See Kurahashi Yumiko
- Kumar, Krishna II:293
- Kumo Sinhwa* (New Stories from Golden Turtle Mountain; Kim Shi-sup) II:136
- Kumulipo* I:206, I:223
- Kunang-Kunang* (Firefly; periodical) III:426
- Kundera, Milan II:50, III:244–245
- Kunene, Mazisi III:246
- Kunert, Günter III:246–247
- Kung-an School II:312
- K'ung Ch'iu. See Confucius
- K'ung Fu-tzu. See Confucius
- kunju opera II:282
- Kuntong . . . Chao Cha Khlab ma Mua Fa Sang* (Kuntong . . . You will return at Dawn; Dhammachoti) III:117
- Kuntong . . . You will return at Dawn* (Dhammachoti). See Kuntong . . . Chao Cha Khlab ma Mua Fa Sang
- Kurahashi Yumiko III:247
- Kursbuch* (Coursebook; periodical) III:134
- Der Kurze Mantel* (The Cloak; Naubert) III:316
- Kutuzov, Mikhail II:105
- Kwanami Kiyotsugu II:143
- Kyd, Thomas II:289
- Kyk-Over-Al* (periodical) III:58, III:193
- Kyogen II:126, II:143
- kyoka* II:126
- Kyongmong Yogyol* (A Key to Annihilating Ignorance; Lee Yul Kok) II:152
- Kyongse yp'yo* (Design for Good Government; Jung Yak Yong) II:130
- L
- Là-bas* (Down There; Huysmans) III:213–214
- Labé, Louise II:144–145
- Labid I:120, I:164, I:298
- La Boétie, Étienne de II:192
- Labors of Darkness* (Castellanos) III:79
- Labrunie, Gerard. See Nerval, Gérard de La Bruyère, Jean de II:145–146
- The Labyrinth* (Arrabal) III:28
- Labyrinth of Solitude* (Paz) III:344
- The Labyrinth of the World and the Paradise of the Heart* (Comenius) II:59
- Lacan, Jacques III:93, III:355
- Lacerba* (periodical) III:284
- Laclos, Pierre Choderlos de II:146–147, II:207
- A Lady Dies* (Falkner) III:140
- The Lady Nit-Wit* (Lope de Vega). See La dama boba
- “Lady of Heaven” (Jacopone da Todi) I:144
- The Lady of May* (Sidney) II:270
- Lady of the Camellias* (Dumas, Fils) II:52
- “The Lady’s Dressing Room” (Swift) II:279
- Laertius, Diogenes I:301
- Lafayette, Madame de (comtesse de Lafayette) II:147–148 associates of II:148, II:151, II:265, II:266
 influence of II:175
- La Fontaine, Jean de II:148–149
 Académie française and II:2
 friends and colleagues of II:147, II:190
 influence of II:160, II:174
 influences on I:232, I:235
 literary criticism on II:277
 translations of II:142
 works by I:8
- La Fontaine: Selected Fables* (Michie) II:149
- Lagerkvist, Pär III:250–251
- Lagerlöf, Selma III:251–252
- The Lagoon* (Frame) III:151
- La Guma, Alex III:249–250
- Laing, B. Kojo III:252
- Laird, Christopher III:253
- lais* I:185
- The Lake Goddess* (Nwapa) III:328
- Lakota creation myths I:77
- L'Allegro* (Milton) II:188
- Lamartine, Alphonse de III:253–254
- The Lament* (Qu Yuan). See Li Sao
- “Lament for the Makars” (Dunbar) II:262, II:263
- “The Lament for the South” (Yu Xin) I:338
- The Lament of the Lady of Ch'in* (Wei Zhuang) I:327
- laments II:217
- Laments* (Kochanowski) II:140

- Lamiel, or the Ways of the Heart* (Stendhal) III:414
- Lammimg, George III:100, III:253, III:254–255
- Lampedusa, Giuseppe Tomasi di III:255
- “The Lamp in the Clock” (Breton) III:62
- Lamprus I:286
- Lancelot, or The Knight of the Cart* (Chrétien de Troyes) I:66, I:67, I:68
- The Land and the People, and Other Poems* (Brasch) III:57
- Landaufenthalt (A Stay in the Country; Kirsch)* III:242
- Landfall* (periodical) III:57
- Landlocked Sailor* (Alberti) III:13
- Land of Carnival* (Amado). See O Pais do Carnival
- Land of Many Colors & Nanna-ya* (Condé) III:101
- The Landscape of Soria* (Machado y Ruiz) III:268
- Land Without Thunder* (Ogot) III:333
- Lane, Edward I:305
- Lang, Fritz III:138
- Langgässer, Elisabeth III:255–256
- Langland, William I:190, I:219, I:302, II:6, II:50, II:149–151, II:218
- Language in the Technological Age* (Höllerer). See Sprache im technischen Zeitalter
- “The Language of Poetry” (Snorri Sturluson) I:95
- Languet, Hubert II:270
- Lan-p’ei lu* (Register of Grasping the Carriage Reins; Fan Chengda) I:104
- Laocoon* (Lessing) II:157
- Lao She III:256–257
- Laozi (Lao Tsu) I:74, I:164–167, I:165, II:152
- Lapham, Lewis I:308
- Larbaud, Valery I:148
- The Lark* (Anouilh) III:22
- La Roche, Sophie von III:27
- La Rochefoucauld, François, duc de II:56, II:147, II:148, II:151
- Larra, Mariano José de III:104
- Larson, Charles III:101, III:142
- l’Art romantique (Romantic Art; Baudelaire)* III:42
- Las Casas, Bartolomé de II:151–152, III:219
- Lasker-Schüler, Else III:49, III:257–258, III:407
- The Last Burden* (Chatterjee) III:88
- The Last Carnival* (Walcott) III:447
- The Last Day of a Condemned Man* (Hugo) III:213
- “The Last Flight of the Quetzal Prince” II:54
- The Last Judgment* II:66
- Last Letters of Jacopo Ortis* (Foscolo) III:150
- The Last Magi* (Condé). See Les Derniers Rois Mages
- The Last May* (Kundera). See Poslední Máj
- The Last Supper* (Leonardo da Vinci) II:155
- Last Tales* (Dinesen) III:118
- The Last Temptation of Christ* (Kazantzakis) III:238
- “The Last Testament of Okitsu Yagoemon” (Mori) III:303
- The Late Bourgeois World* (Gordimer) III:176
- Latin America Between the Eagle and the Bear* (Madariaga) III:270
- Latin-American literature. See also specific countries
- magic realism in III:270–272
- modernism in III:110–111, III:298–299, III:363, III:376
- postcolonialism in III:352
- writers III:15–16, III:26, III:55–56, III:57, III:102–103, III:110–111, III:122–123, III:144–145, III:154, III:160–162, III:193–194, III:290–291, III:296, III:318–319, III:335, III:439–440, III:440–441
- Latini, Brunetto I:83, I:167–168
- “The Latter Cloud” (Kalidasa) I:153–154
- Lattimore, Richard I:5, I:127
- Laude* (Jacopone da Todi) I:143–144
- “The Laugh of the Medusa” (Cixous) III:93, III:143
- Laurencin, Marie III:23
- Laurens, Paul Albert III:167
- Lautréamont* (Sue) III:258
- Lautréamont, comte de III:103, III:258–259, III:291
- Lava* (periodical) III:139
- Lawrence, D. H. III:282, III:390
- Lawson, Henry III:146, III:259
- Laxdaela Saga* I:270
- Laxman, R. K. III:313
- Layamon I:219
- Layli and Majnun* (Nezāmī) I:210–211
- Lay of Volund* I:205
- El lazarrillo de ciegos caminantes* (Carrío de la Vandra) II:43–44
- Lazar Roitschwantz* (Ehrenburg) III:130
- lazzi* II:60
- Leaf* (periodical) III:234
- Leaf Storm* (García Márquez) III:161
- League of Left-Wing Writers III:119, III:265, III:405
- League of Proletarian-Revolutionary Writers III:44
- The learned band II:232
- Leaven of Malice* (Davies) III:112
- Leaves of Grass* (Whitman) III:319
- Leaves of Hypnos* (Char) III:86
- Leaves of Olive* (Darwish) III:111
- Leben und Leider* (Rilke) III:369
- Lebor Gabala* I:200
- Lee, Richard Henry II:122
- Lee Yul Kok (Yi Yulgok) II:152–153
- The Left Bank and Other Stories* (Rhys) III:368
- Le Breton, André (publisher) II:76
- Left Bank writers III:368
- The Legacy* (Villon) II:297
- The Legacy of Muslim Spain* (Al-Jayyusi) III:226
- Legend and Tales* (Sachs). See Legenden und Erzählungen
- “Legendary Karma Song” (So) III:404
- La Légende des Siècles* (Hugo) III:213
- Legenden und Erzählungen (Legend and Tales; Sachs)* III:379
- The Legend of Chun Hyang* (film) II:55
- The Legend of Good Women* (Chaucer) II:51
- Legends* (Bécquer). See Leyendas
- The Legends and Lands of Native North Americans* (Martinez) I:77
- Legends of Vancouver* (P. Johnson) III:228
- Le Gentil, Pierre I:285
- Léger, Alexis Saint-Léger. See Perse, Saint-John
- Legion of Honor (France), members III:17, III:34, III:54, III:99, III:303
- Legitimate Defense* (periodical). See Légitime Défense
- Légitime Défense (Legitimate Defense; periodical)* III:317
- Le Guin, Ursula K. III:461
- Lehmann, Wilhelm III:211
- Leibniz, Friedrich II:153
- Leibniz, Gottfried Wilhelm II:137, II:153–154, II:299
- Der Leichnam auf dem Thron (The Corpse on the Throne; Becher)* III:44
- Leigh, R. A. II:251
- Leiris, Michel III:259–260
- Leite, Maria II:94
- Lejeune, Paul II:124
- Lekra (Institute for People’s Culture) III:426
- Lélia* (Sand) III:384
- Le Loi (king of Vietnam) II:204
- Lemay, J. A. Leo II:273
- “Lembranas e Apontamentos do Governo Provisorio de São Paulo” (Andrada e Silva) II:7

562 Cumulative Index

- Lena (Ariosto) II:9
 Lenin, Vladimir III:178, III:185
 Lenin Peace Prize winners III:25, III:44,
 III:112, III:130, III:140, III:184,
 III:400, III:411
 “Lenin’s Will” III:399
 Lentino, Giacomo David II:273
 Leo III (pope) I:189
 Leo X (pope) II:7, II:20
 Leo XIII (pope) I:40
 Leonardo da Vinci II:154–156
 contemporaries of II:155, II:168,
 II:182, II:186
 influences on II:4
 Renaissance and II:244
 works on III:438, III:459
 Leonce and Lena Prize III:243
 León-Portilla, Miguel I:209, II:54
The Leopard (Lampedusa) III:255
 Leopardi, Giacomo III:12, III:224,
III:260–261
 leprosy II:125
 Lermontov, Mikhail III:235,
III:261–262
 Lerner, Alan Jay I:203
 Lerner, John I:247
 Leroux, Pierre III:383
 Léry, Jean de II:156–157
The Lesbian Body (Wittig) III:450
Lesbian People (Wittig) III:450
 Lessing, Gotthold I:203, I:240,
II:157–158, II:276
The Lesson (Ionesco) III:219
A Lesson in Love (Colette). See La Naissance du jour
Lessons on Stendahl (Lampedusa)
 III:255
 Le Thai Tong (emperor of Vietnam)
 II:204
Letopis (periodical) III:36
letrilla II:105
Lettera . . . quattri . . . viaggi (Vespucci)
 II:295
 “Letter from Thurlby Domain” (Brasch)
 III:57
Letter on French Music (Rousseau)
 II:251
Letter on the Blind (Diderot). See Lettre sur les aveugles Letter on the Deaf and Dumb (Diderot).
See Lettre sur les sourds et muets
 “Letter on the Rules of Russian Poetry”
 (Lomonosov) II:160
Letters (Hadewijch) I:118
Letters (Metastasio) II:185
Letters (Pliny the Younger) I:243
 Letters, Science, and Arts Lovers Free Society II:120
Letters and commands from the time of military service (Nguyen Trai). See
Quang Trung Tu Menh Tap
Letters Concerning the English Nation
 (Voltaire) II:298
Letters from a Farmer in Pennsylvania
 (Dickinson) II:75
Letters from an American Farmer
 (Crèvecoeur) II:65
Letters from an Exile at Botany Bay to His Aunt in Dumfries (Watling)
 II:304
Letters from a Peruvian Woman
 (Graffigny) II:107
Letters from England (Queirós) III:361
Letters from My Cell (Bécquer). See
Cartas desde Mi Celda
 “Letters of a Horse and Mule” (Al-Ma’rri) I:181
The Letters of Jean Rhys (Rhys) III:369
The Letters of Katherine Mansfield
 (Mansfield) III:283
Letters of Report (Cortés) II:64
Letters of the Russian Traveler
 (Karamzin) III:234–235
Letters on Familiar Affairs and Letters of Riper Years (Petrarch) II:222
Letters to a German Friend (Camus)
 III:74
Letters to Algren (Beauvoir) III:43
Letters to Menakhem (Aleichem) III:14
Letters to My Little Readers (Bing Xin)
 III:51
Letters to Sartre (Beauvoir) III:43
Letters to the Tanka Poets (Masaoka)
 III:286
Letters Written in France to a Friend in London (Tench) II:284
Letters Written on the Mountain
 (Rousseau) II:251
Letter to a Child Never Born (Fallaci)
 III:141
Letter to Christophe de Beaumont
 (Rousseau) II:251
Letter to d’Alembert (Rousseau) II:251
Letter to Herodotus (Epicurus) I:100 Letter to Maurice Thorez (Césaire). See
Lettre a Maurice Thorez
Letter to Menoecus (Epicurus) I:100
Letter to Pythocles (Epicurus) I:100
 “Letter to Soderini” (Vespucci) II:295
Let the Wind Speak (Onetti). See
Dejemos hablar al viento
Lettre à ma mère (Simenon) III:401 Lettre à Maurice Thorez (Letter to Maurice Thorez; Césaire) III:84
Lettres d’une Péruvienne (Graffigny)
 II:107
Lettres Persanes (Persian Letters;
 Montesquieu) II:194
Lettres Provinciales (Pascal) II:216
Lettre sur les aveugles (Letter on the Blind; Diderot) II:76 Lettre sur les sourds et muets (Letter on the Deaf and Dumb; Diderot) II:76
Letty Fox: Her Luck (Stead) III:413
 Levasseur, Thérèse II:250, II:251
 Levi, Primo III:262
 Levin, Harry II:176
Levisite oder der einzig gerechte Krieg
 (The Only Just War; Becher) III:44
 Lévi-Strauss, Claude I:204
 Levy, André II:310
 Levy, Reuben I:278
 Lewerkuhn, Adrian III:282
 Lewis, C. S. I:65, I:66, I:259
 Lewis, J. II:92
 Lewis, Matthew II:247
 Lewis, Sinclair III:343
Leyendas (Legends; Bécquer) III:46–47 L’Histoire de Monsieur Cleveland (The History of Mr. Cleveland; Prévost)
 II:231
 Liang Qichao (Liang Ch’i-ch’ao)
 III:299
Les Liaisons dangereuses (*Dangerous
 Liaisons*; Laclos) II:146
 Li Bai I:104, I:168, I:169, I:297, I:326,
 III:131
The Libation Bearers (Aeschylus) I:5
 “Liber ad Scarilam de Incarnatione”
 (Fulgentius) I:109
 “Liber ad Victorem” (Fulgentius) I:109
Liberation Daily (periodical) III:119
The Liberation of the Jew (Memmi)
 III:290
 “Liberté” (Éluard) III:131
Liberté I: Négritude et Humanisme
 (Senghor) III:318
Le Libertinage (Aragon) III:25
 Li Bo. See Li Bai
 Library Journal Best Book Award
 (United States) III:16
 “The Library of Babel” (Borges) III:56
 librettists II:184–185
Liebe beginnt (Love Begins; Kaschnitz)
 III:236
 Lien, Yolande III:63
 Li Erh. See Laozi
Life (Alfieri). See Vita
Life (Avvakum). See Zhitie
Life (Josephus). See Autobiography
 (Josephus)
A Life (Svevo). See Una Vita
Life, A User’s Manual (Perec) III:346
The Life and Extraordinary Adventures of Private Ivan Chonkin (Voinovich)
 II:445
*The Life and Opinions of the Tomcat
 Murr* (Hoffmann) III:206

- The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy* (Sterne) II:207
The Life and Times of Michael K. (Coetzee) III:97–98
 Li Feigan. See Ba Jin
Life in Angiers (Cervantes) II:48
Life Is a Dream (Calderón de la Barca) II:36–37
 “Life Is Brief” (Horace) I:135
Life Is Elsewhere (Kundera) III:245
The Life of Archpriest Avvakum by Himself (Avvakum) II:12
The Life of Avicenna (Juzjani) I:35
Life of Beatrice (Beatrice of Nazareth) I:40
Life of Charlemagne (Einhard) I:283
The Life of Dante (Boccaccio) II:23
The Life of Henry Brulard (Stendahl) III:414–415
The Life of High Countess Gritta von Ratsinourhouse (Arnim and Grimm) III:27
Life of Johnson (Boswell) II:27–28
The Life of Man (Ungaretti) III:437
The Life of Marianne (Marivaux) II:175
Life of Merlin (Geoffrey of Monmouth) I:112
Life of Monsieur de Molière (Bulgakov) II:190
Life of Moravia (Moravia and Elkann) III:302–303
The Life of Pico II:196
Life of Plotinus (Porphyry) I:173, I:244
Life of Plutarch (Dryden) I:246
Life of Pythagoras (Porphyry) I:248
Life’s Mysteries: The Best of Shirley Lim (Lim) III:263
 Li Gefei I:170
A Light for Fools (Ginzburg) III:168
La Ligue (Voltaire) II:298
 Li He (Li Ho) I:169–170
 Li Jinfa III:367
 “Die Lilie” (“The Lily”; Rinser) III:371
 “The Lily” (Rinser). See “Die Lilie”
 Lim, Shirley Geok-Lin III:263
Lima fundada o conquista del Peru (The Founding of Lima or Conquest of Peru; Peralta) II:220
 Lina (Arghezi) III:27
 Lincoln, Abraham I:101, II:123
 Lindblad, B. III:348
 Lindfors, Bernth III:6
Lineaje del Cid I:72
 “Lines, occasioned by the Death of an Infant” (Murray) II:199
 Linn, Rolf III:280
 Lins do Rego, José III:153, III:362
The Lion King (musical) II:34
 Li Pai. See Li Bai
 Li Po. See Li Bai
 “Lips” (Hwang Tonggyu) III:215
 Li Qingzhao I:170–171
Li Sao (The Lament; Encountering Sorrow; A Song on the Sorrows of Departure; Qu Yuan) I:252–253, I:255
The Lisbon Earthquake (Voltaire) II:298–299
 Li Shangyin I:171–172
 Lispector, Clarice III:93, III:263–264
 “List of Verse Forms” (Snorri Sturluson) I:95
 Liszt, Franz III:383
 Li Tai Pe. See Li Bai
 Li T’ai Po. See Li Bai
Literarische Bleter (periodical) III:402–403
 Literary Association III:366
Literary Capital (periodical). See Bungei Shuto literary critics II:128, II:157, II:158, II:160, II:214, II:227, II:228, II:264, II:313, III:41–42, III:52, III:58, III:93–94, III:95, III:158, III:194, III:225–226, III:269, III:274–275, III:301, III:357, III:409, III:417, III:455
 Literary Discussion Group III:237
Literary Gazette (periodical) III:404–405
A Literary History of the Arabs (Nicholson) I:298
Literary Mosaic (periodical) III:425
 Literary Prize (Association of Women Citizens) III:256
Literary World (periodical). See Bungakkai
Literature of the Hundred Flowers (Mao Zedong) III:406
Littérature (periodical) III:25, III:62, III:107
The Little Book of Clarification (Ruusbroec) II:255
 Little Carib Theatre Workshop III:446
Little Commentary (Copernicus) II:62
 “Little Dove” (Dmitriev) II:77
 “Little Flowers of St. Francis of Assisi” I:108
 “The Little Girl and the Rapeseed Flower” (Shiga) III:399
The Little Moor (Bredero) II:31
Little Novels of Sicily (Verga) III:442
The Little Prince (Saint-Exupéry). See Le Petit Prince
Little Prose Poems (Baudelaire). See Les Petits poèmes en prose
 “Little Red Riding Hood” (Perrault) II:221
Little Snake and Little Frog (Okara) III:333
The Little Thunderclap (Kong Shangren). See Xiao hu lei
The Little Trilogy (Sienkiewicz) III:401
 Liu E III:264
 Liu Tieh Yun. See Liu E
 Liu Wuchi II:43
The Lives of Animals (Coetzee) III:98
Lives of Eminent Philosophers (Hicks) I:100
Lives of Famous Romans (Coolidge) I:71, I:320
Lives of Girls and Women (Munro) III:306
Living Amongst Heroes (Ba Jin) III:34
The Living and the Dead (White) III:448
The Living Corpse (Tolstoy) III:429
The Living Flame of Love (St. John of the Cross) II:126–127
Living in Hope and History (Gordimer) III:178
The Living Mask (Pirandello). See Henry IV (Pirandello)
Living with the Stars (Hwang Sun-won) III:214
 Livy I:172–173
 contemporaries of I:32, I:172 editions of II:222
 influence of I:175, II:8
 works on II:169
 Li Yu (Li Yü) II:158–159
 La Llorona II:159
 Lloyd, Henry II:111
 Llywelyn, Morgan I:201
 Lobo, Jerónimo I:158
Local Anesthetic (Grass). See Ortlich Betaubt
Loci Communes (Melanchthon) II:183
 Lock, William II:61
 Locke, John
 empiricism and II:73, II:133
 influence of II:4, II:83, II:121, II:122, II:251
Locomotive (Tuwim) III:434
 Loerke, Oskar III:211
 Loewe, Frederick I:203
Logbook I (Seferis) III:393
Logbook II (Seferis) III:393
Logbook III (Seferis) III:393
Der Lohndrücker (The Wage Shark; Müller and Müller) III:304
 Lohner, Edgar III:49
Loin de Médine: filles d’Ismail (Far from Medina; Djebbar) III:121
 Loki I:205
Lolita (Nabokov) III:310
 Lomatuway’ma, Michael I:76
 Lomonosov, Mikhail II:159–161
 influence of II:71–72
 influences on II:232
 literary criticism on II:277

564 Cumulative Index

- London Mercury* (periodical) III:448
The London Observer (periodical) III:5
London Packet (ship) II:212
 “Loneliness” (Bing Xin) III:52, III:367
 Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth I:124,
 I:215, II:163, III:70, III:135
 Longinus I:173–174
 contemporaries of I:173, I:248
 influence of I:293
 “The Long Silence” (Nortje) III:327
 Longus I:174–175, II:247
 Lon Nol III:456
 Lönnrot, Elias I:152
 Lono I:206
Looking on Darkness (Brink) III:65
 Lope de Vega Carpio, Félix II:161–164 dominance of theater by II:48 enemies of II:36
 friends and colleagues of
 II:235–236
 influence of II:287
 influences on II:8
 Renaissance and II:244
 works by II:106, II:285, II:289
 López de Gómara, Francisco II:164
 Loptsson, Jon I:279
 “L’Orange” (Ponge) III:351
 Lorca, Federico García. See García
 Lorca, Federico
 Lord, Louis E. I:70
 “Lord, Where Shall I Find You” (Halevi)
 I:120
The Lord of the Rings (Tolkien) I:95,
 I:201, I:204, I:270
 “Lord Rendal” II:84
Lorenzaccio (Musset) III:308
 Lorne Pierce Medal III:112
 Lorris, Guillaume de. See Guillaume de Lorris
The Loss of El Dorado (Naipaul) III:312
The Lost Alphabet (Grünzweig). See Das
 verlorene Alphabet
Lost Empire (film) II:308
The Lost Grove (Alberti) III:13
The Lost Honor of Katharina Blum
 (Böll) III:54
Lost Illusions (Balzac). See Illusions
 perdues
 “The Lost Mona Lisa” (Takamura)
 III:423
 “The Lost Spear” (p`Bitek) III:345
The Lost Steps (Carpentier) III:79
Lo-t’o Hsiang-tzu (Rickshaw Boy; Lao)
 III:256
 Louis IV (king of France) I:80
 Louis XI (king of France) II:296
 Louis XII (king of France) II:172,
 II:189, II:265
 Louis XIII (king of France) II:1, II:63,
 III:443
 Louis XIV (king of France)
 court and associates of II:25, II:27,
 II:92, II:147, II:148, II:149,
 II:240, II:241
 literary interests of II:2,
 II:190–191, II:264
 neoclassicism and II:202
 reign of II:151, II:239, II:265
 works on II:221, II:240,
 II:298–299
 Louis XV (king of France) II:258
 Louis XVI (king of France) II:213,
 III:126, III:411
 Louis XVIII (king of France) III:212
 Louis-Philippe (king of France) III:414
Love: A Book of Remembrances
 (bpNichol) III:323
Love Across the Jugular Vein (Samman)
 III:382
Love Begins (Kaschnitz). See Liebe beginnt
Love in Crimea (Mrožek) III:304
Love in the Time of Cholera (García
 Márquez) III:162
 “Love Is the Master” (Rumi) I:265
 Lovelace, Richard I:14
The Love of an Orange (Ravikovitch)
 III:365
The Lover (film) III:127
The Lover (M. Duras) III:127
Lover’s Confession (Gower). See
 Confessio Amantis
 “Love’s Maturity” (Hadewijch) I:119
The Love-Suicides at Sonezaki
 (Chikamatsu) II:52
Love Vision (Boccaccio) II:23
 Iowa I:206
 Lowe, Nicholas II:61
 Lowell, Amy II:19
 Lowell, Robert III:215
The Lower Depths (Gorky) III:178
Luca (Moravia) III:302
 Lucan I:93, I:167, I:175–176, I:186
Lucelle (Bredero) II:31
 Lucian I:176
 influence of I:19, II:4, II:50, II:97,
 II:220
 influences on I:302
 literary criticism on II:280
 translations of II:237
 works by I:174
Lucien Leuwen: The Green Huntsman
 (Stendahl) III:414
Lucifer (Vondel) II:301
Lucius, or the Ass (Lucian) I:19
 Lucius Apuleis. See Apuleius
 Lucretius I:177–179
 influence of I:320, II:193
 influences on I:96
 literary criticism on I:177–179
 works by I:100
Lucretius (Dudley) I:178
 Lucumi religion III:78
Lucy (Kincaid) III:241
 Ludwig III (king of Thuringia) I:124
Lui (Colet) III:147
Luigi Pirandello (Bassnett-McGuire)
 III:350
 Luis de Escatrón. See Argensola,
 Bartolomé Leonardo de
 Luis de Góngora III:13
 “Luise Runser’s Gefängnistagebuch”
 (Scholz) III:372
 Luján, Micaela de II:161
 Lu Jiuyin (Lu Chiu-Yin) I:121–122
Luka’ ibn Luka’ (Habibi) III:188
 Lully, Jean-Baptiste II:190
 “Luminous Stars in Praise of the Best of Mankind” (al-Būsīrī). See “Burda”
Lun Yu (Analects) I:74–75
 Luo Guanzhong (Lo Kuan-chung)
 II:125, II:164–165, II:269
Lures and Glimmers (B. Diop) III:120
 Luria, Maxwell I:261
Os Lusíadas (The Lusíads; Camões)
 II:38–39
The Lute (Gao Ming) I:111
A Lute of Jade (Cranmer-Byng) I:227
Lute Song (musical) I:112
 Luther, Martin II:165–166
 contemporaries of II:183
 Counter-Reformation and II:282,
 II:284–285
 critics of II:260
 friends and colleagues of II:88–89
 influence of II:257
 influences on I:254
 literary criticism on II:38
 Reformation and II:47, II:89,
 II:244
 and science II:62
 Lu Xun III:265–266
 friends and colleagues of III:34,
 III:119
 modernism and III:300
 Lu Yu I:104
Lycidas (Milton) II:188, II:217
 Lycurgus I:27
 Lygdamis I:125
The Lying Days (Gordimer)
 III:176–177
Lying Women (Giraudoux) III:169
 Lyne, Adrian III:310
 Lyngate, John II:166–167
 Lyons, Israel II:16
The Lyre of Orpheus (Davies) III:113
Lyric Poems (Petarch). See Canzoniere lyric poetry modern view of II:79
 practitioners of II:248
 Lysias I:27, I:179

- Lysis* (Plato) I:238
Lysistrata (Aristophanes) I:21
- M
- Ma`arrī, Abū al-`Alā`, al- I:180–181
The Mabinogion I:201, II:171
Macbeth (Shakespeare) II:267, II:289
 MacDermott, Galt III:447
 Macedonius I:92
 Machado, Manuel III:268
 Machado de Assis, Joaquim Maria III:267–268
 Machado y Ruiz, Antonio III:163, III:268–269
 Machado y Ruiz, Manuel III:269
 Machaut, Guillaume de II:297
 Machiavelli, Niccolò II:168–170
 friends and colleagues of II:155, II:168
 Renaissance and II:244
 works by I:172
 works on II:108
Die Macht der Gewohnheit (The Force of Habit; Bernhard) III:50
 “Mack the Knife” (song) III:61
 Macrobius I:244
 Macrone, Michael I:202, I:203
 Macuilxochitzin. See Moquihuitzin
 “Macuilxochitzin Icuic” (“Song of Macuilxocitl”; Moquihuitzin) II:196
Madame Bovary (Flaubert) III:147–148, III:298, III:366
Madame de Sade (Mishima) III:295
 Madarali Novel Prize III:339
 Madariaga, Salvador de III:80, III:269–270
 Maddox, Donald II:98
Mademoiselle de Maupin (Gautier) III:162
Madmen and Specialists (Soyinka) III:410
The Madwoman of Chaillot (Giraudoux) III:169
 Maecenas I:134–135, I:249, I:321
Mae Nak Phra Khanong (Dharmachoti) III:117
 Maendeole ha Wanawake Organization of Women III:332
Maestro Don Gesualdo (Verga) III:441
 Maeterlinck, Maurice III:270, III:419, III:444
The Magic Mountain (T. Mann) III:281 magic realism III:270–272
 in Chinese literature III:300
 postcolonialism and III:353
 practitioners of III:16, III:78, III:103, III:114, III:142, III:155, III:161–162, III:335, III:376, III:377–378, III:385, III:392, III:441
 precursors of III:335
Magna Carta I:189–190
Magnalia Christi Americana (Mather) II:179
Magnetized Circles (Storni) III:415
 Il Magnifico. See Medici, Lorenzo de’
 Magnusson, Magnus I:280
Magnyfycence (Skelton) II:272
 Magritte, René III:373
 Magsaysay Award III:116
The Mahabharata I:181–183
 authorship of I:251
 composition of I:315 contents and themes of I:45, I:46, I:231, I:316
 as epic I:97, II:86
 influence of I:154, III:116, III:235
 translations of III:313
Mahaprasthanam (Sri Sri) III:411
mahapurana I:250
 Mahfouz, Naguib I:306, III:272–274, III:381–382
 Mahler, Alma III:244
 Mahler, Gustav III:244
 Mahmud of Hgazna I:106
 Mahony, Robert II:280
The Maids (Genet) III:164
Maigetsusho (Fujiwara) I:108
Maigret et Monsieur Charles (Simenon) III:401
Maigret Loses His Temper (Simenon) III:402
 Maillet, Antonine III:274
 Maimonides, Moses I:183–184, I:295, I:304
 “La Main ecorchée” (Maupassant) III:286
La Maison de Claudine (My Mother’s House; Colette) III:99
Maistre Pierre Pathelin II:92
Major Gentil and the Achimota Wars (Laing) III:252
 “Makar Chudra” (Gorky) III:178
 Makars II:262
 Makeda (queen of Sheba) I:157–158
 Makemake I:206
Makhzan (periodical) III:220
 “The Making of a New Zealander” (Sargeson) III:386
The Makioka Sisters (Tanizaki) III:424
Makura no Soshi (Pillow Book; Sei Shōnagon) I:273–274
Le Malade imaginaire (The Hypochondriac, The Imaginary Invalid; Molière) II:191
 Mala’ika, Nazik al- III:274–275
 Malange, Nise III:275
Malavikagnimitra (Malavika and Agnimitra; Kalidasa) I:154
The Malavogolia Family (Verga) III:441
 Malaysian writers III:263
 Malcolm (Nkosi) III:326
 Malcolm X II:87
 Malebranche, Nicolas de II:153
Malgudi Days (Narayan) III:313
 Malherbe, François de II:148
 Mali, epics of II:275
Malina (Bachmann) III:37
 La Malinche II:159
 Mallanga, Vatsyayana I:155
 Mallarmé, Stéphane III:275–277
 decadence and III:113
 fin de siècle and III:145
 friends and colleagues of III:167
 influence of III:103, III:165, III:438
 influences on II:19
 symbolism and III:418, III:419
 Malone, Edmond II:28
Malone Dies (Beckett). See Malone Meurt
Malone Meurt (Malone Dies; Beckett) III:45
 Malory, Thomas II:170–172
 influences on I:68, I:131, I:313, II:271
 literary criticism on I:331
 medieval romance and I:258
 themes of I:66
 works by I:190
 Malotki, Ekkehart I:76
 Malouf, David III:277
 Malraux, André III:137, III:277–278
 Mama Huaco I:198, I:199
 “Maman and His World” (Toer) III:427
Les mamelles de Tirésias (The Breasts of Tiresias; Apollinaire) III:24
The Mammaries of the Welfare State (Chatterjee) III:88
Mampato (periodical) III:15
 Ma`mun, al- I:2
 A Man (Fallaci) III:141
Man: A Broad Garden (Kundera). See Clovek Zahrada Srá
 Manabazho I:215
Man and Crisis (Ortega y Gasset) III:336
 “The Man-and-Woman Mountain” (Ho) III:205
 Manco Capac, myth of I:198–199
The Mandarines (Beauvoir) III:43
Le Mandat (The Money-Order; film) III:395
Le Mandat (The Money-Order; Sembène) III:395
 Mandel, Siegfried III:183

566 Cumulative Index

- Mandelstam, Osip Yemilyevich III:7,
III:278–279, III:432
- Mandeville, Sir John I:247
- The Man Died: The Prison Notes of Wole Soyinka* (Soyinka) III:409
- Mandragola* (Machiavelli) II:169
- Manet, Édouard III:275–276
- Manfred of Sicily I:167
- The Man from Sicyon* (Menander) I:188
- manga* III:455
- Mango Sapaca I:199
- Manhae. See Han Yongun
- Manhood (Leiris). See La Règle du jeu
- The Man in the Rubber Sandals* (Yacine). See L'Homme aux sandales de caoutchouc
- Mankiller, Wilma I:216–217
- Mankind* II:67
- Mann, Heinrich III:280
- Mann, Thomas III:280–282
 decadence and III:113
 family of III:280
 literary criticism by III:256
- Mann Booker Prize. See Booker Prize
- Man of Lightning. See Komam Q'Anil, Epic of
- The Man of Mode* (Etherege) II:59
- A Man of the People* (Achebe) III:7
- Manoni, Octave III:84
- Manon Lescaut* (Prévost) I:66, II:232
- The Manor* (Singer) III:403
- Manrique, Jerónimo (bishop of Avila) II:161
- Man's Fate* (Malraux) III:278
- Mansfield, Katherine III:282–283, III:302
- The Mansions and the Shanties: The Making of Modern Brazil* (Freyre) III:153
- Man's Search for Values* (Peretz) III:347
- Mansur, Nuh Ibn I:34
- Mansūr, al- I:33
- The Manticore* (Davies) III:112
- mantras* I:256
- Manuel I (emperor of Byzantium) I:16
- The Man Who Loved Children* (Stead) III:413
- The Man Without Qualities* (Musil) III:307
- “Manwydan, Son of Llyr” I:201
- Manyoshu* (The Ten Thousand Leaves; The Ten Thousand Ages; Otomo, ed.) I:214, I:225–226
- Manzoni, Alessandro III:283–284
- Mao Dun (Mao Tun) III:366–367
- Mao Zedong III:91, III:119, III:158, III:405, III:406, III:454
- A Map of Virginia and The Proceedings of the English Colony in Virginia* (Smith) II:273
- Mapuche tribes II:249
- Marais, Jean III:97
- Maran, René III:317
- Marburger Literature Prize III:182
- Marcabru I:44, I:312
- Marcel, Gabriel III:136
- March, Ausiàs II:172
- Marcha* (periodical) III:335
- Marco Polo and the Discovery of the World* (Lerner) I:247
- Marcus Annaeus Lucanus. See Lucan
- Marcus Aurelius Antoninus (emperor of Rome) I:110, I:184–185
- La Maréchale D'Ancre* (Vigny) III:443
- Il Marescalco* (The Marescalco; Aretino) II:8
- Maresuke Nogi III:303
- Marfarka the Futurist* (Marinetti) III:285
- Margareta, countess of Cleve I:124
- Marguerite de Crayencour. See Yourcenar, Marguerite
- Marguerite de Navarre II:172–173
- Les Marguerites de la Marguerite des Princesses* (The Pearls of the Pearl of Princesses; Marguerite de Navarre) II:173
- Maria Stuart* (Schiller) I:154
- Maria Theresa (archduchess of Austria) II:184
- Marie de Champagne I:67
- Marie de France I:185–186
 influence of I:190, II:171
 influences on I:235, I:311
 medieval romance and I:258
 popularity of II:142
 themes of I:65, I:67
 works by I:310, II:91, II:271
- Marieke van Nimwegen II:173–174
- Marie Magdeleine* (Maeterlinck) III:270
- Mariken van Nieuweghen. See Marieke van Nimwegen
- Mariken van Nieuweghen* (film) II:174
- Marília de Dirceu* (Gonzaga) II:100
- Marina, Doña II:159
- Le Marin de Gibraltar* (M. Duras). See The Sailor from Gibraltar
- Marinetti, Filippo Tommaso III:155–156, III:284–285
- Maris, Hyllus III:3
- Marivaux, Pierre Carlet de Chamblain de II:60, II:174–175
- Markens Grøde* (The Growth of the Soil; Hamsun) III:190
- “Marketwoman” (Neto) III:320
- Mark Twain society III:445
- Marley, Bob III:288
- Marlowe, Christopher II:175–177
 influence of II:103, III:170, III:446
 influences on I:203, I:229
- Renaissance and II:244
 works by II:289
- Maro, Publius Virgilius. See Virgil
- Maron, Monika III:285
- Marot, Clément II:115, II:148, II:177
- Marot, Jean II:177
- Marquette, Jacques II:124
- The Marriage* (Gombrowicz) III:172–173
- The Marriage of Figaro* (Beaumarchais) II:19
- The Marriage of Figaro* (Mozart) II:19
- Mars I:202–203
- Marschalk, Margaret III:196
- Marsden, W. I:247
- Martereau* (Sarraute) III:387
- Marthe, histoire d'une fille* (“Martha, the story of a girl”; Huysmans) III:213, III:315
- Martial I:186–187
 contemporaries of I:150
 influence of I:168, II:160
 influences on I:302
 life of I:253
 literary criticism by I:63
- Martialis, Marcus Valerius. See Martial
- Martinez, David I:77
- Martinican writers III:84–86
- The Martyrology* (bpNichol) III:323
- The Martyrs* (Chateaubriand) III:87
- Maru* (Head) III:200
- Marulić, Marko II:177–178
- Marvell, Andrew I:62
- Marx, Karl
 friends and colleagues of III:101
 influence of III:84, III:238, III:298
 influences on II:133
- Marx Brothers II:60, II:92
- Mary* (Nabokov) III:309
- Mary: Or a Test of Honour* (Rowson) II:253
- The Maryland Muse* (Cook) II:61
- Mary Magdalene* II:67
- Mary of Burgundy II:115
- Mary Queen of Scots II:260, III:391
- Mary Stuart* (Schiller) II:260, III:391
- Marzials, Frank I:80
- Masao, Fukuda III:222
- Masaoka Shiki III:285–286
- Masaoka Tsunenori. See Masaoka Shiki
- Mascagni, Pietro III:441
- Mascolo, Dionys III:127
- Masefield, John I:263
- Mask and Trefoil* (Storni) III:415
- The Masked Dinner* (Anouilh). See Poor Bits
- Masks* (Brathwaite) III:58

- Masks* (Enchi) III:134
The Masque of Beauty (Jonson) II:127–128
The Masque of Blackness (Jonson) II:127–128
The Masque of Queens (Jonson) II:127–128
Massachusetts Magazine (Murray) II:199
Massachusetts Review (periodical) III:183
Massachusetts Spy (Warren) II:303
The Massacre at Paris (Marlowe) II:176
Massenet, Jules II:232
Masson, André III:260
The Master and Margarita (Bulgakov) III:69
The Master of Hestviken (Undset) III:436
The Master of Killarney (Prévoist). See Doyen de la Killarine
The Master of Petersburg (Coetzee) III:97–98
The Masterpiece (Zola) III:463
The Masters and the Slaves: A Study in the Development of Brazilian Civilization (Freyre) III:153
Materials for the Philosophy of the History of Mankind (Herder) II:114
“Math, Son of Mathonwy” I:201
Mather, Cotton II:94, II:178–179, II:179
Mather, Increase II:178, II:179–180
Mather, Richard II:82, II:178, II:179
Mathnawi (Poem on Hidden Meaning; Rumi) I:265–266
Matigari (Ngugi) III:322
Mating Birds (Nkosi) III:326
Matisse, Henri I:203
Matsukaze (Zeami) II:313
Matsuo, Bashō. See Bashō
Matsuo Munefusa. See Bashō
Mattathias, Joseph ben. See Josephus, Flavius
Matter of Britain I:257, I:258
Matter of Charlemagne I:257
Matter of Rome I:257, I:258
Matthews, Brenda III:112
Matthews, Brian III:31
Matthews, Jackson III:86
Maui I:207
Maupassant, Guy de III:286–287
 fin de siècle and III:145
 influence of III:110
 influences on III:148
 naturalism and III:315
Mauriac, François III:450
Maute de Fleurville, Mathilde III:443
Mawaquif (periodical) III:8
Maxim Gorki Theater III:304
Maximilian (Holy Roman Emperor) II:30, II:115
The Maxims of Rochefoucauld (La Rochefoucauld). See Réflexions ou sentences et maxims morales
Mayakovsky, Vladimir III:287–288
 friends and colleagues of III:432
 influence of III:25, III:204
 literary criticism on III:279
Mayan literature II:25–26, II:141, II:180–182, II:184, II:229–230, II:239
Mayflower Compact II:29
May Fourth Movement II:159, III:209, III:265, III:300, III:366
Mayotte Capécia ou l'Alienation selon Fanon III:76
Mazisi Kunene Library III:246
Mazumdar, Anita. See Desai, Anita
Mbari Poetry Prize III:327
McCarthy, Terence I:258
McClelland, Bruce III:279
McCulloh, William I:174
McKenzie, Kenneth I:86
McLeod, Pauline III:3
McNeilly, Mark I:290
Meaning and Form (periodical). See Sinn und Form
“Meanings” (Walcott) III:447
Meanjin Papers (periodical) III:451
Meatless Days (Suleri) III:417
Meat Out of the Eater (Wigglesworth) II:305
Mechthild of Magdeburg I:40
Medalla d'Oro de las Bellas Artes (Spain) III:29
Medal of Brothers Green III:144
Medb (queen of Connacht) I:200
Medea (Euripides) I:91, I:102, II:292
Medea (Ovid) I:227
Medea (Seneca) I:276
Medici, Cosimo de' II:56
Medici, Giuliano de' II:182, II:226
Medici, Giulio de' II:7
Medici, Lorenzo de' II:182–183
 friends and colleagues of II:186, II:226, II:227, II:233
 humanism and II:244
Medici, Lorenzo di Pier Francesco de' II:295
Medici family II:168–169, II:182, II:186, II:244, II:295 medicine. See science, mathematics and medicine Medici Prize III:129 medieval literature
 allegory in II:6
 characteristics of I:167
 drama I:197–198, II:90 epic poetry I:283, I:285
 fabliaux II:91–92
 influence of II:60
 influences on I:11, I:41, I:51, I:181, I:187, I:189–190, I:217, I:235, I:241, I:300, I:322
 literary criticism on I:190 literary genres I:44 romance I:257–259
 characteristics of I:211–212
 development of I:67
 influence of I:43
 influences on I:147, I:259, I:311, I:329
 literary criticism on I:258–259
 origins of I:190, I:257
 themes of I:65, II:48
 v. epic II:247
 sonnets in II:274
 themes of I:61, I:71, I:115–116, I:229, I:262, I:309
 Tristan and Iseult in I:186 medieval philosophy, influences on I:11, I:19, I:23, I:244, I:248, I:249
Meditations (Aurelius) I:184–185
Meditations on First Philosophy (Descartes) II:73
Meditations on Hunting (Ortega y Gasset) III:336
Meditations on Quixote (Ortega y Gasset) III:336
Méditations Poétiques (Poetical Meditations; Lamartine) III:253, III:254
The Medium (Murray) II:200
Meeks, Brian III:288–289
Meerbeke, Margareta van II:255
Megasthenes I:92
“Megha Duuta” (“The Cloud Messenger”; Kalidasa) I:153–154
Mehta, Gita III:289
Meiji (emperor of Japan) III:303
Meiji University Chancellor's Award III:247
Meilyr I:39
Meistergesang tradition II:257
Melancholy (Jiménez). See Melanconia
Melanchthon, Philipp I:254, II:183
Melanconia (Melancholy; Jiménez) III:227
Meliador (Froissart) II:97
Mélite (Corneille) II:63
Melmoth, Sebastian I:233
melodramma II:185
Melon, Alfred III:184
Melville, Herman II:39, III:343
Memed, My Hawk (Kemal) III:239
Memmi, Albert III:289–290
Memmius I:62
Mémoires (Perrault) II:221

- Mémoires et aventures d'un homme de qualité qui s'est retiré du monde* (Memoirs of a Man of Quality Retired from the World; Prévost) II:231
- memoirists. See diarists and memoirists
- Memoir on Ancient and Modern Russia* (Karamzin) III:235
- Memoirs* (Beaumarchais) II:19
- Memoirs* (Neruda) III:319
- Memoirs from Beyond the Tomb* (Chateaubriand) III:87
- Memoirs from the Women's Prison* (Sadawi) III:380
- Memoirs of a Cavalier* (Defoe) II:69
- Memoirs of a Dutiful Daughter* (Beauvoir) III:42
- Memoirs of a Man of Quality Retired from the World* (Prévost). See Mémoires et aventures d'un homme de qualité qui s'est retiré du monde
- Memoirs of an Egoist* (Stendahl) III:414
- Memoirs of a Peon* (Sargeson) III:386
- Memoirs of a Time of Immataturity* (Gombrowicz) III:172
- Memoirs of a Woman Doctor* (Sadawi) III:380
- Memoirs of Hadrian* (Yourcenar) III:458
- Memoirs on the Court of France 1688–1689* (Lafayette) II:147
- Memorabilia* (Xenophon) I:282, I:332
- A Memorable History of the City of Sancerre* (Léry). See Histoire memorable de la ville de Sancerre
- Memorable Providences, Relating to Witchcrafts and Possessions* (Mather) II:179
- The Memorandum* (Havel) III:197
- Memories of Agapito Goiba* (Gonçalves Dias) III:219
- Memory for Forgetfulness* (Darwish) III:111
- Memory of Snow and Dust* (Breytenbach) III:64
- Menaechmi* (The Twin Brothers; Plautus) I:240
- Ménage II:265
- Menander I:187–188
influence of I:21, I:174, I:240, I:299, II:58
influences on I:302
translations of I:299
- Menchú, Rigoberta III:290–291, III:353
- Mencius I:74
- Mendelsohn, Daniel I:102, I:273
- Mendez, Alfonso I:158
- “Mending” (De Kok) III:113–114
- Menéndez y Pelayo II:15
- Meng Jiao (Meng Chiao) I:122
- “Meng Ke” (Ding Ling) III:119
- The Men of the Marshes* (Shi Naian and Luo Guanzhong). See Shuihuzhuan
- Mensagem* (Pessoa) III:349
- mental illness
as subject matter III:75 victims of III:30, III:40, III:41, III:42, III:82–83, III:146, III:151, III:172, III:194, III:208, III:225, III:259, III:286–287, III:320, III:325, III:327, III:416, III:430, III:457
- “The Men Who Made Australia” (Lawson) III:259
- Menyelek I:158
- Menzogna e Sortilegio* (House of Liars; Morante) III:302
- Merchant, Ismail III:226
- Mercier, Louis-Sébastien II:293
- Mercure Galant* (periodical) II:147
- Mercury I:202
- The Merry Wives of Windsor* (Shakespeare) II:267–268
- Mertens, Volker I:124
- Merwin, W. S. II:187, II:272
- A merye jest of a man that was called Howleglas* (Copland, trans.) II:287
- Mesmer, Franz Anton III:37
- Mesoamerican mythology II:183–184. See also Aztec literature; Mayan literature; Toltec culture
- Messalina (empress of Rome) I:275
- The Messenger of Europe* (periodical). See Vestnik Evropy
- Messerer, Boris III:11
- Messiah* (Klopstock) II:138
- Metacomet (King Philip) II:252
- Metamorphoses* (The Golden Ass; Apuleius) I:18–19, II:270
- Metamorphoses* (Ovid)
contents and themes of I:228–229
influence of II:6, II:107
influences on I:60, I:202
literary criticism on I:305
translations of II:198
- “The Metamorphosis” (Kafka) III:232–233
- Metaphysics* (Aristotle) I:23
- Metaphysics of Ethics* (Kant) II:133
- Metastasio, Pietro II:184–185
- Methodius I:225
- metics* I:179
- Metrical Letters* (Petrarch) II:222
- Metropolis* (film) III:138
- Metrostroevets* (periodical) III:10
- Metzger, Michael and Erika III:165
- Meun, Jean de. See Jean de Meun
- Mexican literature II:93
- Mexican Songs* (Bierhorst, trans.). See Cantares mexicanas
- The Mexican Thinker* (periodical) II:93
- Mexican writers III:79, III:154–155, III:344–345, III:429–430
- Miaha* (Ogot) III:333
- Michael, Ian I:73
- Michael VII (emperor of Byzantium) I:15
- Michaux, Henri III:291–292
- Michelangelo Buonarroti II:185–188
classicism in II:56
contemporaries of II:182, II:186
humanism and II:115, II:244
influences on II:226
- Michelle's Lipstick* (Hayashi Kyōko) III:198
- Michie, James I:187, II:149
- Mickiewicz, Adam III:292–293
- Midang. See So Chōng-ju
- Midaq Alley* (Mahfouz). See Zuqaq al-Midaqq
- Midaregami* (Tangled Hair; Yosano) III:458
- “Midday” (Parini) II:214
- Middle Ages I:188–191. See also medieval literature; medieval philosophy asceticism in I:108
characteristics of II:87
courtly love tradition and I:313
Doctors of the Church in I:148 ending of II:243–244
hymns of I:144
intellectual authorities in II:33 literary criticism in I:176 mythology in I:199
Neoplatonism in I:139 periods in I:188 social concepts of I:64–66, I:116
as unsettled age II:23 women in I:66, I:94, I:119, I:129, I:190, I:258
- “The Middle Ages” (Mishima) III:295
- The Middle Passage: Impression of Five Societies—British, French, and Dutch—in the West Indies* (Naipaul) III:312
- Middle Scots Poets II:262–263
- Midnight* (Mao Dun) III:367
- Midnight's Children* (Rushdie) III:377–378
- Midrash I:163, I:295–296
- Midsummer* (Walcott) III:447
- Midsummer Cut* (Grünzweig). See Mittsommerschnitt
- Midsummer Night's Dream* (Shakespeare) I:19
- Miguel Street* (Naipaul) III:175, III:311
- Milan, duke of II:210
- Milcah Martha Moore's Book* (Moore, ed.) II:195

- Miles Franklin Award III:31, III:77, III:239
- Miles Gloriosus* (The Braggart Soldier; Plautus) I:240
- Milestones* (Tsvetaeva) III:432
- Il milione* (Polo) I:246–248
- The Military Necessity* (Vigny). See Servitude et grandeur militaires
- Miller, Barbara Stoler I:47
- Miller, Henry III:83
- Miller, Perry II:81, II:180
- “The Miller’s Tale” (Chaucer) II:91
- Milosavljevic, Pedja III:351
- Milosz, Czeslaw III:293–294
- Milosz, Oscar III:293
- Milton, John II:188–189
- comparable authors II:205
- influence of I:68, II:121, II:212, II:304, III:112, III:228, III:446
- influences on I:17, I:128, I:203, I:322, II:39, II:283, II:290, II:301
- literary criticism on II:277
- pastorals and II:217
- works by I:97
- The Mimic Men* (Naipaul) III:312
- Mimnermus I:249
- Minas Conspiracy II:100
- Mind* (periodical) III:191
- Mine Boy* (Abrahams) III:5, III:250
- The Miner* (Natsume) III:314
- Minerva I:202
- Minna von Barnhelm* (Lessing) II:157
- Minnelieder* I:324, I:329
- Minnelli, Vincente III:99
- Minnesang* tradition I:324
- Minshall, Peter III:253
- Minsky, Marvin III:355
- minstrels I:311
- Mirabeau, Honoré-Gabriel Riqueti, comte de II:251
- Mirabeau, Octave III:270
- Le Miracle de Théophile* (The Miracle of Théophile; Rutebeuf) I:266–267
- miracle plays I:190, I:194, I:198, II:66–68
- Miramar* (Mahfouz) III:273
- Mirgorod* (Gogol) III:171
- Le Miroir de l’âme pécheresse* (Mirror of the Sinful Soul; Marguerite de Navarre) II:173
- Miron, Gaston III:294
- “The Mirror” (Machado de Assis) III:267
- The Mirror of Eternal Blessedness* (Rusbroec) II:255
- Mirror of Man* (Gower). See Speculum Meditantis
- The Mirror of Nature* (Davies) III:113
- The Mirror of the Flower* (Zeami). See Kakyō
- Mirror of the Sinful Soul* (Marguerite de Navarre). See Miroir de l’âme pécheresse
- “Mirza” (Staël) III:411
- The Misadventures of Tim McPick* (Curzon) I:233
- The Misanthrope* (Molière) II:190
- Miscellanies, Moral and Instructive* (Moore) II:195
- Miscellany* (Poliziano) II:227
- The Mischief* (Djebar). See La Soif
- Mischief-Makers* (Krylov) II:142
- The Miser* (Molière) I:240, II:190
- Miserable Miracle* (Michaux) III:291
- Les Misérables* (Broadway musical) III:212
- Les Misérables* (Hugo) III:145, III:213, III:375
- Mishima: A Vision of the Void* (Yourcenar) III:459
- Mishima Yukio III:294–295
- Mishnah I:295–296
- Mishnah Torah* (Repetition of the Torah; Maimonides) I:183, I:295
- The Misogynist* (Lessing) II:157
- missionaries, to Native Americans II:2–3, II:6, II:81–82, II:123–124, II:151–152, II:198, II:209, II:210, II:230, II:231, II:249, II:285
- The Mission of the University* (Ortega y Gasset) III:336
- Miss Julie* (Strindberg) III:416
- Miss Lou. See Bennett, Louise
- Miss Quixote and Her Cousin* (Fernández de Lizardi) II:93
- Miss Sara Sampson* (Lessing) II:157
- “Miss Sophie’s Diary” (Ding Ling) III:119
- “Missy” III:99
- Mist* (Unamuno y Jugo) III:435
- Mr. Head* (Valéry) III:438
- Mr. Johnson* (Cary) III:6
- Mr. Stone and the Knight’s Companion* (Naipaul) III:311
- Mistral, Frédéric III:296
- Mistral, Gabriela III:135, III:296
- Mistry, Rohinton III:296–297
- The Mists of Avalon* (Bradley) I:68
- Mitchell, Stephen I:166
- Mitchell, Tony III:149
- “Mithaiwalla” (“The Vendor of Sweets”; Narayan) III:313
- Mithridate* (Racine) II:240
- Mitte des Lebens* (Nina; Rinsler) III:372
- Mitterrand, François III:63
- Mittsommerschnitt* (Midsummer Cut; Grünzweig) III:183
- A Mixture of Frailties* (Davies) III:112
- Miyoshi Shoraku II:281
- Miyoshi Tatsujii III:423
- Mizrahi* III:52
- Mlada Bosnia III:21
- Mme. Gervaisais* (Goncourt and Goncourt) III:175
- Moby Dick* (Melville) III:343
- Mocedades del Cid* (Castro) I:72
- Mochi. See Wang Wei
- Mo-ch’i. See Wang Wei
- mock wills II:297
- Moderator Cantabile* (M. Duras) III:127
- Modern Cairo* (Mahfouz). See Al-Qahirah al-jadidah
- modernism III:298–300
- characteristic themes in III:233
- Chinese III:47, III:158, III:299–300, III:366
- Generation of 1898 and III:163
- influence of III:439
- influences on III:42
- Japanese III:314
- Latin-American III:110–111, III:298–299, III:363, III:376
- postmodernism and III:354–355
- practitioners of III:7, III:68, III:90, III:104, III:105, III:110–111, III:158, III:233, III:265, III:269, III:276, III:314
- realism and III:365
- Spanish III:269
- symbolism and III:418–419
- works on III:8
- modernismo III:298–299. See also modernism, Latin-American
- Modern Odes* (Quental) III:363
- Modern Times* (film) III:341
- Modersohn-Becker, Paula III:51
- “A Modest Proposal” (Swift) II:279–280
- Mofolo-Plomer Award III:317
- Mohammad, Shams ud-Dīn. See Hāfiz
- Mohammed. See Muhammad
- Mohammed (prophet) II:47
- Moi, Tituba, sorcière de Salem* (I, Tituba, Black Witch of Salem; Condé) III:101
- moksha* I:46
- Molière (Jean-Baptiste Poquelin) II:189–192
- Académie française and II:2
- adaptations by I:300
- career of II:64
- and comedy of manners II:58
- friends and colleagues of II:21, II:240, II:241
- influence of II:157, II:288, III:22
- influences on I:240, I:245, II:21, II:60
- literary criticism on II:63, II:175, II:191, II:277, III:308
- neoclassicism and II:202
- translations of II:137

570 Cumulative Index

- Molière, A Theatrical Life* (Scott) II:190
Molière and the Comedy of Intellect (Hubert) II:190
 Molina, Felipe I:336
 Mollel, Tololwa II:10
Moll Flanders (Defoe) II:69, II:70, III:343
Molloy (Beckett) III:45
Momus (Alberti) II:3
Monadology (Leibniz) II:153–154
Mona Lisa III:23
Monarchia (Monarchy; Dante) I:83
Monarchy (Dante). See Monarchia
 “The Monastery” (Kurahashi) III:247
 Mone, F. J. I:118
The Money-Order (film). See Le Mandat
The Money-Order (Sembène). See Le Mandat
Monkey (Inada and Carroll) [anime] II:308
Monkey (Saiyuki; television show) II:308
Monkey Magic (Saiyuki; television show) II:308
Monkfish Moon (Gunesevara) III:186
 Monmouth, duke of II:69
Monna Vanna (Maeterlinck) III:270
Monologue (Kundera). See Monology
 monologues, pastoral II:217
Monology (Monologues; Kundera) III:245
 Montagu, Ashley III:143
 Montagu, Sir Edward II:218
 Montagu, Lady Mary Wortley II:289
 Montaigne, Michel de II:192–194
 friends and colleagues of II:147
 humanism in II:115
 influence of II:14
 influences on I:185, I:245, I:277, I:302, II:238
 literary criticism by II:48
 literary criticism on II:192–194
 Renaissance and II:244
 Montaigne prize III:55
 Montale, Eugenio III:301, III:360, III:418
 Montana New Zealand Book Awards III:105
Montauk (Frisch) III:154
 Montauk tribe II:209
 Montcorbier, François de. See Villon, François
 Montdory (French actor) II:63
 Montemayor, Jorge de II:217
 Montesquieu, Charles-Louis de
 Secondat, baron de la Brède et de II:194–195
 Encyclopedia and II:76, II:83
 Enlightenment and II:4, II:85, II:242
 and epistolary novel II:207
 influence of II:46, II:121
 literary criticism on II:75–76
 Montezuma II (Aztec emperor) II:13, II:36, II:64
 Montferrat, Marquis Boniface of I:318
A Month in the Country (Turgenyev) III:433
Monthly Notes (Fujiwara) I:108
 Monti, Augusto III:343
 Montreuil, Jean de I:261
 Montreuil, Renée-Pélagie de II:258
 Moomba Festival prizes III:31
Moonbone III:3
 Mooney, James I:216
 Moore, Charles II:195
 Moore, Gerald III:7, III:364–365
 Moore, Milcah Martha II:195
 Moore, Thomas I:14
 Moore, Thomas Sturge III:422
The Moor’s Last Sigh (Rushdie) III:378
 Moquihuitzin II:195–196, II:201
 Mór, Donnchadh I:39
Moral, Pastoral, and Amorous Letters (Simocatta) II:61 Moral Essays (Plutarch) I:245 moral fable II:120
Moralia (Plutarch) I:245 morality plays I:190, I:194, I:198, II:66–68, II:90, III:424
Moral Letters (Rousseau) II:250–251
The Morall Fabillis of Esope the Phrygian (Henryson) II:113 Moral Maxims (La Rochefoucauld). See Réflexions ou sentences et maxims morales
Moräne (Burkart) III:71
 Morante, Elsa III:301–302
 Moravia, Alberto III:301–302, III:302–303
 Moravia, Carlo Pincherle III:302
 More, Anne II:78
 More, John II:196
 More, Sir Thomas II:196–197
 contemporaries of II:88, II:89, II:238
 family of II:78
 humanism in II:115
 influence of II:238
 influences on II:244
 works by II:293
 Moreau, Gustave III:373
More Pricks Than Kicks (Beckett) III:45
More Stories from My Father’s Court (Singer) III:403
More Than Enough (Sargeson) III:386
 Morgan, Sally III:4
 “Morgante” (Pulci) II:233
 Mori Ōgai III:303, III:314
 Morison, Samuel Eliot II:283
 “Morning” (Mayakovsky) III:287
 “Morning” (Parini) II:214
Morning Face (Anand) III:19
Morning Glories (Shiga) III:399
 “Morning Meditations on the Majesty of God” (Lomonosov) II:160
Morning Star (periodical). See Myōjō
Morning Yet on Creation Day (Achebe) III:7
 Morrison, Jim III:371
 Morrison, Toni III:146, III:271
La Mort amoureuse (Clarimonde; Gautier) III:162–163
La Mort de César (Voltaire) II:298
Morte Arthur (anon.) II:171
Le Morte D’Arthur (Malory) I:68, I:131, I:190, I:258, I:313, II:170–172
 Morton, Archbishop II:196
Moscoe 2042 (Voinovich) III:445
 Moscow Art Theater III:90, III:178
Moscow Journal (periodical) II:77, III:234
Moscow of the Taverns (Yesenin) III:457
Moscow on Fire (Mayakovsky) III:288
Mother (Ding Ling) III:119
Mother Courage and Her Children (Brecht) III:60–61
Mother Earth (Dağlarca) III:108
 Mother Earth (goddess) I:206
 “Motherland” (Tsvetaeva) III:432
 Mother of Fujiwara Michitsuna I:191–192
Mother Poem (Brathwaite) III:58
Mother’s Love and Filial Devotion (Arghezi) III:27
 Motier, Jean-François II:147
The Motive Force (Ts’ao) III:406
Motivos deson (N. Guillén) III:184
 Motokiyo Kanze. See Zeami Motokiyo
 Motolinía, Toribio de II:198
 Motosuke I:273
Les Mots (The Words; Sartre) III:389
 Motto, Anna Lydia I:276
Les Mouches (The Flies; Sartre) III:389
 “The Mountain Peach Blossoms” (Pak) III:339
 “The Mountain Where Hui-pao Meditated” (Wang Anshi) I:325
 “Mourning” (Mistral) III:296
Mourning Becomes Electra (O’Neill) I:6
Mourning for the Dead (Yesenin). See Radunitsa
Mouir: Mirror Notes to a Novel (Breytenbach) III:63
 Moutoussamy, Ernest III:85
Le Mouvement perpétuel (Perpetual Movement; Aragon) III:25
Movie Star (Torres Bodet) III:430
The Moving Image (Wright) III:451

- Mo Yan III:297–298, III:406
Moyers, Bill III:176
La moza de cántaro (The Girl with the Jug; Lope de Vega) II:162
Mozart, Wolfgang Amadeus I:203, II:19, II:56, II:104, II:185, II:214, II:288, III:205–206
MPLA. See Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola
Mrožek, Sławomir III:303–304, III:405
Mu`alaqāt. See Hanged Poems
Mu`ayyad, Abu Muhammad Ilyas ibn Yūsuf ibn Zaki. See Nezāmi “Muddy Bay” (Higuchi) III:204
Mufti, Amir III:377
Muhallil, al- I:13
Muhammad (prophet) I:192–193
 contemporaries of I:159, I:164
 family of I:11–12, I:145
 influence of I:298, I:306
 Koran and I:161, I:162
 literary criticism by I:140, I:159
 and spread of Islam I:189
 works on I:33, I:55, I:98, III:377
Muhammad, Abu `Abdallah. See Ibn al-Khatīb
Muhammad, Abu Zayd `Abd al-Rahman ibn Muhammad. See Ibn Khaldūn
La mulâtresse Solitude (A Woman Named Solitude; Schwarz-Bart and Schwarz-Bart) III:392
Mulheres Best Foreign Novel Award (Portugal) III:16
Müller, Heiner III:304–305
Müller, Inge III:304
Müller, Poul III:350
Müller, Wilhelm III:375
mummers’ plays I:193–194
munazara I:145
Munch, Edvard III:138
Mundas novas (The New World; Vespucci) II:295, II:302
Munford, Robert II:198–199
Munford, William II:198
Munich Grant Prize for Literature III:131
Munjong (king of Korea) II:265
Munonye, John III:305
Munro, Alice III:32, III:305–306
Munro, Ed III:199
Muqaddimah (The Prolegomena; Ibn Khaldūn) II:117–118
Le Mûr (Intimacy; Sartre) III:388
Murakami, Yōko III:306
Murakami Haruki III:306–307
Murasaki Shikibu I:194–196
 contemporaries of I:141, I:273
 literary criticism by I:273, I:274
 literary criticism on I:82
Muratori, Ludovico Antonio II:199
Muratorian Canon II:199
Murder, the Women’s Hope (Kokoschka) III:244
Murena, Lucius I:70
Murguía, Manuel III:80
Murphy (Beckett) III:45
Murray, Judith Sargent II:199–200
Murry, John Middleton III:282
Musa, Mark II:223
“The Muse of History” (Walcott) III:447 musicians and composers I:3–4, I:128–129
Music Lessons (Akhmadulina) III:10
“The Music of the Violin” (Ndebele) III:317
Musil, Robert von Elder III:307
Muslim literature III:220, III:381–382
Muslim Nationalism Movement III:222
Muslim Saints and Mystics (‘Attār) I:26
Musset, Alfred de III:308, III:383
Mussin-Puschkin, Count I:283
Mussolini, Benito associates of III:110, III:156
 contemporaries of III:141
 opponents of III:168
 rule of III:262
 works on III:459
Mussorgsky, Modest III:358
Mutalammis I:297–298
Mutanabbi, al- I:196–197
Mu’tasim, al- I:2
The Mute’s Soliloquy: A Memoir (Toer) III:427
Mutmassungen über Jakob (Speculations about Jacob; U. Johnson) III:229 muwashshah II:118
“My American Books” (Mo Yan) III:298
“My Autobiography” (Chughtai) III:92
My Century (Grass) III:181
My Childhood (Gorky) III:178–179
My Days: A Memoir (Narayan) III:314
My Discovery of America (Mayakovsky) III:287
My Fair Lady (Lerner and Loewe) I:203
“My Heart Is in the East” (Halevi) I:120
“My J’accuse Against This Moribund System” (Ba Jin) III:35
My Life (Kokoschka) III:244
My Michael (Oz) III:337
My Mother’s House (Colette). See La Maison de Claudine
Myōjō (Morning Star; periodical) III:458
My Past and Thoughts (Herzen) III:202
“My People” (Lasker-Schüler) III:257–258
My Place (Morgan) III:4
My Properties (Michaux) III:291
My Reminiscences (Tagore) III:421
My Secret Book (Petrarch) II:223
My Sister, Life (Pasternak) III:341
Mysterier (Mysteries; Hamsun) III:190, III:191 Mysteries of Selflessness (Iqbāl). See Rumuz-i-Bekhudī
mystery plays I:190, I:194, I:197–198, II:66–68
Mystical Poems of Rumi (Rumi) I:265
The Mystic Masseur (Naipaul) III:311
Myth, Literature, and the African World (Soyinka) III:410
Mythistorema (Seferis) III:94, III:393
myth of Manco Capac I:77, I:198–199, I:223
myth of Quetzalcoatl. See Quetzalcoatl, myth of
The Myth of Sisyphus (Camus) III:74
Mythological Cycle I:199, I:200
Mythologies (Bonnetfoy, ed.) III:55 mythology. See also creation myths; Holy Grail Celtic I:199–202, I:257
 flood myths I:77, I:114, I:115, I:328
 Greek and Roman I:202–204, I:228, I:260 Mesoamerican. See Mesoamerican mythology
 in Middle Ages I:199
 Native-American. See Native Americans
 Norse I:204–205
 Eddas and I:95
 influence of I:211
 themes in I:183, I:206
 works on I:280
 Oceanic I:204–205, I:205–207
Myths and Rites of the Inca (Cristóbal de Molina) I:199
Myths of the Cherokee (Mooney) I:216
My Travels Around the World (Sadawi) III:380
My Universities (Gorky) III:179
- N
- Nabokov, Vladimir III:48, III:309–310
La Nación (periodical) III:415
Nadja (Breton) III:62
Nahj al Balaghā (Peak of Eloquence; al-Sharif) I:12
Nahuatl poetry I:77, I:208–209, II:201–202, II:202–204
Naidu, Sarojini III:310–311

572 Cumulative Index

- Naipaul, V (idiadhar) S(urajprasad)
 III:117, III:175, III:311–312, III:353,
 III:354, III:417
- La Naissance du jour* (A Lesson in Love; Colette) III:99
- naivism, influence of III:251
- A Naked Needle* (Farrah) III:142
- Namdev. See Dhasal, Namdeo
- The Name of the Rose* (Eco) III:129
- Nameplates, Etc.* (Ishigaki). See
Hyōsatsu nado
- Namiki Senryu II:281
- Naniwa Miyage* (Hozumi) II:53
- Naoki Prize III:455
- Naomi* (Tanizaki) III:424
- Napoleon I (Napoleon Bonaparte)
 admirers of III:212
 adversaries of II:19, II:214, II:261,
 III:87, III:412
 associates of II:146, III:87, III:102
 influences on I:101
 literature interests of II:102 rule of II:259
 works on III:208, III:284, III:428
- Napoleon III
 court and associates of III:148
 family of III:99
 opponents of III:253, III:462
 reign of III:213
- Naqāith of Jarir and al Farazdaq* (al Farazdaq and ibn 'Atiyya) I:105
- Naqsh-e Faryadi* (Image of complaint; Faiz) III:140
- Narada I:315
- Narayan, R (asipuram) K (rishnaswamy)
 III:19, III:312–314
- "Narcissus" (Hayashi) III:198
- Narcissus and Goldmund* (Hesse)
 III:203
- "Narir Mulya" (Chatterji) III:88
- The Narrative of Cabeza de Vaca*
 (Cabeza de Vaca) II:35
- A Narrative of the Captivity and* Restoration of Mrs. Mary Rowlandson
 (Rowlandson) II:252
- A Narrative of the Expedition to Botany*
Bay (Tench) II:284
- Narratives of Resistance: Jamaica,*
Trinidad, the Caribbean (Meeks)
 III:289
- Der Narr in Christo, Emanuel Quint*
 (The Fool in Christ, Emanuel Quint; Hauptmann) III:196
- "The Narrow Road to the Deep North"
 (Bashō) II:18–19
- Narváez, Pánfilo de II:35
- Nash, Ralph II:283
- Nasier, Alcofribas. See Rabelais
- Nathan, Robert Louis III:3
- Nathan the Wise* (Lessing) II:157–158
- The Nation* (periodical) III:347
- National Academy of Letters Award (India) III:19, III:115
- National Artist in Literature award
 III:117
- National Black Programmers
 Consortium of the United States
 III:253
- National Book Awards III:92, III:383
- National Book Journalist of the Year award (South Africa) III:65
- National Episodes* (Pérez Galdós)
 III:347
- National Gazette* (periodical) II:97
- Nationalism* (Tagore) III:422
- The National Isolation of Humor*
 (Ishigaki) See Yūmoa no Sakoku
- National Literature Award III:430
- National Poet of Romania III:27
- National Prize (East Germany) III:280
- National Prize (Germany) III:59,
 III:211
- National Prize for Literature (Spain)
 III:13
- National Theater (Germany) II:157
- National Theater (Japan) II:132
- National Union of South African Students III:327
- Native Americans
 Aztec literature
 works I:77, I:208–209, II:159,
 II:201–202, II:202–204,
 II:235
 writers II:12–13, II:36,
 II:195–196
- Chinook myths I:63–64
 creation myths I:75, I:77–79,
I:77–79, I:223, I:229, I:314,
 I:328, I:341
- education and II:82
- Hopi
 Coyote tales I:75–77, I:205,
 I:313
tuuwutsi narratives
I:313–314
- Incas
 creation myths I:77
 myth of Manco Capac I:77,
I:198–199, I:223
- Indianism and III:219
- Iroquois oral literature II:70–71
- Mayan literature II:25–26, II:141,
 II:180–182, II:184, II:229–230,
 II:239
- Mesoamerican mythology
II:183–184
 missionaries to II:2–3, II:6,
 II:81–82, II:123–124, II:151–152,
 II:198, II:209, II:210, II:230,
 II:231, II:249, II:285
- Nahuatl poetry I:77, I:208–209,
II:201–202, II:202–204
- Navajo Nightway Ceremony songs
 I:78, I:209–210
- Ojibway myths and legends
I:215–216
- Oklahoma Cherokee
 creation myths I:78
 folktales I:216–217
- O'othham Hoho'ok A'agitha*
I:222–223
- students of III:87
- telapnaawe* narratives I:299
- Toltec culture I:208–209, II:180,
 II:181, II:235
- White Mountain Apache myths and tales I:224, I:327–329
- Winnebago
waikan narratives I:299,
I:323, I:331
worak narratives I:299, I:323,
I:331
- works on II:22, II:35, II:156,
 II:198, II:249, II:252–253,
 II:276–277, II:306
- writers III:227–228, III:290–291
- Yaqui deer songs I:78, I:335–337
- Zuni
 creation myths I:78, I:299,
 I:341
 narrative poetry I:78, I:328,
I:340–341
telapnaawe narratives I:299
- Natives of My Person* (Lamming)
 III:254
- nativism, Négritude and III:318
- Natsume Sōseki III:12–13, III:303,
III:314
- Natural and Moral History of the East* and West Indies (Acosta) II:3
- Naturales quaestiones* (Seneca) I:276
- Natural History* (Pliny the Elder). See
Historia naturalis
- naturalism III:314–316
 critics of III:39
 figures associated with III:39,
 III:53–54, III:175, III:213,
 III:286, III:416, III:462–463
 influence of III:361–362
 realism and III:315, III:350–351,
 III:365
 and romanticism III:315
 and symbolism III:418–419
 works on III:340
- Natural Questions* (Seneca) I:276
- Naubert, Benedikte III:316
- Naufragios y relación de la jornada que*
hizo a la Florida con el adelantado
Pánfilo de Narváez (Cabeza de Vaca)
 II:35

- “Nausea” (Neto) III:320
La Nausée (Sartre) III:388
Navajivan (New Life; periodical)
 III:158, III:265
 Navajo
 creation myths I:77
 Nightway Ceremony songs I:78,
I:209–210
- Nazis
 censorship by III:32, III:60, III:66,
 III:75, III:138, III:152, III:201,
 III:203, III:230, III:244, III:256,
 III:348, III:368, III:371–372
 expressionism and III:138
 flight from III:307, III:309, III:436 impact of III:9, III:24, III:36,
 III:44, III:197, III:281
 literary interests of III:165, III:368 persecution of Jews III:257,
 III:290, III:403, III:433
 persecution of socialists under
 III:304
 supporters of III:49, III:83,
 III:190, III:228, III:230
 victims of III:82–83, III:153,
 III:338
 works on III:43, III:82, III:180,
 III:262, III:282, III:432, III:457
- Nazi Writers’ Union III:230
 Ndebele, Njabulo III:316–317
Near to the Wild Heart (Lispector)
 III:263
 Necker, Anna Louise Germaine. See
 Staël, Germaine de
 Necker, Jacques III:411
The Necromancer (Ariosto) II:9
 Nedekind, Frank III:138
Nedjma (Yacine) III:454
 “Nedjma ou le poème ou le couteau”
 (Yacine) III:454
La Négresse Blanche (The White Negress; Capécia) III:76
 Négritude III:317–318
 authors associated with III:84,
 III:85, III:120–121, III:396
 postcolonialism of III:353
 works on III:114
- Neidersachsen/Wolfenbüttel foundation
 III:183
Neighbours in a Thicket (Malouf)
 III:277
 Nekrasov, Nikolay III:366
 “Nelly Sachs and the Dance of Language” (Strenger) III:379
 Nelson, Lord Horatio II:17
 Nennius I:112
 neoclassicism II:202
 characteristics of II:56
 in French literature III:375 history of III:94
 influence of II:100
 in literary criticism II:128 proponents of II:25, II:205, II:210
 reaction against II:102
 romanticism and III:374
 tenets of II:228
 and unities II:292
- Neo-Confucianism I:74, I:122, II:129,
 II:152–153
 Neo-Perceptionists. See Shinkankakuha movement
 Neoplatonism
 exponents of I:248, I:249
 influence of I:244, II:101, II:186
 in Middle Ages I:139
 neorealism III:343
 neoteric poets I:62
 Neptune I:202
 Nero (emperor of Rome)
 contemporaries of I:175, I:186,
 I:233, I:275
 reign of I:149, I:241
 works on I:294
- Neruda, Jan III:318
 Neruda, Pablo III:299, III:318–319
 friends and colleagues of III:344
 influences on III:159, III:160
 modernism and III:299
- Nerva (emperor of Rome) I:242
 Nerval, Gérard de III:319–320
A Nest of Gentlefolk (Turgenev) III:433
 Neto, António Agostinho III:320–321
 Nettleford, Rex III:447
Der neue Riech (The Kingdom Come;
 George) III:165
Neue Volksmarchen der Deutschen
 (Naubert) III:316
Die Neunte Stunde (The Ninth Hour; Huchel) III:211
 Neustadt Prize for Contributions to World Literature III:121, III:142
 Never Again (Nwapa) III:329
 Never Enough (Rageson) III:386
Le Neveu de Rameau (Rameau’s Nephew; Diderot) II:77
The New African (periodical) III:325
New Art of Writing Plays at This Time (Lope de Vega). See Arte nuevo de hacer comedias en este tiempo
The New Atlantis (Bacon) II:15, II:293
 New Ballads I:38
 New Comedy I:21, I:188, I:240, I:302
A New Dominion (Jhabvala) III:226
The New England Courant (periodical)
 II:94
New England Trials (Smith) II:273
The New Hispanic-American Novel
 (Fuentes). See La Nueva Novela
Hispanoamericana
- New History of the Five Dynasties*
 (Ouyang Xiu) I:226
New History of the T’ang Dynasty
 (Ouyang Xiu) I:226
New Leaves (Castro) III:80
New Life (Ba Jin) III:34
New Life (Dante) I:14, I:190, II:23
New Life (periodical). See Navajivan
The New Life (Dante). See La vita nuova
The New Lucian of Quito (Santa Cruz y Espejo). See El nuevo luciano de Quito
New Masses (periodical) III:425
 The New Novel III:321
 figures associated with III:127,
 III:372, III:386–387, III:402
objectivismo and III:331
 New Novelist Prize of Gunzō magazine
 III:306
New Poetry (periodical) III:425
New Science (Vico) II:296
 “New South-African Literature or the Rediscovery of the Ordinary”
 (Ndebele) III:316
New Statesman (periodical) III:311
New Stories from Golden Turtle Mountain (Kim Shi-sup). See Kumo
Sinhwa
 new sweet style I:85
New Tides (periodical). See Shinshichō
New Time (periodical) III:89
 Newton, Isaac I:101
 Newton, Sir Isaac discoveries by II:153
 friends and colleagues of II:278
 influence of II:83, II:85, II:133,
 II:216
 translations of II:298
 works on II:4
New Tool (Bacon). See Novum Organum
The New Tribe (Emecheta) III:133
The New Universal Geography (Carver)
 II:44
The New Voices III:253
New Wave Canada: The New Explosion in Canadian Poetry (III:1967) III:334
 “New Wave” films III:363
 New Wave poets (Russia) III:10
The New World (Vespucci). See Mundas
novas
New World Guyana Independence Issue
 III:193
A New Year’s Fairy Tale (Dudintsev)
 III:125–126
The New Yorker (periodical) III:241,
 III:309
The New York Review of Books I:69
 New York Theater Critics’ Prize III:128
The New York Times III:24 bestseller list III:310

574 Cumulative Index

- Book Review* III:73, III:101,
 III:279, III:348, III:392
New Youth (periodical) III:209, III:265,
 III:299
 New Zealand Book Award for Poetry
 III:105
 New Zealand writers III:56–57, III:105,
 III:150–151, III:282–283, III:385–386
 Nezahualcoyotl I:208, II:184, II:201,
II:202–203, II:203
 Nezahualpilli II:36, II:201, II:203–204
 Nezāmī I:210–211
 Ngugi Wa Thiong'o III:142, III:254,
III:321–322, III:353
 Nguyen Du III:322–323
 Nguyen Thi Lo II:204
 Nguyen Trai II:204
 Niane, D. T. I:289
Nibelungenlied I:211–212
 as epic I:97, II:86
 literary criticism on I:95, I:205,
 I:283, I:316, I:329–330
 medieval literature and I:190
 versions of I:269
 Nichireki III:134
 Nichol, b(arrie) p(hilip) III:323
 Nicholas I (czar of Russia) III:358
 Nicholson, Reynold I:298
Nicomachean Ethics (Aristotle) I:23,
 I:302
 Nieman Fellowship III:325
 Nietzsche, Friedrich II:262, III:323–325
 existentialism and III:137
 influence of III:40, III:49, III:66,
 III:190, III:238, III:280–281,
 III:298, III:325, III:388, III:404
 influences on III:208
 Nigerian Festival of Arts III:334
 Nigerian literature III:5–7, III:305,
 III:328–329, III:333, III:409–410
 “Night” (Mayakovsky) III:287
 “Night” (Parini) II:215
Night (Wiesel) III:450
Night & Horses & The Desert (Irwin)
 II:118
The Night and the Dream (Gunnarsson)
 III:187
Night Flight (Saint-Exupéry). See *Vol
 de Nuit*
 “The Nightingale” (Anderson) III:20
 “Night in the Medici
 Chapel” (Michelangelo) II:187
The Night Keeps Winking (Serote)
 III:397
Nights as Day, Days as Night (Leiris)
 III:260
 Nightway Ceremony songs I:78
Nihon shoki I:160
Niiwam and Taww (Sembène) III:395
 Nijinsky, Vaslav III:276
 Nijō Yoshimoto II:313
 Nikitin, Afanasij II:204–205
 Nikolev, Nikolai Petrovich II:205
Nina (Rinsler). See Mitte des Lebens
 nine gems I:153
The Nine Guardsmen (Castellanos)
 III:79
Nine Indian Women Poets (Souza, ed.)
 III:409
Nine Songs. See Jiuge
Nine Songs of Kosan (Lee Yul Kok). See
Kosan Kugok
The Nineteen (Fadeyev) III:139
 “1940” (Brecht) III:61
Nineteen to the Dozen (Aleichem) III:14
Ninety-five Theses (Luther) II:165–166
Ninja’s Carnival (Espinete) III:135
The Ninth Hour (Huchel). See *Die
 Neunte Stunde*
ninyo joruri. See Bunraku
Nip the Buds, Shoot the Kids (Ōe)
 III:331
Nirmala (Premchand) III:356
 Nirokuan Chikua II:139
nisei III:243
 Nizāmī. See Nezāmī
 Njal’s Saga I:212–213, I:269
 Nkosi, Lewis III:177, III:250,
III:325–326
Noah (Vondel) II:301
 Nobel, Alfred III:407
 Nobel Peace Prize III:291, III:450
 Nobel Prize in literature nominees III:17, III:239
 winners III:9, III:21, III:46, III:54,
 III:70, III:75, III:82, III:132,
 III:149, III:159, III:162, III:167,
 III:177, III:181, III:190,
 III:196–197, III:203, III:227,
 III:238, III:251, III:260, III:270,
 III:272, III:281, III:293, III:294,
 III:296, III:301, III:312, III:319,
 III:332, III:341–342, III:345,
 III:348, III:350, III:353, III:379,
 III:385, III:389, III:394, III:400,
 III:401, III:402, III:403, III:404,
 III:408, III:410, III:420, III:422,
 III:436, III:442, III:447, III:448
 noble savages II:250, III:429
 Nobre, António III:326
Noces (Nuptials; Camus) III:74
No Exit (Sartre). See Huis-clos
 Nogarola, Isotta II:115
 Noh (Nō) II:205–206 comparable forms II:131, II:239
 works on II:313–314
 writers and actors for II:313
No hay mal que por bien no venga (It Is an Ill Wind That Blows No Good;
 Ruiz de Alarcón) II:254
No Longer at Ease (Achebe) III:6
 Noma Award for Publishing III:35,
 III:317, III:397
 Nomura school II:143
No One Writes to the Colonel (García Márquez) III:161
 Noonuccal, Oodgeroo III:4,
III:326–327
 Nordic writers III:407
 Norse mythology I:204–205
 Eddas and I:95
 influence of I:211
 sagas. See sagas
 themes in I:183, I:206
 works on I:280
Norsk Folkeblad (periodical) III:52
Northern Archives (Yourcenar). See
Archives du Nord
 Northern Group II:136
The Northern Journey and Other Poems
 (Feng Zhi) III:144
 Nortje, Arthur III:327–328
 Norwegian Award for Poetry III:275
 Norwegian literature III:52–53,
 III:189–191, III:216–217
 Norwegian Society for Theater, Music, and Language III:52–53
 Norwegian Theater III:216
 “The Nose” (Akutagawa) III:13
No Sugar (Davis) III:4
No Sweetness Here (Aidoo) III:10
 Notable Book Award of American Library Association III:57
Not By Bread Alone (Dudintsev) III:125
Note and Counternotes (Ionesco)
 III:220
Notebook for an Ethics (Sartre) III:389
Notebook for the Night (Arghezi)
 III:26–27
Notebook of Green (Jaccottet). See
Cahier de verdure
The Notebooks of André Walter (Gide)
 III:167
The Notebooks of Malte Laurids Brigge
 (Rilke) III:370
No Telephone to Heaven (Cliff)
 III:95–96
Notes from the Underground
 (Dostoyevsky) III:124, III:136
Notes of a Young Doctor (Bulgakov)
 III:69
Notes on the State of Virginia (Jefferson)
 II:122, II:123
Not I (Beckett) III:45
Notre Dame de Paris (Broadway musical) III:212
Notre-Dame de Paris (Hugo) III:212,
 III:375
No Trifling with Love (Musset) III:308

- La Nouba de femmes due Mont Chenoua* (film) III:121
 Nouveau Roman. See New Novel
La Nouvelle Héloïse (Rousseau) II:251
Nouvelle Revue Française III:392
 Novalis II:206–207, II:261, III:82
Nova Methodus Pro Maximus et Minimus (“New Method for the Greatest and the Least”; Leibniz) II:153 novels ancient Greek I:174 development of in China II:41, II:125, II:165, II:269, II:308 in England II:69–70 in France II:147
 in Latin-America II:43–44
 epistolary II:107, II:207–208, II:245, II:251 Korean II:55
 picaresque I:233
 realism in II:70
 Roman I:18–19
The Novels of Nadine Gordimer (Clingman) III:177
The Novices of Saïs (Novalis) II:207
Novum Organum (New Tool; Bacon) II:14–15
Novy Lef (periodical) III:287
Novy Mir (periodical) III:408, III:444
Now and in Other Days (Amichai) III:18–19
 N-Town cycle II:66
Nuclear Seasons (Espinet) III:135
La Nueva Novela Hispanoamericana (The New Hispanic-American Novel; Fuentes) III:154–155
El nuevo luciano de Quito (The New Lucian of Quito; Santa Cruz y Espejo) II:259
El nuevo teatro crítico (periodical) III:340
 “NUFF at the Cusp of an Idea” (Meeks) III:289
La Nuit vénitienne (A Venetian Night; Musset) III:308
 Nukada, Princess I:213–214
 Nukata Okimi. See Nukada, Princess
Los Numantinos III:136
 Numbakulla brothers I:206
The Nun (Diderot) II:77
Nunatsiaq News (periodical) III:220
Nunavut (periodical) III:220
 Nun’s Priest’s Tale (Chaucer) I:263
 “The Nun’s Priest’s Tale” (Chaucer) II:91
Nuptials (Camus). See Noces
 “Nutcracker and the Mouse King” (Hoffman) III:206
 Nwapa, Flora III:328–329
The Nymphs of Fiesole (Boccaccio) II:23
 O
 Oakley, Barry III:76
O Babylon! (Walcott) III:447
 Ōba Minako III:330
Obasan (Kogawa) III:243
 Obie Award III:447
objectivismo III:82, III:331
Oblomov (Goncharov) III:174
Obras poéticas (Poetical Works; Olmedo) II:210
 O’Brien, Geoffrey III:423
The Obscene Bird of Night (Donoso) III:122–123
Observations on the Feeling of the Beautiful and Sublime (Kant) II:134
Observer (periodical) III:202
The Occasions (Montale) III:301
 Occom, Samson II:209
Oceana (Harrington) II:293
 Oceanic mythology I:204–205, I:205–207
Ochre (Storni) III:415
 Oclo, Isabel Chimpu II:101
La oda a la toma de Larache (Ode on the Taking of Larache; Góngora y Argote) II:106
Odale’s Choice (Brathwaite) III:58
 “Ode on the Death of Bibikov” (Derzhavin) II:72
Ode on the Taking of Larache (Góngora y Argote). See La oda a la toma de Larache
Odes (Horace) I:61, I:134–135
Odes (Parini) II:214
Odes (Ronsard) II:248
Odes of Anacreon (Moore) I:14
Odes to Soldiers on Patrol in a Sandstorm (Tian) III:425
Odes Translated and Composed Near Chitalagai Mountain (Derzhavin) II:72
Ode to America’s Independence (Alfieri) II:5
 “Ode to Felitsa” (Derzhavin) II:72
 “Ode to Joy” (Schiller) II:260, III:391
Ode to Liberty (Pushkin) III:358
 “Ode to Psyche” (Keats) I:19
Ode to the City of Nuremberg (Sachs) II:257
 “Ode to the Mantle” (al-Būsīrī). See “Qasidat al-Burda”
 Odin I:204, I:205, I:280
Œdipe (Voltaire) II:298
 Odo of Deuil I:80
 Odovacar (king of Rome) I:50
The Odyssey (Homer) I:131–134
 as epic I:97, II:86
 influence of I:322, II:282, III:94, III:238, III:393
 influences on I:202
 literary criticism on I:23–24
 as travel narrative II:289
 works on II:92
Odyssey: A Modern Sequel (Kazantsakis) III:94, III:238
Oedipus (Seneca) I:276
Oedipus at Colonus (Sophocles) I:286
Oedipus in Athens (Ozerov) II:211
Oedipus Rex (Sophocles) II:292
Oedipus the King (Sophocles) I:286, I:287–288
 Ōe Kenzaburō III:330, III:331–332
Of Age and Innocence (Lammings) III:254
 “Of Anger” (Montaigne) II:193
 “Of Cannibals” (Montaigne) II:193
 “Of Conscience” (Montaigne) II:193
 “Of Constancy” (Montaigne) II:193
 “Of Drunkenness” (Montaigne) II:193
 Offenbach, Jacques III:206
Offending the Audience (Handke). See Publikumsbeschimpfung
Offering of Songs (Tagore). See Gitanjali
 “Of Idleness” (Montaigne) II:193
 “Of Insects” (Edwards) II:80
 “Of Life” (Fulgentius). See “De Fide”
Of Love and Shadows (Allende) III:16
Of Plymouth Plantation (Bradford) II:29
 “Of Repentance” (Montaigne) II:193
Of the Fox and of the Wolf I:262
 “Of the Gods” (Protagoras) I:101
 “Of the Inconsistency of Our Action” (Montaigne) II:193
Of the Movement and the Immobility of Douve (Bonnefoy) III:55
Of Tyranny (Alfieri) II:5
 Óg, Fearghal I:39
 Oghuz people, literature of II:26
Ogonek (periodical) III:457
 Ogot, Grace III:332–333
The Ogre (Menander) I:188
 O’Healy, Aine III:343
 O’Hehir, Andrew III:98
The Oil Man of Obange (Munonye) III:305
Oiseau bleu (The Blue Bird; Maeterlinck) III:270
 Ojeda, Alonzo de II:295
 Ojibway myths and legends I:215–216
 Okara, Gabriel III:333–334
Okhela III:63
Okike (periodical) III:6
 Oklahoma Cherokee
 creation myths I:78
 folktales I:216–217

- Okoli, Christie Chinwe III:6
 Okuni II:131
 Okura school II:143
Old Age (Beauvoir) III:43
 Old Comedy I:20, I:21, I:188
Old Crow (Boccaccio). See Corbaccio
 “The Old Dog and the Hunter”
 (Phaedrus) I:235
 Old English poetry I:42, I:217–219
 influences on I:270
 themes of I:190
The Old Maid (Lessing) II:157
 “The Old Man and the Hind” I:305
 “The Old Man’s Conscience”
 (Dharmachoti). See “Samnuk Khong Pho Thao”
 “The Old Pond” (Bashō) II:18
 “Old Shloyme” (Babel) III:35
Old Snow (Bei Dao) III:47
 Old Vic Repertory Company III:112
 “The Old White Witch” (Ogot) III:333
 Olivares, duke of (Gaspar de Guzmán, count-duke of Olivares) II:105
 Olivares, Miguel de II:210
L’Olive (The Olive; Bellay) II:20, II:226,
 II:274
 Oliver of Paderborn I:80
 Olivier (C. Duras) III:126
 Olmedo, José Joaquín II:210
 Olschki, Leonardo I:247
 Olsson, Hagar III:407
 Omar Khayyám I:219–221
Ombre Sultane (A Sister to Scheherazade; Djébar) III:121
 O’Meara, Dominic I:244
 Omeros (Walcott) III:447
On a Dark Night I Left My Silent House
 (Handke) III:193
 “O Navis” (Lope de Vega) II:163
 “On Being a Concubine” (Ho) III:205
On Being and Unity (Pico della Mirandola). See De Ente et Uno
 “On Being Brought from Africa to America” (Wheatley) II:304–305
 “On Believing and Not Believing”
 (Phaedrus) I:235
Once Again for Thucydides (Handke)
 III:193
The Once and Future King (White) I:68,
 I:131
Once Is Enough (Sargeson) III:386
On Coats of Mail (Al-Ma’rri) I:181
 Ondaatje, Michael III:323, III:334–335,
 III:354
 O’Neale, Sondra A. II:111
One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich
 (Solzhenitsyn) III:408
The One Day of the Week (Ferlosio). See
El Jarama
On Education (Kant) II:134
One Fine Day (Hwang Tonggyu)
 III:215
One Hundred and Twenty Days of Sodom (film) III:341
120 Days of Sodom (Sade) II:258
One Hundred Years of Solitude (García Márquez) III:161–162, III:271,
 III:378
 Oneida tribe II:209
 O’Neill, Eugene I:6, I:21–22, I:203
One Is Enough (Nwapa) III:329
One Is Not a Woman Born (Wittig)
 III:450
 Onetti, Juan Carlos III:335
On German Architecture (Goethe)
 II:102
On German Character and Art (Herder).
See Von deutscher Art und Kunst
On Germany (Staël). See De l’Allemagne
On God (Spinoza) II:276
On Heaven and Its Wonders and Hell
 (Swedenborg) II:278
 “On His Blindness” (Milton) II:188
On His Own Ignorance and That of Many Others (Petrarch) II:115,
 II:222
On His Return (Andocides) I:26–27
 “On Hunting” (Xenophon) I:333
On Illustrious Men (Petrarch) II:222
On Imitation (Dionysius of Halicarnassus) I:93
On Literature (Staël). See De la littérature
On Love (Stendahl) III:414
Only a Fiddler (Andersen) III:20
The Only Just War (Becher). See Levisite
oder der einzig gerechte Krieg
The Only Son (Munonye) III:305
Only This Light (Fraire) III:150
The Only Way (Las Casas) II:151
 On Mercy (Seneca) I:276
On My Way: Poetry and Essays, 1912-
1947 (Arps) III:28
On Noble Customs and Liberal Studies of Adolescents (Vergerio) II:115
 Ono I:206
 Onoge, Omafume III:318
 Ono no Komachi I:221–222
On Overgrown Paths (Hamsun). See Pã
Gjengrodde Stier
 Ô no Yasumaro I:160
On Painting (Alberti) II:4, III:13
On Platonic Theology (Proclus) I:249
On Relation Between Man’s Animal and Spiritual Nature (Schiller) III:391
On Religion (Constant de Rebecque).
See De la Religion
On Religious Leisure (Petrarch) II:222
On Secular Authority and How Far One Should Be Obedient to It (Luther)
 II:166
On Sepulchres (Foscolo) III:150
 “On Socialist Realism” (Gorky) III:405
On the Aesthetic Education of Man
 (Schiller) II:260, III:391–392
On the Art of Building (Alberti) II:4
 “On the Art of Horsemanship”
 (Xenophon) I:333
On the Causes of Corrupted Eloquence
 (Quintilian) I:253
 “On the Cavalry Commander”
 (Xenophon) I:333
On the Contrary (Brink) III:65
On the Creation of the World (Tasso)
 II:282
On the Crown (Demosthenes) I:90
 “On the Death of General Wooster”
 (Wheatley) II:305
 “On the Death of the Poet”
 (Lermontov) III:261
On the Education of the Orator
 (Quintilian) I:253–254
On the Embassy (Aeschines) I:27
On the Eve (Turgenev) III:433
On the Field of Glory (Sienkiewicz)
 III:401
On the Harmony of Religion and Philosophy (Averroës). See Fasl al-
Maqal
On the Improvement of the Moral Qualities (Ibn Gabirol) I:138, I:139
On the Influence of the Passions (Staël).
See De l’influence des passions
On the Language and Wisdom of India
 (periodical) II:261
On the Life of Solitude (Petrarch) II:222
On the Murder of Eratosthenes (Lysias)
 I:27, I:179
On the Mysteries (Andocides) I:26–27
On the Naïve and Sentimental in Literature (Schiller) II:260, III:392
On the Nature of Things (Lucretius). See
De Rerum Natura
On the Orator (Cicero). See de oratore
 “On the Painting of the Sistine
 Chapel” (Michelangelo) II:187
On the Peace with Sparta (Andocides)
 I:26–27
On the Relation Between Man’s Animal and Spiritual Nature (Schiller) II:260
On the Revolutions of the Heavenly Spheres (Copernicus). See De
Revolutionibus Orbium Coelestium
On the Shores of the Saar (Castro)
 III:80
On the Sign at the End of the Road
 (Abe) III:2

- On the Spirit of Conquest and Usurpation* (Constant de Rebecque). See De l'esprit de conquête et de l'usurpation
- On the Sublime* (Longinus) I:173–174
- On the Use of Church Books in the Russian Language* (Lomonosov) II:160
- On the Uses of the Parts of the Body of Man* (Galen) I:110
- On the World* (Apuleius) I:19
- “On the Yangtze River” (Tian) III:425
- “On Virgins” (Ambrose) I:12
- Onwordi, Sylvester III:133
- O'othham Hoho'ok A'agitha* I:222–223
- “Opasnyi sosod” (“The Dangerous Neighbor”; Pushkin) II:233
- The Open Sore of a Continent* (Soyinka) III:410
- Operetta* (Gombrowicz) III:173
- Opium* (Cocteau) III:96
- opium, users of III:42, III:96, III:430
- Opo no Yasumoro. See Ō no Yasumaro
- L'opopomax* (Wittig) III:450
- Optics* (Euclid) I:101
- Oragu Haru (The Year of My Life;* Kobayashi Issa) II:139
- oral literature I:223–224. See also sagas of Armenia I:86–87
Ashanti tales II:10–11
Aztec II:159
characteristics of I:305, I:328
epics and I:97, I:98, I:211 functions of I:78
Icelandic I:280
Indian I:230, I:315
Iroquois II:70–71
Mayan II:54–55, II:180–182
Native American. See Native Americans
Oghuz II:26
Old English poetry and I:217
Oral Torah I:294–295
of Persia I:278
proverbs as I:8, I:9
Russian I:283
travel narratives and II:289
Vedas and I:256
- Oral Torah I:294–295
- Oration on Aerial Phenomena, proceeding from the Force of Electricity* (Lomonosov) II:160
- Oration on the Dignity of Man* (Pico della Mirandola) II:224
- orators I:69–71, I:89–91, I:140, I:141, I:179, I:242, I:253, I:274, I:275, I:300–301
Attic I:26–28, I:179
- Orazia* (The horatii; Aretino) II:8
- The Orchid House* (Allfrey) III:17
- The Ordeal of the African Writer* (Larson) III:142
- Order for Cultural Merit III:399
- Order of Australia III:239
- Order of Culture III:134
- Order of Lenin III:139, III:337
- Order of the Federal Republic III:7
- Order of the Poor Clares I:107
- “An Ordinary Day” (Pak) III:339
- An Ordinary Story* (Goncharov) III:174
- Ordo* (Hildegard von Bingen) I:128
- Oreste* (Voltaire) II:298
- Oresteia* (Aeschylus) I:5–6, II:289
- Orfeo* (Poliziano) II:227
- Orff, Carl III:371
- Organizing Strategy* (Check and Grinyer) I:290
- Les Orientales* (Hugo) III:212
- Orientalism* (Said) III:352
- Oriental Philosophy* (Avicenna) I:35
- Oriental Tales* (Yourcenar) III:458
- Orientalisms* (Elytis) III:132
- Origen I:12, I:174, I:248
- The Origin of Philosophy* (Ortega y Gasset) III:336
- Orion and Other Poems* (Roberts) III:373
- Orlando Furioso* (Ariosto) I:285, I:313, I:322, II:6, II:9–10, II:282, II:283
- Orlando Innamorato* (Boiardo) I:285, II:9
- Orléans, Charles, duc d' I:66, II:210–211, II:297
- Orléans, duchess of II:148
- Orléans, Louis d' II:210
- Ormond* (Brown) II:31
- Orniñle* (Anouilh) III:22
- Orphée* (Orpheus; Cocteau) III:97
- “Orphée noir” (“Black Orpheus”; Sartre) III:318
- Orpheu* (periodical) III:349
- Orpheus* (Cocteau). See Orphée
- Orpheus and Euridice* (Henryson) II:113
- Orpheus and Eurydice* (Kokoschka) III:244
- orphism III:23
- Ortega y Gasset, José III:163, III:336–337, III:435
- Ortlich Betaubt* (Local Anesthetic; Grass) III:180
- Orton, Nick II:308
- Orwell, George III:461
- Osaka Maimichi Newspaper* III:12
- Oscar (king of Sweden) III:251
- Oscar and Lucinda* (Carey) III:76, III:77
- Osceola. See Dinesen, Isak
- Osiander, Andreas II:32
- Oslo Theater III:216
- Os Maias* (Queirós) III:362
- Osorio, Elena II:161
- Ossian II:211
- Ossianic Cycle. See Fenian Cycle
- Ostromir Gospel* (Deacon Gregor) I:224–225
- Ostrovsky, Nikolai III:337, III:366
- O.T. (Andersen) III:20
- L'otage* (The Hostage; Claudel) III:95
- Othello* (Shakespeare) II:267, III:381
- Other Exiles* (Brathwaite) II:58
- The Other Guest* (Höllerer). See Der Andere Gast
- Otherland* (Yesenin). See Inoyiya
- The Other Shore* (Gao) III:158
- The Other Woman: Selected Stories* (Ogot) III:333
- The Other World* (Bergerac) II:21
- Otomo Yakamochi I:214, I:225–226
- Ōtsu Junkichi (Shiga) III:399
- Ottoman literature II:46–47
- Oudry, Jean-Baptiste II:149
- OULIPO (Workshop of Potential Literature) III:346
- O Uruguai* (Gama) II:100
- Our Friend Manso* (Pérez Galdós) III:348
- Ourika* (C. Duras) III:126
- Our Lady of the Flowers* (Genet) III:164
- Our Lord Don Quixote* (Unamuno y Jugo) III:436
- Our Man K* (Hasluck) III:195
- Our Mr. Wrenn* (Lewis) III:343
- “Our Mistress' Parlor” (Bing Xin) III:52
- Our Sister Killjoy* (Aidoo) III:10
- Our Vietnam War* (Dağlarca) III:108
- Our Voice* (periodical). See Sesimiz
- The Outcry* (Lu) III:265
- Outlaws of the Marsh* (Shi Naian and Luo Guanzhong). See Shuihuzhuan
- An Outline of the History of Chinese Philosophy* (Hu) III:210
- Outlines of Pyrrhonism* (Sextus Empiricus) I:277
- Out of Africa* (Dinesen). See Den africanske farm
- Out of Chaos* (Ehrenburg) III:130
- Out of India* (Jhabvala) III:227
- Ouyang Xiu (Ou-yang Hsiu) I:226–227
- “The Overcoat” (Gogol) III:171
- The Overcrowded Barracoon* (Naipaul) III:311
- Over the Barriers* (Pasternak) III:341
- Ovid I:227–229
allegory in II:6
influence of I:2, I:65, I:116, I:125, I:167, I:189, I:229, I:312, II:20, II:50, II:106, II:107, II:148, II:178, II:223, II:226, II:263, II:286

influences on I:60, I:202, I:203
 literary criticism on I:155, I:176,
 I:228–229, I:235, I:249, II:277
 themes of I:66, I:137
 translations of I:67, II:177, II:198
 works by I:249, I:305
 Owain (prince of Powys) I:39
 Oweiss Prize for Cultural Productivity
 III:232
 Owen, D. D. R. I:67
 Owen, Robert II:293
 Owen, Ruth J. III:183
Owls Do Cry (Frame) III:151
The Owners of the Keys (Kundera)
 III:245
 Oz, Amos III:337
 Ozerov, Vladislav Aleksandrovich
II:211

P

- Pa Chin. See Ba Jin
Pacific Fantasy (film) III:29
A Pact with Silence (Rubin) II:149
 Padma Bhushan award III:313
 Padma Shri award III:1, III:115, III:118
 Pagis, Dan III:338–339
På Gjengrodde Stier (On Overgrown Paths; Hamsun) III:190
Le Pain dur (Crusts; Claudel) III:95
 Paine, Thomas II:212–214
The Painter of His Own Dishonour
 (Calderón de la Barca) II:289
O País do Carnival (Land of Carnival; Amado) III:17
 Pak Che-ga II:136
 Pakistani writers III:140
The Pakistan Times (periodical) III:140
 Pak Mogwol III:339
Palace of Desire (Mahfouz). See Qasr al-Shawq
Palace of the Peacock (Harris) III:193
Palace Walk (Mahfouz). See *Al-
 Thulathiyya: Bayn al-Qasrayn*
 Palais-Royal Theater II:190
Pale Fire (Nabokov) III:310
 “The Pale Fox” (Minako) III:330
 Palestinian intifadah, supporters of
 III:231
 Palestinian writers III:111–112, III:188
The Palice of Honour (Douglas) II:263
 Palladius I:168
Palli Samaj (Village Society; Chatterji)
 III:88
Palm and Oak I (Allfrey) III:17
Palm and Oak II (Allfrey) III:17
 Palmer, Kingsley III:3
Palmyra (Nikolev) II:205
 Palsson, Hermann I:280
Pamela (Richardson) II:207, II:245
Pamela II (Richardson) II:245
 pamphleteers II:212–214
 Pamuk, Orhan III:339
Pan (Hamsun) III:190
 Panaetius I:17
 Panagoulis, Alexandros III:141
Panchatantra I:230–232
 and fable tradition II:10
 influence of I:232
 literary criticism on I:76, I:305
 parallels to I:235
 popularity of II:142
 themes in I:231–232
Panchatantra Reconstructed (Edgerton)
 I:232
 Pandey, Shri Mathura Datt I:154
 Pandora I:203
Panegyric to the Duke of Lerma
 (Góngora y Argote) II:106
Panegyricus (Isocrates) I:141
Panegyricus Trajani (Pliny the Younger)
 I:242
 Panic Theater III:28–29
Pan Michael (Sienkiewicz) III:400
 Panorama Literio Award (Chile) III:16
Pansori II:55
Pan Tadeusz (Mickiewicz) III:292
Pantagruel (Rabelais) II:237–238
 “The Panther” I:44
The Panther Woman (Kirsch) III:242
 “Pantophile” II:76
 Panyassis I:125
 Papago Indians I:222–223
 Papatuanuku I:206
The Paper Door (Shiga) III:399
 “Papillon du Parnasse” (“Poetic Butterfly”; La Fontaine) II:148
 Papp Carrington, Ildiko de III:306
 Papyrus of Ani I:53
 The Papyrus of Hunefer I:53 parable, v. allegory II:5
 Paracelsus III:459
Parade (Cocteau) III:96
Les Paradis artificiels (Artificial Paradises; Baudelaire) III:42
Paradise Lost (Milton) composition of I:68
 as epic I:97
 influence of III:112
 influences on I:203, II:290
 literary criticism on II:188–189
Paradise Regained (Milton) II:188
Paradiso (Dante) I:84
Paragraphs and Periods (Al-Ma`rri)
 I:180
Parallèle des Anciens et des Modernes
 (Perrault) II:221
Parallel Lives (Plutarch) I:245–246
Pardesi (film) III:1
 Pardo Bazán, Emilia de III:339–340
Las paredes oyen (The Walls Have Ears;
 Ruiz de Alarcón) II:254
 Parini, Giuseppe II:214–215
The Paris Peasant (Aragon). See Le Paysan de Paris
 Park Yong-jong. See Pak Mogwol
The Parliament of Fowls (Chaucer)
 II:51
 Parrington, Vernon II:178
Parsifal (Wagner) I:131
Le Parti pris des choses (Ponge) III:351
 Partridge, John II:278
 “Party” (Kurahashi) III:247
A Party for Boris (Bernhard). See Ein Fest Für Boris
Parzival (Wolfram von Eschenbach)
 I:131, I:329–331
 Pascal, Blaise II:215–217
 existentialism and III:137
 friends and colleagues of II:215
 literary criticism on II:216–217
 neoclassicism in II:56
 Pascal, Étienne II:215
 Pascal, Michael Henry II:87
 Pascal’s Wager II:216
 Pascoli, Giovanni III:340
Pascual López (Pardo Bazán) III:340
 Pasolini, Pier Paolo III:340–341
A Passage to India (Forster) III:226
Passion and Form (Alberti) III:13
Passion and Triumph of Christ (Peralta).
 See Passión y triunfo de Cristo
 “The Passionate Shepherd to His Love”
 (Marlowe) II:176
 “Passion for Poem-Making” (Izmailov)
 II:120
Passion For The Fatherland
 (Premchand) III:356
The Passion of G.H. (Lispector) III:264
Passión y triunfo de Cristo (Passion and Triumph of Christ; Peralta) II:220
The Passover (Vondel). See Het Pascha
Past Caring? (Onetti) III:335
 Pasternak, Boris III:341–342
 friends and colleagues of III:432
 literary criticism on III:279
 Pasternak, Leonid III:341
 Pastor, Oskar III:140
 pastoral II:217–218
 writers of II:161, II:176, II:228,
 II:266, II:270, II:272, II:282
Pastorals (Pope) II:227–228
Pastoral Songs (Tian) III:425
Pather Dabi (The Right Way; Chatterji)
 III:88
The Path to the Nest of Spiders (Calvino)
 III:73
Patience (Pearl poet) II:218, II:271
 Patnaik Biju III:289
 Paton, Alan III:342–343

- The Patrioteer* (H. Mann). See Der Untertan
- "Patriotism" (Mishima) III:295
- The Patriots* (Munford) II:198
- Paul (Pavel) I (czar of Russia) II:105, 205
- Paul III (pope) II:20, II:62, II:71, II:119
- Paula* (Allende) III:16
- Paula* (periodical) III:15
- Pausanias I:232–233, I:237
- Pavese, Cesare III:343
- Pavlov, Nikolay F. III:344
- Pavlova, Karolina Karlovna III:343–344
- Pax Romana I:31, I:150, I:175, I:242, I:243, I:294
- Le Paysan de Paris* (The Paris Peasant; Aragon) III:25
- The Paysan Parvenu: or, The Fortunate Peasant* (Marivaux) II:175
- Les Paysans* (Balzac). See The Peasants
- Paz, Octavio III:344–345
- forerunners of III:111
- influences on III:160
- literary criticism by III:150
- literary criticism on III:155
- modernism and III:299
- p³ Bitek, Okot III:345–346
- Peace* (Aristophanes) I:20–21
- Peach Blossom Fan* (Kong Shangren). See Taohuashan
- "Peanuts" (cartoon) III:423
- Pearl* I:219, II:50, II:150, II:218, II:271
- Pearl poet* II:218
- The Pearls of the Pearl of Princesses* (Marguerite de Navarre). See Les Marguerites de la Marguerite des Princesses
- The Peasants* (Les Paysans; Balzac) III:38
- Peasant's Revolt of 1381 II:50, II:150
- The Peasant Who Gets Ahead in the World* (Marivaux) II:175
- Le Peau de chagrin* (The Wild Ass's Skin; Balzac) III:37
- Peck, George I:144
- "A Peculiar Occupation" (Öe) III:331
- The Pedant Outwitted* (de Bergerac) II:21
- The Peddler* (Handke). See Der Hausierer
- Pederson, Knut. See Hamsun, Knut
- Pedro II (emperor of Brazil) II:7, III:15
- Peer Gynt* (Ibsen) III:216–217
- Peirre of Amiens I:80
- Pélagie-la-Charette* (Maillet) III:274
- Pele I:206
- Pelléas et Mélisande* (Maeterlinck) III:270
- P.E.N. Club prize III:183
- "The Penal Colony" (Kafka) III:233
- Pen Club Awards III:434
- Le Pendu de Saint Pholier* (Simenon) III:401
- The Penguin Book of New Zealand Verse* (Curnow, ed.) III:105
- Penn, William II:212
- The Pennsylvania Gazette* (periodical) II:95
- Pennsylvania Magazine* (periodical) II:212
- Pensées* (Thoughts; Pascal) II:216, III:137
- Il Penseroso* (Milton) II:188
- La Pentecoste* (Manzoni) III:283–284
- Penthesilea* (Kleist) II:137
- Peonies Kana* (Masaoka) III:286
- The Peony Pavilion* (Tang) II:282
- Pepys, Samuel II:218–220
- Peralta Barnuevo, Pedro de II:220
- Perburuan* (Toer) III:427
- Perceval, or the Story of the Grail* (Chrétien de Troyes) I:67, I:68, I:130–131
- Percikan Revolusi* (Toer) III:427
- Percy, Thomas II:84
- Perce, Georges III:346
- Père de famille* (Father of a Family; Diderot) II:76–77
- Le Père Goriot* (Father Goriot; Balzac) III:38
- Le Père humilié* (The Humiliation of the Father; Claudel) III:95
- Peretz, Isaac Lieb III:346–347
- Pérez de Ayala, Ramón III:163
- Pérez Galdós, Benito III:340, III:347–348
- A Perfect Peace* (Oz) III:337
- Pergolesi, Giovanni B. II:185
- Pericles I:237, I:307
- The Periodic Table* (Levi) III:262
- El periquillo sarniento* (The Itching Parrot; Fernández de Lizardi) II:93
- Perlesvaus* I:131
- Permettez!* (Queneau) III:362
- Perotti, Nicholas I:235
- Perpetual Movement* (Aragon). See Le Mouvement perpetual
- Perrault, Charles II:148, II:221
- Perry, Donna III:241
- Perse, Saint-John III:348
- Persephone I:203
- Persian Letters* (Montesquieu). See Lettres Persanes
- Persian literature
- works I:277–279
- writers I:106–107, I:211–212, I:219–221, I:268–269, II:109
- The Persians* (Aeschylus) I:4–5, I:136
- The Persian Wars* (Herodotus). See History (Herodotus)
- A Personal Matter* (Öe) III:332
- Peruvian literature II:101, II:220, III:439–440, III:440–441
- Pessoa, Fernando III:349, III:384
- Petals of Blood* (Ngugi) III:322
- Peter I. See Peter the Great
- Peter III (czar of Russia) II:46
- Peterborough Examiner* (periodical) III:112
- Peter Camenzind* (Hesse) III:203
- Peter of Beauvais I:67
- Petersburg* (Bely) III:48
- Peter the Great (czar of Russia)
- court and associates of II:40, II:154, II:232, III:358
- works on II:233, II:298–299, III:358
- Petite Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres II:221
- Le Petit Prince* (The Little Prince; Saint-Exupéry) III:380–381
- Les Petits poèmes en prose* (Little Prose Poems; Baudelaire) III:42
- Petracco, Francesco. See Petrarch
- Petrarca Lyric Prize III:66
- Petrarch (Francesco Petrarco)
- II:221–223
- classicism in II:56, II:244
- editors of II:20
- friends and colleagues of II:22, II:50, II:97, II:222
- humanism and II:115
- influence of I:66, II:9, II:11, II:20, II:23, II:48, II:71, II:94, II:144, II:161, II:162, II:187, II:222, II:226, II:248, II:270
- influences on I:2, I:25, I:147, I:185, I:229, I:250, I:254, I:313, II:23
- literary criticism on II:22, II:222–223
- themes of I:66
- works by II:273, II:274
- Petrolio* (Pasolini) III:341
- Petronius I:174, I:233, I:233–234
- Petrovich, Avvakum. See Avvakum
- Phaedo* (Plato) I:238, I:281
- Phaedra* (Seneca) I:276
- Phaedrus I:234–236
- influence of II:142, II:149
- literary criticism on I:234–235
- parallels to I:230
- Phantom Dwelling* (Wright) III:452
- Pharmacopodia* (Bartram) II:17
- Pharsalia* (Civil War; Lucan) I:175–176
- Pharsamon* (Marivaux) II:174–175
- Phèdre* (Racine) II:240, II:241
- Phenomena* (Euclid) I:101
- Philinus I:92
- Philip (count of Flanders) I:67
- Philip* (Isocrates) I:27, I:141

580 Cumulative Index

- Philip, Governor II:284
 Philip, King. See Metacomet
 Philip II (king of Macedonia) I:22, I:27, I:90, I:141, I:300
 Philip II (king of Spain) II:38, II:47, II:164, II:260, II:294
 Philip IV (king of Spain) II:105
 Philip of Swabia I:319
 Philippe of Novare I:263
 Philippi, Donald I:160
Philippicus (Cicero) I:69
Philippicus (Demosthenes) I:27, I:90
 Philippino writers III:382–383
 “Philip Sparrow” (Skelton) II:272
 Philip the Fair (king of France) I:147
 Philistus I:92
 Phillipa (queen of England) II:97
 Phillipart, Georgette III:440
Philoctetes (Sophocles) I:286
 philosophes II:85, II:242–243, II:249–250
The Philosophical Dictionary (Voltaire) II:298, II:299
Philosophical Fragments (Schlegel) II:261
The Philosophy of Lao Zhang (Lao) III:256
Philosophy of Love (Hebreo). See Dialog: d’amore
 Philostratus II:128
Philotas (Lessing) II:157
 Phlubphla Mali Literary Award III:117
Phoenix (Nikolev) II:205
 The Phoenix II:162
The Phormio (Terence) I:300
 photographic realism III:350–351
The Physicists (Dürrenmatt). See Die Physiker
Physics (Aristotle) I:23
Die Physiker (The Physicists; Dürrenmatt) III:128
Physiologus I:44
 picaresque novels I:233
 Picasso, Pablo
 friends and colleagues of III:13, III:23, III:96, III:439
 works on III:25
 Piccinni, Niccolò II:104
The Pick Up (Gordimer) III:178
 Pico della Mirandola, Count Giovanni II:223–224, II:226, II:233
The Picture of Dorian Gray (Wilde) III:113
 “A Picture with No Composition” (Ōba) III:330
 Pidal, Menéndez I:72
 Pidoux, Françoise II:148
La piedra cansada (The exhausted rock; Vallejo) III:440
 Pierre de Ronsard I:66
 Pierre de Saint-Cloud I:262
Pierre et Jean (Maupassant) III:286
 Pierrepont, Sarah II:80
Piers Plowman (Langland) I:190, I:219, I:302, II:6
Pietà (Michelangelo) II:186
Pigments (Damas) III:317
 “The Pilgrimage to India” (Wu Chengen) II:308
 Pilgrims II:28–29
The Pillar of Fire (Gumilev) II:185–186
The Pillar of Salt (Memmi). See La Statue de sel
Pillow Book (Sei Shōnagon). See Makura no Soshi
 Pilpay I:235, II:149
 Pima Indians I:222–223
 Pimentel, Maria II:94
Pinakes I:59
 Pinalie, Pierre III:85
 Pincherle, Albert. See Moravia, Alberto
 Pindar I:4, I:17, I:37, I:236–237, II:105, II:248
 Pine-Coffin, R. S. I:31
Ping-fa (The Art of War; Sunzi) I:290
 Ping Hsin. See Bing Xin
 Pinter, Harold III:425
 Pirandello, Luigi III:349–350
 “The Pirate’s Song” (Espronceda) III:136
 Pisan, Christine de I:66, I:190, I:261, II:145, II:210, II:224–225
 Pisan, Thomas of II:224
 Pistoia, Cino da I:85
The Pit (Onetti). See El Pozo
 “Pitiful Captive” (Ibn Gabirol) I:139
 Pizarro, Francisco I:199
The Place at Whitton (Keneally) III:239 plague impact of I:190, II:244, II:255 victims of II:59, II:144, II:150, II:222
 works on II:70, II:219
The Plague (Camus) III:74
The Plague Column (Seifert) III:394
Les Plaideurs (Racine) II:240
Le Planétarium (Sarraute) III:387
Un Plat de porc aux bananes vertes (A Dish of Pork with Green Bananas; Schwarz-Bart and Schwarz-Bart) III:392
Platero y yo (Jiménez) III:227
 Plato I:237–239
 allegory in II:6
 contemporaries of I:20, I:141, I:238, I:281, I:300 influence of I:1, I:18, I:19, I:22, I:27, I:29, I:33, I:100, I:167, I:244, I:245, I:270, I:301, II:39, II:56, II:244, II:262, II:282, III:94, III:407
 literary criticism by I:173, I:273
 literary criticism on I:173, I:238–239
 philosophical method of I:277
 translations of I:50, I:238, II:115
 works by I:281, I:282, II:293
 works on I:33, I:70, I:248
 Platonov, Andrey III:405
 Plautus, Titus Maccius I:239–241 adaptations of II:38
 farce in II:92
 influence of II:9, II:58, II:60, II:157
 influences on I:188
 literary criticism on I:299–300
Play (Beckett) III:45
Play (Dhasal). See Khel
The Playmaker (Keneally) III:240
The Play of Madness (Adam de la Halle) I:3–4
The Play of Robin and Marion (Adam de la Halle) I:3
The Play of the Sacrament II:67
Pleasures and Regrets (Proust) III:356
The Pleasures of Exile (Lamming) III:254
 “The Pleasures of Leisure” (Shen Fu) II:268
Pleasures of the Enchanted Isle (Molière) II:190
Pleasure with Profit (Tirso de Molina) II:287
The Plebeians Rehearse the Uprising (Grass). See Die Plebejer Proben den Aufstand
Die Plebejer Proben den Aufstand (The Plebeians Rehearse the Uprising; Grass) III:180
 Pléiade II:225–226
 Pliny the Elder I:241–242
 Pliny the Younger I:242–243
 contemporaries of I:172, I:186, I:242, I:254, I:293
 on Pliny the Elder I:241
 Plotinus I:244–245
 contemporaries of I:248
 influence of I:244, I:248, I:249
 works on I:173
The Ploughman (White) III:448
Pluie et vent sur Télumée Miracle (The Bridge of Beyond; Schwarz-Bart) III:392
 “Plum Blossoms” (Li Qingzhao) I:170
Plume (Michaux) III:291
The Plum in the Golden Vase (Xiao Xiaosheng). See Jin Ping Mei Plutarch I:245–246
 contemporaries of I:93

- influence of II:46, II:62
influences on I:302
translations of II:115
works by I:127
- Pluto I:202
- PN Review* (periodical) III:51
- "Po, The Great" (Kauraka) III:237
- Po Chü-i. See Bai Juyi
- Pocket Songbook* (Dmitriev) II:77
- Poe, Edgar Allan
influence of III:55, III:103, III:390,
III:419
influences on I:306, III:206
translations of III:41, III:365
- "Poem" (Köhler). See "Gedicht"
- Poema e mio Cid* I:72–73, I:97
- Poemas Lusitanos* (Ferreira) II:94
- Poemat O Czasie* (Poem in Frozen Time; Milosz) III:293
- Poème de Fontenoy* (Voltaire) II:298
- Poèmes* (Hébert) III:200
- Poèmes antiques et modernes* (Vigny)
III:443
- Poèmes pour la paix* (Éluard) III:131
- Poèmes saturniens* (Verlaine) III:443
- Poème sur la loi naturelle* (Voltaire)
II:298
- Poem in Frozen Time* (Milosz). See
Poemat O Czasie
- The Poem of the Cid* I:72–73, I:97
- Poems* (Akhmadulina) III:10
- Poems* (Huchel). See Gedichte (Huchel)
- Poems* (Kaschnitz). See Gedichte
(Kaschnitz)
- Poems* (Mandelstam). See Tristiya
- Poems* (Mansfield) III:283
- Poems* (Södergran). See Dikter
- Poems* (Trakl) III:430
- Poems* (Walcott) III:446
- Poems, Dramatic and Miscellaneous*
(Warren) II:303
- Poems 1975–76* (Malouf) III:277
- Poems About a Soviet Passport*
(Mayakovsky) III:287
- Poems by Jaime Torres Bodet* (Torres Bodet) III:430
- Poems Dedicated to Fighters* (Tian)
III:425
- Poems from the Bamboo Village*
(Masaoka) III:286
- Poems from the Lakes and Seas* (Kong Shangren). See Hu hai ji
- Poems in Stanzas* (Hadewijch) I:118
- Poems in the Lap of Death* (Fraire)
III:150
- Poems of America* (Mayakovsky) III:287
- Poems on Various Subjects, Religious and* Moral (Wheatley) II:304
- Poems to the Czechs* (Tsvetaeva) III:432
- Poesia* (periodical) III:284
- "Poesias Avulsas" (Andrada e Silva) II:7
- Poésias completas* (Complete Poems; Olmedo) II:210
- Poésie et vérité* (Éluard) III:131
- Un poeta en la historia* (Melon) III:184
- The Poet Assassinated* (Apollinaire)
III:24
- Poetical Meditations* (Lamartine). See
Méditations Poétiques
- Poetical Works* (Olmedo). See Obras
poéticas
- "Poetic Butterfly" (La Fontaine). See
"Papillon du Parnasse"
- Poetic Edda* I:95, I:204–205
- The Poetic Memoirs of Lady Daibu*
(Daibu) I:82
- poetic realism III:234, III:350–351
- Poetics* (Aristotle) I:23–24 on deus ex machina I:91 on hubris I:136
influence of I:21, II:128, II:185,
II:282
literary criticism on I:173
on tragedy II:288
on unities II:128, II:292
works on II:292
- Poet in New York* (García Lorca) III:159
- Poétique* (periodical) III:93
- Poet of the Year (Ghana) III:23
- Poetries* (Gautier) III:162
- poetry. See also Bardic poetry; Nahuatl poetry; Old English poetry; Purana; Tanka; troubadours; Zuni, narrative poetry
Aztec I:208–209
bardic. See bardic poetry ci poetry I:171, I:327 fu poetry I:253, I:338, I:340
haiku. See haiku
lyric I:37
neoteric poets I:62
pastorals II:217–218
shi poetry I:171
Zuni narrative poetry I:78, I:328,
I:340–341
- Poetry* (periodical) III:243, III:367
- Poetry Is Not You* (Castellanos) III:79
- Poet's Corner II:50
- Poets of the Confederation III:373
- Pointe-aux-Coques* (Maillet) III:274
- Points of Departure* (Pagis) III:338
- Poire-acre* (Maillet) III:274
- "Poking Fun at a Bronze" (Ho) III:205
- Poland, censorship in III:173, III:293,
III:294
- The Police* (Mrozek) III:304
- Polish literature II:140–141, II:243,
III:172–173, III:292–293, III:293–294,
III:303–304, III:346–347, III:400–401,
III:402–403, III:420, III:433–434
- Polish Renaissance II:243
- Il Politecnico* (periodical) III:73
- Political Discourses* (Della Casa) II:71
- "The Political Moment in Jamaica"
(Meeks) III:289
- Political Principles* (Constant de Rebecque). See Principes de politique
- Politics* (Aristotle) I:23
- Poliziano, Angelo Ambrogini II:187,
II:226–227, II:233
- Pollard, Alfred W. II:67
- Polo, Marco I:81, I:190, I:246–248,
I:247, II:303
- Poltava* (Pushkin) III:358
- Polybius I:308
- Polycrates (king of Samos) I:14
- Polyeucte* (Corneille) II:64
- Polynesian writers III:236–237
- Pombal, marqués de II:100
- Pommereul, Général de III:37–38
- Pompey I:57–58, I:175
- Pondo Women Cleaners* (Malange)
III:275
- Ponge, Francis III:224, III:351
- Poor Bitos* (The Masked Dinner; Anouilh) III:22
- Poor Folk* (Dostoyevsky) III:123
- Poor Heinrich* (Hartmann) I:124
- "Poor Liza" (Karamzin) III:235
- Poor Richard's Almanac* II:95
- Poot, Linke. See Döblin, Alfred
- Popa, Vasko III:351–352
- Pope, Alexander II:227–229
critics of II:299
friends and colleagues of II:278,
II:283
influence of II:304
influences on I:237, I:254, I:322,
II:280
literary criticism by I:174
literary criticism on II:215, II:277,
II:280
neoclassicism and II:202
- Popol Vuh* II:180, II:184, II:229–230
- Poppy and Memories* (Celan) III:82
- Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) III:320
- Poquelin, Jean-Baptiste. See Molière
- Por la puente Juana* (Across the Bridge, Juana; Lope de Vega) II:162
- Pornografia* (Gombrowicz) III:173
- pornography, opinions on III:40
- Porphyry I:248
contemporaries of I:248
influence of I:248, I:249
works by I:173, I:244
- Porter, William I:159
- Portinari, Beatrice I:83

582 Cumulative Index

- Portrait d'un homme inconnu* (Portrait of an Unknown Man; Sarraute) III:321, III:387
- Portrait in Sepia* (Allende) III:16
- Portrait of an Unknown Man* (Sarraute). See Portrait d'un homme inconnu
- Portrait of a Ruffled Collar* (Santa Cruz y Espejo). See Retrato de golilla
- Portraits de peintres* (Proust) III:356
- Portuguese literature II:38–39, II:93–94, II:274, III:326, III:349, III:361–362, III:363, III:384–385
- Portulano, Antoinetta III:349
- Poseidon I:202
- Posidonius I:92
- Poslední Máj* (The Last May; Kundera) III:245
- The Possessed* (Dostoyevsky) III:75, III:124
- postcolonialism III:352–354
figures associated with III:142, III:297, III:395, III:409
- The Posthumous Memoirs of Brás Cubas* (Machado de Assis) III:268
- postmodernism III:354–355
in China III:300
figures associated with III:37, III:64, III:151, III:193
realism and III:365
- poststructuralism III:355
- Postwar German Literature* (Demetz) III:134
- Potemin, Grigorii II:72
- Pot Luck* (Zola) III:463
- "A Pot of Rice" (Lim) III:263
- Le Potomak* (Cocteau) III:96
- The Pots, Pans and Burning Fire Before Me* (Ishigaki). See Watashi no Mae ni Aru Nabe to Okama to Moeru Hi to
- P'oun. See Jung Mong Joo
- Pound, Ezra I:25, I:147, III:150, III:422
- Powell, Mary II:188
- Power Politics* (Roy) III:376
- El Pozo* (The Pit; Onetti) III:335
- Practicalities* (M. Duras) III:127–128
- Practical Learning philosophy. See Shirhak
- Prado, Diego de II:230–231
- Prado y Tovar, de. See Prado, Diego de Praga, Emilio III:390
- Praise to the Science of Killing Time* (Krylov) II:142
- Pratt, Leonard II:269
- Pravadelli, Veronica III:130
- Pravda* (periodical) III:139
- The Prayer Against the Turks* (Marulić) II:178
- "Prayer to Aphrodite" (Sappho) I:272
- Praying Indians II:82
- Les Précieuses ridicules* (The Folly of Affection; Molière) II:58, II:190
- The Precipice* (Goncharov) III:174
- A Precocious Autobiography* (Yevtushenko) III:457
- "Preface" (Han) III:191
- Premchand, Munshi III:19, III:92, III:355–356
- La Première Aventure céleste de Monsieur Antipyrine* (The First Heavenly Adventure of Mr. Antipyrine; Tzara) III:434
- Premio Mondello Five Continents Award (Italy) III:186
- Premio Riccione award (Italy) III:73
- Preparatory Meditations* (Taylor) II:283
- Presença* (periodical) III:349
- Présence Africaine* III:317–318
- Present Past, Past Present* (Ionesco) III:220
- Press, Alan I:313
- Prévost, Antoine-François (Abbé Prévost) I:66, II:231–232
- Price-Mars, Jean III:317
- Prigogine, Ilya III:355
- Primeiras letras* (Anchieta) II:6
- Primeiros cantos* (First Cantos; Gonçalves Dias) III:174, III:219
- The Prime of Life* (Beauvoir) III:42
- Primera Crónica General* I:72
- "Primer sueño" (Cruz) II:66
- "Primer sueño" (Quevedo) II:66
- Primicias de la cultura de Quito* (periodical) II:259
- Primo de Rivera, Miguel III:435
- Primo Vere* (First Spring; D'Annunzio) III:109
- The Prince* (Machiavelli) II:168–170
- Prince Friedrich of Homburg* (Kleist) II:137
- The Princes of Ireland* (Rutherford) I:201
- La Princesse de Navarre* (Voltaire) II:298
- La Princesse Maleine* (Maeterlinck) III:270
- The Princess of Cleves* (Lafayette) II:147
- The Princess of Montpensier* (Lafayette) II:147
- The Princess of Spadina: a Tale of Toronto* (Espinet) III:135
- Principal Navigations* (Hakluyt) II:112
- Principes de politique* (Political Principles; Constant de Rebecque) III:102
- Principia* (Swedenborg) II:278
- Principles of Literature* (Parini) II:214
- Principles of Poetry* (Sakutarō) III:189
- Pringle Award III:317
- Printemps* (Aubigné) II:11
- printing press, impact of I:190, II:244
- Prison Diary* (Rinsler). See Statische Gedichte
- Prisoner of Love* (Genet) III:164
- "The Prisoner of the Caucasus" (Pushkin) III:358
- Prison narrative* (Faiz). See Zindan Namah
- Private View* (Havel) III:197
- Prix de la Découverte Européenne III:339
- Prix du Centre National du Livre (France) III:29
- Prix Goncourt (France)
establishment of III:175
winners III:85, III:127, III:274, III:278
- Prix Maurice Maeterlinck III:121
- Prix Medici III:346
- Prix Renaudot III:346
- Prized Pieces competition III:253
- Prize for the Arts (Center for International Exchanges) III:144
- Pro Archia* (Cicero) I:70
- Problems in Grammar* (Pliny the Elder) I:241
- Problems of Arithmetic* (Omar Khayyám) I:219
- Proclus I:249
- Professor Unrat* (The Blue Angel; H. Mann) III:280
- Pro Flacco* (Cicero) I:70
- progressive poetry [Telugu school] III:410–411
- Project for a Revolution in New York* (Robbe-Grillet) III:373
- Project of Translation from Arabic Literature III:225
- Prokopovitch, Eleazar. See Prokopovitch, Feofan
- Prokopovitch, Feofan II:232, II:277
- The Prolegomena* (Muqaddimah; Ibn Khaldūn) II:117–118
- Prometheus I:137, I:202, I:203
- Prometheus Bound* (Aeschylus) I:5
- The Promised Land* (Ogot) III:332, III:333
- I prommessi sposi* (The Betrothed; Manzoni) III:283–284
- Pro Murena* (Cicero) I:70
- Proof of the Spirit and of Power* (Lessing) II:158
- Propertius, Sextus I:60, I:249–250, II:71
- Prophecies of Merlin* (Geoffrey of Monmouth) I:112
- "The Prophecy and Advice of the Priest Xupan Nauat" II:54
- "The Prophecy of Oxlahun-Ti-Ku-for Katun 13 Ahau" II:54

“The Prophetic Words of the Great Prophets, the Principal Gods of the Underworld, and the Great Priests” II:54
Prose della Volgar Lingua (Prose in the Vernacular; Bembo) II:20
Prose Edda (Snorri Sturluson) I:95, I:204, I:269, I:280
Prose in the Vernacular (Bembo). See Prose della Volgar Lingua
Prose Lancelot I:68, II:171
Proserpina (Langgässer) III:256
Prost (Bernhard) III:50
Pro Sulla (Cicero) I:70
 Protagoras I:101
Protest (Havel) III:197
 Protestantism
 founding of II:37–38, II:165–166
 influence of II:59
 Protestant Reformation. See Reformation
 Proust, Marcel III:356–358
 influence of III:71, III:226, III:272
 influences on I:306, III:384
 literary criticism on III:48, III:307
 “Proverb as Metaphor in the Poetry of Louise Bennett” (Cooper) III:49 proverbs, African I:8–9
A Provincial Lady (Turgenev) III:433
Provincial Letters (Pascal) II:217
Prudence in Women (Tirso de Molina) II:287
La prueba de las promesas (The Test of Promises; Ruiz de Alarcón) II:254
 “Pruning Trees” (Bai) I:38
 Psellus, Michael I:244
Pseudo-martyr (Donne) II:78
 psychoanalysis, influence of III:96, III:203
The Psychopathology of Everyday Life (Freud) III:152
 Ptolemy
 influence of I:118, I:167, II:33, II:62, II:302, II:303
 works on I:92
 Ptolemy I (pharaoh of Egypt) I:100, I:187–188
 Ptolemy II (pharaoh of Egypt) I:59, I:60
Public Opinion (periodical) III:446
Publikumsbeschimpfung (Offending the Audience; Handke) III:192
Publisher's Weekly (periodical) III:16, III:57
 Puccini, Giacomo II:232, III:442
El Pueblo (periodical) III:54
 Puerto Rican writers III:144–145
Pugachev (Yesenin) III:456
Pugachev Revolt II:46, II:72
 Pulci, Bernardo II:233

Pulci, Luca II:233
 Pulci, Luigi II:9, II:232–233
 Pulitzer Prize, nominations for III:57
Punishment without Revenge (Lope de Vega) II:162 puppet theater, Japanese. See Bunraku purana I:250–251
 composition of I:182, I:315
 oral literature and I:224
Puranatna I:251
Purgatorio (Dante) I:84
 Puritans II:28–30, II:69, II:81–82, II:178–180, II:283, II:305, II:306
The Puritans (Miller, ed.) II:180
Purity (Cleanness; Pearl poet) II:218, II:271
 “The Pursuit” (Carpentier) III:78–79
 Pushkin, Aleksandr III:358–359
 family of II:233
 friends and colleagues of III:292, III:432
 influence of III:11, III:123, III:202, III:261, III:397
 influences on III:235
 literary criticism by II:160
 literary criticism on III:279, III:287
 poetic realism in III:350
 translations of III:344, III:434
 Pushkin, Sergei II:233
 Pushkin, V[asilii] L'vovich II:233–234
 Pushkin Prize III:70, III:89
 “Puss in Boots” (Perrault) II:221
 “Pwyll, Lord of Dyfed” I:201
Pygmalion (Shaw) I:203
 Pyramid texts I:53
 Pyrrho I:277
 Pythagoras I:248
Pythian IV (Pindar) I:236

Q

Qabbani. See Kabbani, Nizar
Qadaya al-shi'r al-mu'asir (“Issues in Contemporary Arabic Poetry”; Mal'ika) III:275
Al-Qahirah al-jadidah (Modern Cairo; Mahfouz) III:272–273
 El Q'Anil. See Komam Q'Anil, Epic of al-Qanun fi al-Thibb (The Canon of Medicine; Avicenna) I:34–35
qasidah I:13, I:120, I:298
 “Qasidat al-Burda” (“Ode to the Mantle”; al-Büsürî) I:55
 Qāsim, Abu al-. See Muhammad
Qasr al-Shawq (Palace of Desire; Mahfouz) III:272
 Qat I:207
 Qianlung (Ch'ien-lung; Qian Long; emperor of China) II:41, II:159
 Qin Zihao III:459
 Quakers II:75, II:195, II:307
Quang Trung Tu Menh Tap (Letters and commands from the time of military service; Nguyen Trai) II:204
Quarantine (Haslucks) III:195
 Quarrel of the Ancients and Moderns II:2
Quartet (Krylov) II:142
 Quasimodo III:212
 Quasimodo, Salvatore III:360–361
 Québécois literature III:200, III:294
 “Queen Mab's Veil” (Dario) III:111
The Queen of Spades (Pushkin) III:359
 Queen's gold medal for poetry III:105, III:452
 Queirós, José Maria de III:361–362
 Queiróz, Eça de. See Queirós, José Maria de Queiróz, Raquel de III:362
Qu Elegies I:252–253
 “Que m'accompagnent kóras et balaphong” (“To the Music of Koras and Balaphon”; Senghor) III:396
 Queneau, Raymond III:362–363
 Quennell, Peter II:228
 Quental, Antero Tarquino de III:363
The Quest (Langgässer) III:256
Qu'est-ce la Littérature? (What Is Literature?; Sartre) III:389
La Queste del Saint Graal I:131
Question of Power (Head) III:200
Questions Féministes (periodical) III:450
 Quetzacoatl I:208–209
 Quetzalcoatl, myth of II:181, II:235
 Quevedo, Francisco de II:66, II:105–106, II:235–236, II:285
 Quiché Mayan literature II:229–230
 Quietism II:92
The Quilt (Chughtai) III:92
 Quintana, Ricardo II:279
 Quintilian I:253–254
 influence of I:254, II:115
 influences on I:10, I:23, I:302
 life of I:186
 literary criticism by I:172, I:249
 opinions expressed by I:173
 works by I:241
 Quintilianus, Marcus Fabius. See Quintilian
The Quintuplet (Nezāmi). See Khamseh
Quoc Am Thi Tap (Volume of poems in the national tongue; Nguyen Trai) II:204
Quo Vadis (Sienkiewicz) III:401
 Qur'an. See Koran
 Qu You (Ch'ü Yu) II:135–137
 Qu Yuan (Ch'ü Yüan) I:252–253, I:254–255

R

- Rabéarivelo, Jean-Joseph III:364–365
- Rabelais, François II:237–239
 humanism in II:115
 influence of I:305, II:148
 influences on I:176, I:245, I:302
 literary criticism on II:280
 Renaissance and II:244
- Rabémananjara, Jacques III:318
- Rabinal Achi* II:239
- Rabinowitz, Sholem. See Aleichem, Shalom
- Rabutin, Celse Bénigne de, baron de Chantal II:265
- Rabutin-Chantal, Marie de. See Sévigné, Madame de
- Raccolta aragonese* (Medici and Poliziano, eds.) II:182
- Racial Formations/Critical Transformations* (San Juan) III:383
- Racine* (Giraudoux) III:169
- Racine, Jean II:239–241
 Académie française and II:2
 career of II:64
 friends and colleagues of II:24–25, II:190
 influence of II:174
 influences on I:203, I:245
 literary criticism on II:63, II:241, II:299, III:308
 neoclassicism and II:56, II:202, III:375
 translations of III:437
 works by II:289
- Racine and Shakespeare* (Stendahl) III:414
- Racism* (Memmi) III:290
- racism, works on III:84, III:326, III:342, III:383, III:395
- Radcliffe, Ann II:247
- Radewyn, Florentius II:286
- Radical Caribbean: From Black Power to Abu Bakr* (Meeks) III:288
- The Radical Imagination* (Harris) III:194
- Radiguet, Raymond III:96
- Radishchev, Aleksander Nikolayevich II:242, II:290
- Radunitsa (Mourning for the Dead; Yesenin)* III:456
- The Ragazzi* (Pasolini) III:341
- La Rage de l'expression* (Ponge) III:351
- Raghuvamsa* (Kalidasa) I:317
- Ragionamenti* (Aretino) II:7
- Ragnarok I:205
- Rai, Navab. See Premchand, Munshi
- “The Railway and the Churchyard” (Björson) III:53
- Raimon (Raymond; count of Toulouse) I:318
- Rainardo* I:262
- The Rain Ascends* (Kogawa) III:243
- The Rainbow* (Ausländer). See Der Regenbogen
- “The Rainbow and the Floating Bridge” (Ō) III:330
- A Rainbow for the Christian West* (Dépestre) III:114
- “Rain Falling Thick and Fast in the Spring Night” (Mo) III:297
- Raj: A Novel* (Mehta) III:289
- Rajmohan's Wife* (Cattopadhyay) III:80
- Rakhmaninov, Sergey III:90
- Rakhsh I:106
- Raleigh, Sir Walter II:30, II:112
- Rama I:316–317
- Rama, Ángel III:144
- Ramakien* I:317
- The Ramayana*
 adaptations of III:389–390
 composition of I:45, I:315–316
 influence of I:317
 literary criticism on I:181
 translations of III:313
- Ramayana—The Celestial Tree* (Satyanarayana) III:389–390
- RaMBaM I:183
- Rambler* essays II:28, II:202
- Ramcharitmanas* (Tulsidas) I:317
- Rameau's Nephew* (Diderot). See Le Neveu de Rameau
- Ramos, Graciliano III:362
- Randolph, Peyton II:198
- Random Thoughts* (Ba Jin) III:35
- Random Ventures in Idleness* (Li Yu). See Xian-qing ou-ji
- Rangi I:206
- Ranginui I:206
- Rao Srinivasa, Srirangam. See Sri Sri
- The Rape of Tamar* (Tirso de Molina) II:287
- The Rape of the Lock* (Pope) II:202, II:215, II:228
- “Rapunzel” (Grimm and Grimm) III:182
- Rashōmon* (Akutagawa) III:12
- Rasporich, Beverly III:306
- The Rat* (Grass). See Die Rättin
- Rata I:207
- “The Rat and the Frog” (Aesop) I:7
- The Ratcatcher* (Tsvetaeva) III:432
- rationalism II:242–243
 Enlightenment and II:85, II:101, II:160, II:242–243, II:249–250
 reaction against II:101
- Die Rättin* (The Rat; Grass) III:180, III:181
- Ravikovitch, Dahlia III:365
- Rawi, Balqis al- III:231–232
- Rāwiyah, Hammād al- I:298
- Rawlinson, George I:126–127
- Ray Bahadur* (honorary title) III:81
- Raymond of Aguilers I:80
- Raymond V of Toulouse I:43
- Reaching Tin River* (Astley) III:31
- Reading and Writing: a Personal Account* (Naipaul) III:312
- The Read Life of Sebastian Knight* (Nabokov) III:309
- A Real Account of the Life of a Respectable Person* (Rej) II:243
- Real Commentaries* (Garcilaso de la Vega) II:101
- realism III:365–367. See also magic realism; poetic realism; Socialist Realism; verismo
 acmeism and III:419
 in drama II:175
 expressionism and III:138
 influence of III:442
 limitations of III:271–272
 literary criticism on II:264
 modernism and III:298
 naturalism and III:315
 in novels, development of II:70
 photographic III:350–351
 practitioners of III:37, III:171, III:174, III:196, III:217, III:222, III:234, III:327, III:335, III:339, III:347, III:394, III:416
 rejection of III:56
 romanticism and III:374
 Russian III:125, III:171, III:174
 symbolism and III:418–419
 unities and II:292
 v. poetic realism III:350
 verismo and III:442
- realist school (China) III:366–367
- The Rebel* (Camus). See L'Homme Révolté
- The Rebel Angels* (Davies) III:113
- Rechy, John I:233
- Recinos, Adrian II:230
- recluse poets (China) I:297
- The Recognition of Sakuntala* (Kalidasa) I:154
- The Red and the Black* (Stendhal). See Le Rouge et le noir
- Red Book of Hergest* I:201
- The Red Branch* (Llywelyn) I:201
- Red Cavalry* (Babel) III:36
- Red Dawn* (Djebar). See Rouge l'aube
- Reddick, John III:68
- Reder, Michael III:378
- “The Red Front” (Aragon) III:25
- The Red Room* (Strindberg) III:416
- Red Sorghum* (Mo) III:297
- Reef* (Gunesekara) III:186
- “The Reeve's Tale” (Chaucer) II:91
- Reflections* (Soyinka) III:410

- Reflections of moral sentences and maxims* (La Rochefoucauld). See Réflexions ou sentences et maxims morales
- Reflections of the Causes of Heat and Cold* (Lomonosov) II:160
- Reflections on the Romans* (Montesquieu) II:194
- "Reflections on Titles" (Paine) II:213
- Réflexions ou sentences et maxims morales* (Reflections of moral sentences and maxims; La Rochefoucauld) II:151
- Reformation
 Counter-Reformation and II:282 forerunners of II:197 impact of II:47, II:244
 influences on II:89
 Renaissance and II:71
- Der Regenbogen* (The Rainbow; Ausländer) III:32
- A Regicide* (Robbe-Grillet) III:372
- regional novels III:53
- The Region of the Summer Stars* (Williams) I:131
- La Règle du jeu* (Rules of the Game; Manhood; Leiris) III:260
- The Regrets* (Bellay) II:20
- Regulations for the Confessors of Spaniards* (Las Casas). See Confessionario
- The Rehabilitations of Horace* (Lessing) II:157
- The Rehearsal* (Anouilh) III:22
- Reichlin II:183
- Reinecke Fuchs* (Goethe) I:263
- Reis, Ricardo. See Pessoa, Fernando
- Reiss, Edmund I:51
- Rej, Mikkolaj II:243
- rekishi shōsetsu* (historical fiction) III:303
- Relación* (Relation; Prado) II:230–231
- Relation* (Prado). See Relación
- A Relation of the Mission of Paraguay* (Muratori) II:199
- The Relic* (Queirós) III:362
- La Religieuse* (Diderot) II:77
- The Religion of Christ* (Lessing) II:158
- Religious Holidays* (Ovid). See Fasti
- The Remains of the Day* (film) III:226
- Remarque, Erich Maria III:367–368
- Rembrandt (Rembrandt van Rijn) II:301
- Rembrant* (Genet) III:164
- Remedia Amoris* (Remedies for Love; Ovid) I:228, I:249
- Remedies for Fortune Fair and Foul* (Petrarch) II:222
- Remedies for Love* (Ovid) I:249
- Remembering Babylon* (Malouf) III:277
- Remembrance of Things Past* (Proust). See À la recherche du temps perdu
- ren* I:74–75
- Renaissance II:243–245
 characteristics of II:244
 chivalry in II:45
 classicism and II:56, III:93–94
 courtly love tradition and I:313
 Enlightenment and II:244
 figures associated with II:3, II:9, II:57, II:87, II:119, II:154–156, II:168, II:177–178, II:182, II:185–188, II:223–224, II:226, II:233, II:237–239, II:244, II:249 foundations of I:190 and humanism II:22, II:114–115, II:211, II:244 ideals in II:45, II:61, II:101, II:155, II:244
 influences on I:19, I:23, I:51, I:187, I:229, I:240, I:244, I:300, I:302, I:322 literary criticism in I:176, I:219 Reformation and II:71
 women in II:145
- Renaissance literature
 allegory in II:6
 characteristics of II:45, II:227 drama II:66 literary movements II:225–226 pastorals in II:217
 Portuguese II:94
 sonnets II:273, II:274
 themes in I:61–62, I:66
 travel narratives II:289
 utopias in II:293
- Renaissance men II:45, II:61, II:155, II:244
- Renart le Bestourné* I:267
- René* (Chateaubriand) III:87, III:375
- Renée Mauperin* (Goncourt and Goncourt) III:175, III:315
- "The Renewal of the Covenant the Great Duty" (Mather) II:180
- renga* II:313
- The Repeated Admonition of an Upright Devoted Son* (Luo Guanzhong). See Chung-cheng hsiao-tzu lien-huan chien
- Representative Words* (Gustafson) II:212
- La Reprise* (Robbe-Grillet) III:373
- Republic* (periodical). See Cumhuriyet
- La Republic* (periodical) III:383
- The Republic* (Plato) I:33, I:70, I:238–239, II:6, II:244, II:293
- Republic of Korea Literary Arts Prize III:339
- Republic of Korea Literary Award III:214
- The Republic of Wine* (Mo) III:297
- Requiem* (Akhmatova) III:12
- Requiem* (Jaccottet) III:224
- Requiem* (Verdi) III:284
- "Requiem for a Dog and an Adult" (Tsushima) III:431
- Requiem for a Nun* (Faulkner) III:75
- Resch, Marit III:451
- The Rescued Tongue* (Canetti). See Die Gerettete Zunge
- Res Gestae Divi Augusti* ("Acts of the Divine Augustus"; Augustus) I:32
- Residence on Earth* (Neruda) III:319
- Resistance Poets III:111
- Resnais, Alain III:127
- The Restlessness of the Rose Bush* (Storni) III:415
- Restoration drama II:58–59, II:219
- Resurrection* (Tolstoy) III:429
- The Retinue of Love* (Orléans) II:210
- Retrato de gollilla* (Portrait of a Ruffled Collar; Santa Cruz y Espejo) II:259
- "The Return" (Tao Yuanming) I:297
- Return from the Dreamy Fountain* (Al-Jayyusi) III:226
- "Returning to the Farm to Dwell" (Tao Yuanming) I:297
- The Return of Eva Peron with The Killings in Trinidad* (Naipaul) III:311
- "Return to Havaiki" (Kauraka) III:237
- Return to My Native Land* (Césaire). See Cahier d'un retour au pays natal
- "Return to Wang River" (Wang Wei) I:326
- Revelations of Divine Love* (A Book of Showings; Julian of Norwich) II:56, II:128–129
- "The Revenge of Blue Corn Ear Maiden" I:314
- revenge tragedies II:289
- The Reverends* (Mrozek) III:304
- The Review* (periodical) II:69
- Revista Mexicana de Literatura* (periodical) III:150
- The Revolt of The Masses* (Ortega y Gasset) III:336
- Revolutionary Writers' Association of India III:411
- Révolution Surréaliste* (Carpentier) III:78
- Révue de Deux Mondes* (periodical) III:383
- Revue de Paris* (periodical) III:147
- Reyes Basoalto, Neftali Ricardo. See Neruda, Pablo
- Reynaert, J. I:119
- Reynard the Fox I:262, II:91
- Reynard the Fox* (Masefield) I:263
- "Rhapsody on contemplating the Mystery" (Zhang Heng) I:340

- Rhea I:202, I:203
 Rheticus, Georg Joachim II:62 rhetoric. See orators Rhetoric (Aristotle) I:7, I:23
Rhetoric (Lomonosov) II:160
The Rhetoric of English India (Suleri) III:417
Rhetorics (Cicero) II:221
Rhinoceros (Ionesco) III:220
 Rhode Island, founding of II:306
The Rhyme of the Ancient Mariner (Coleridge) II:17
Rhymes (Bécquer). See Rimas
Rhymes (Boccaccio). See Rime
Rhymes (Petrarch). See Canzoniere
 Rhys, Jean III:368–369
The Rhythm of Violence (Nkosi) III:325
 Richard I (Coeur de Lion; king of England) I:24, I:186
 Richard II (king of England) II:50, II:97
 Richard, Jean I:79–80
 Richard of Lison I:262
 Richard of St. Victor II:56
 Richardson, Elaine Potter. See Kincaid, Jamaica
 Richardson, Samuel II:245–246
 and epistolary novel II:207
 influence of II:31, II:146, II:157, II:207, III:150
 influences on I:66, I:175, II:175
 literary criticism on II:245–246
 romance and II:247
 translations of II:231
 Richard the Pilgrim I:80
 Richelieu, Cardinal (Armand-Jean du Plessis) II:1–2, II:63, II:64
 Richter, Hans Werner III:183
Rickshaw Boy (Lao). See Lo-t'o Hsiang-tzu
Ricordi (Guicciardini) II:108
Riders in the Chariot (White) III:448
 Riebeeck, Jan van II:246–247
 Rifat, Oktay III:234
The Rights of Desire (Brink) III:65
Rights of Man (Paine) II:213
Rights of Passage (Brathwaite) III:58
The Right Way (Chatterji). See Pather Dabi
Rigoberta Menchú and the Story of All Poor Guatemalans (Stoll) III:291
The Rigoberta Menchú Controversy (Arias, ed.) III:291
 Rig-Veda I:256–257
 Riiki I:206
 Rilke, Rainer Maria III:369–370
 friends and colleagues of III:51
 influence of III:82, III:294
 influences on III:201
 translations of III:143
Rimas (Aregensola and Aregensola) II:9
Rimas (Camões) II:38
Rimas (Rhymes; Bécquer) III:46
 Rimbaud, Arthur III:370–371
 decadence and III:113
 in decadence movement III:113
 in fin de siècle III:145
 influence of III:62, III:84, III:93, III:95, III:103
 symbolism and III:418, III:419
 Verlaine and III:443
Rime (Rhymes; Boccaccio) II:23
 Rimsky-Korsakov, Nicolai A. III:359
 Rinaldo (Tasso) II:282
Der Ring des Nibelungen (Ring of the Nibelung; Wagner) I:212, III:95 Ring of the Nibelung (Wagner). See Der Ring des Nibelungen
Ring Round the Moon (Anouilh) III:22
Rings of Burnished Brass (Idris) III:218 Rings of Glass (Rinser). See Die gläsernen Runge
 Rinser, Luise III:371–372
 Rintarō Mori. See Mori Ōgai
 “Risen from the Ruins” (Becher). See “Auferstanden aus Ruinen”
The Rise of the Filipino Working Class and Other Essays (San Juan) III:383
The Rise of the Novel (Watt) II:70, II:246
 “The Rising Glory of America” (Freneau) II:97
 Risorgimento II:199
 Ritchie, J. M. III:49
The Rite of Spring (ballet) III:78
ritha I:158–159
 “Ritual of Death” (Hayashi Kyōko) III:198
Ritusamhara (The Seasons; Kalidasa) I:153
The River Between (Ngugi) III:321
 “rivers and mountains” tradition (shan-shui) I:334
A River Sutra (Mehta) III:289
al-Riwaya al-mustahila (Samman) III:382
The Road Ahead (Takamura) III:423
Road-side Dog (Milosz) III:294
Road Signs and Wall Writings (Kunert). See Wegschilder und Mauerinschriften
The Road to the City (Ginzburg) III:168
 “The Roaring Days” (Lawson) III:259
 Robbe-Grillet, Alain III:372–373
 New Novel and III:321, III:387
 objectivismo and III:331
The Robber Bride (Atwood) III:32
The Robbers (Schiller) II:260, III:391
 “Robene and Makyne” (Henryson) II:263
 Robert II (count of Artois) I:3
- Robert de Boron I:68, I:131, I:258
 Robert Frost Memorial Award III:452
Robert Guiscard (Kleist) II:137
 Robert of Clari I:80
 Roberts, Charles III:373–374
 “Robin Hood and Allen-a-Dale” II:84
Robinson Crusoe (Defoe) II:69, III:98
 Rocca, Jean III:412
Rodderick and Alphonsus (Bredero) II:31
 Rodenbach, Georges III:113
 Rodin, Auguste III:369
La Rodoguna (Peralta) II:220
 Rohlehr, Gordon III:288
 Rokkasen I:221
 Rokutoshi Tezuka III:198
 Roland. See Le Chanson de Roland
 Rolo, Charles III:310
The Roman Antiquities (Dionysius of Halicarnassus) I:93 romance II:247–248
 Arthurian II:97
 English II:270
 Japanese II:52
 medieval. See medieval literature
 pastoral II:217
 v. epics II:247
The Romance of Aeneas I:258
Romance of Reynard. See Roman de Renart
Romance of Thebes I:258
Romance of the Late Tang and the Five Dynasties (Luo Guanzhong) II:165
The Romance of the Rose (Lorris and de Meun) I:259–261 composition of I:116, I:147–148, I:258 content and themes in I:65, I:66, I:116–117
 influence of I:167, I:261, II:271
 literary criticism on I:260–261, II:224
 and medieval romance I:190
 translations of II:50
Romance of the Sui and Tang Dynasties (Luo Guanzhong) II:165
The Romance of the Three Kingdoms (Luo Guanzhong). See San-gouzhi yan-yi
The Romance of Troy I:258
Romances de los señores de la Nueva España (The Romances of the Sages of New Spain) II:201, II:202
 “Romances of New Spain” (Pomar, ed.) I:209
Le Roman de la Rose. See Romance of the Rose
Roman d’Eneas (Book of Aeneid) I:124
Roman de Renart I:190, I:235, I:262–264, I:267

- Roman de Thebes* II:167
Roman de Troie (Benoit de Sainte-Maure) II:107
Le Roman du Graal (Robert de Boron) I:131
Roman Elegies (Goethe) I:250, III:349
Le Roman expérimental (Zola) III:314–315
Romanian Academy III:27
Romanian writers III:26
La Romanina II:185
Roman Odes (Horace) I:135
Roman Poems (Pasolini) III:341
Romantic Art (Baudelaire). See l'Art romantique romantic epic II:247 romanticism III:374–376 characteristics of III:87, III:150
 critics of II:138
 Enlightenment and II:132, III:374
 figures associated with II:102, II:113, III:20, III:87, III:104, III:174, III:208, III:253, III:294–295, III:308, III:319–320, III:375, III:383–384, III:390–392, III:411–412, III:414–415, III:443–444 French. See French romanticism futurism and III:155
 German. See German romanticism influence of II:247, III:82, III:135, III:181, III:261, III:361–362, III:390, III:429, III:439, III:444, III:462
 influences on I:51, II:84, II:138
 Japanese III:294
 modernism and III:299
 naturalism and III:315, III:462
 neoclassicism and III:94
 origins of II:113, II:250, II:252 poetic realism and III:350
 realism and III:365
 roots of II:260
 Russian, influences on III:206
 scapigliatura and III:390
 Spanish III:47, III:104, III:136, III:174 spread of III:412
 v. classicism III:212
Romantic Poems (Gumilev) III:185
Romanzero (Heine) III:201
Rome, classical fall of I:189
 farce in II:92
 humanism and II:115
 influence of II:2, II:88, II:102–103, II:160, II:186, II:223, II:226, II:248–249, II:270, II:297, II:301.
 See also classicism; neoclassicism mythology of I:202–204, I:260
 rediscovery of II:87, II:237, II:244
 works on II:169, II:261, II:279
 writers I:12–13, I:18–19, I:29–32, I:50–51, I:57–59, I:62–63, I:69–71, I:96, I:99, I:130, I:134–136, I:150–151, I:172, I:175–176, I:177–179, I:184–185, I:186–187, I:227–229, I:233–236, I:239–246, I:249–250, I:253–254, I:270–271, I:274–277, I:293–294, I:299–300, I:320–322
Rome, Naples, and Florence in 1817 (Stendahl) III:414
Romeo and Juliet (Shakespeare) III:111
Rome sauvée (Voltaire) II:298
Romulus der Große (Romulus the Great; Dürrenmatt) III:128
Romulus the Great (Dürrenmatt). See Romulus der Große
Rondeux, Madeleine III:167
Rongo I:206
ronin II:52
Rönne novellas (Benn) III:49
Ronsard, Pierre de II:248–249
 friends and colleagues of II:20
 influences on I:313, II:223
 The Pléiade and II:225–226
 Renaissance and II:244
 sonnets and II:274
 themes in I:62
A Room with a View (film) III:226
Rooney, Mickey III:29
Roosevelt, Theodore III:111
Rosales, Diego de II:210, II:249
Rosand, David II:45–46
Rosas, Oscar III:376
The Rose Alter (Södergran). See Rosenaltaret
Rose et Blanche (Sand) III:383
Rosenaltaret (The Rose Alter; Södergran) III:407
Rosenstock, Samuel. See Tzara, Tristan
Rosenthal, Franz II:118
Rosenthal, Nora III:211
“Rose Oser Sero Eros” (Shoaf) I:261
Rose Theatre II:176
Rosset, Barney III:46
Rossini, Gioacchino Antonio II:19
Rostand, Edmond II:21
Roth, Alec III:398
Rothenberg, Jerome III:173
Rothermann, Franziska von III:66
The Rotting Magician (Apollinaire). See L'enchanteur pourrissant
Le Rouge et le noir (The Red and the Black; Stendhal) III:414
Rouge l'aube (Red Dawn; Djebbar) III:121
Rougemont, Denis de I:65
“A Rough Study of Techniques in Modern Fiction Writing” (Gao) III:158
Rougon-Macquart cycle (Zola) III:441, III:462
Roumain, Jacques III:317
Round, Gustave III:224
Rousseau, Jean-Jacques II:249–252
 Encyclopedia and II:76, II:82–83
 enemies of II:251
 Enlightenment and II:4, II:85, II:242
 and epistolary novel II:207
 friends and colleagues of II:28, II:76, II:283
 influence of II:31, II:114, II:133, II:137, II:146, II:251–252, III:150, III:344, III:411, III:428, III:429
 influences on II:194, II:245
 literary criticism on II:75–76, II:77, II:82, II:251–252
 romanticism in III:375
 translations of II:160
La route des Flandres (Simon) III:402
Rovani, Giuseppe III:390
Rowland, S. A. III:112–113
Rowlandson, Joseph II:252–253
Rowlandson, Mary II:87, II:252–253
Rowson, Susanna II:253–254
Roxana (Defoe) II:69–70
Roy, Arundhati III:354, III:376
Royal Academy (Italy) III:110
Royal Dramatic Theater (Sweden) III:415
Royal Society of Literature (England) A.C. Benson Award III:313 members of III:115
Royal Society of London II:16, II:153, II:219
Royal Theater (Denmark) III:20
The Royal Way (Malraux) III:278
Ruan Ji (Juan Chi) I:264
Rubáiyát (Omar Khayyám) I:62, I:219–220
Rubens, Peter Paul I:203, II:301
Rubin, David II:149
La Ruche (periodical) III:114
Rudel, Jaufré. See Jaufré Rudel
“Rudel the Lady of Tripoli” (Browning) I:147
Rudé Pravo (periodical) III:394
Rudin (Turgenev) III:433
Der Ruf (The Call; periodical) III:183
The Ruined Map (Abe) III:2
Ruiz, José Martínez. See Azorín
Ruiz de Alarcón, Juan II:254
The Rule of the Community I:89
Rules of the Game (Leiris). See La Règle du jeu

The Rules of the Game (Pirandello) III:349–350
The Rules of the Game (Simenon) III:402
 Rumi, Jalaloddin I:26, I:196, I:264–266
 Rūmī, Jalāl ad-Dīn ar. See Rumi, Jalaloddin
Rumuz-i-Bekhudī (Mysteries of Selflessness; Iqbāl) III:221
 Runciman, Steven I:81
 runes I:152–153
Running in the Family (Ondaatje) III:334
 RUOG. See United Representation of the Guatemalan Opposition
 Rushd, Abū al-Walīd Muhammad ibn Ahmad ibn Muhammad ibn. See Averroës
 Rushdie, Salman I:306, III:353–354, III:377–378, III:398, III:417
 Ruskin, John III:357
Ruslan and Ludmilla (Pushkin) III:358
 Russell, D. A. I:173–174
 Russell, Jonathan II:303
 Russell, Rinaldina I:94
 Russia. See also Soviet Union
 Bolshevik revolution in III:70 censorship in II:46, II:142, II:242, II:290, III:130, III:172, III:202, III:261, III:358, III:461
 World War I and III:68
 Russian Academy II:205
 Russian Imperial Theater II:277
 Russian literature golden age of III:366
 poetic movements III:7
 realism in III:171, III:174, III:366
 romanticism in III:206
 symbolism in III:419
 works I:224–225, I:283
 writers II:12, II:33, II:46, II:71–72, II:77–78, II:104–105, II:120, II:142–143, II:159–161, II:205, II:211, II:232, II:233–234, II:242, II:277, III:10–11, III:11–12, III:18, III:35–36, III:48, III:67, III:68–69, III:69–70, III:89–90, III:91–92, III:123–126, III:130, III:139, III:171–172, III:174, III:178–179, III:185–186, III:202, III:234–235, III:261, III:278–279, III:287–288, III:337, III:341–342, III:343–344, III:358–359, III:398–399, III:399, III:400, III:407–408, III:408, III:427–429, III:431–432, III:432–433, III:433, III:444–445, III:456–457, III:461
Russian Literature Lover's Interlocutor (periodical) II:105
 Russian New Wave III:10

Russian Orthodox Church, excommunications from III:429
 Russian Revolution
 impact of III:407
 opponents of III:431
 views on III:456
The Russian Symbolists (Bryusov) III:67
Russian Theater (periodical) II:205
 Russo-Japanese War III:265, III:303
Rustic Chivalry (Verga). See Cavalleria Rustica
 Rustichello I:246
 Rutebeuf I:263, I:266–267
 Rutherford, Edward I:201
 Ruusbroec, Jan van I:40, II:254–255
Ryakureki (An Abbreviated History; Ishigaki) III:223
 Ryokan (Yamamoto Eizo) II:256

S

Sa'ada, Anton III:8
 Saadaw, Nawal El. See Sadawi, Nawal El Saadawi. See Saadawi, Nawal Saadi I:268–269
 Sa'adia Gaon I:138
 "Sabás" (N. Guillén) III:184
 Sabatier, Apollonie III:41
 Sachs, Hans II:257–258
 Sachs, Nelly Leonie III:379
Sac ou Dos (Huymans) III:213
Sacred Hope (Neto) III:320
 Sadako (empress of Japan) I:273
Sadar (periodical) III:426
Sad Arias (Jiménez). See Arias tristes
 Sadawi, Nawal III:380
 Sa'dawi, al-. See Sadawi, Nawal
 Sade, Donatien-Alphonse-François de. See Sade, marquis de Sade, marquis de II:146, II:258–259
 Sadi. See Saadi
 Sadiq, Muhammad III:222
Sad Nights and Happy Days (Fernández de Lizardi) II:93
Sad Songs (Hwang Tonggyu) III:215
Safe Conduct (Pasternak) III:341
Saga of Thidrek of Bern I:269
 sagas I:269–270
 influence of I:211, III:118
 King Harald's Saga (Snorri Sturluson) I:280
 mythology and I:204
 Njal's Saga I:212–213, I:269
 themes of I:190, I:217
 Volsunga saga I:95, I:269
 Sage, Lorna III:335
 Sagi school II:143
 Saher, Kazem al- III:232
 Sahitya Akademi III:390
 Sahitya Akademi Award III:166, III:236, III:313
 Sa'id, Ali Ahmad. See Adonis
 Said, Edward III:352
 Sa'id, Khalida III:8
 Saïdi, Ahmad I:62
The Sailor from Gibraltar (Le Marin de Gibraltar; M. Duras) III:127
The Sailor Who Fell from Grace with the Sea (Mishima) III:295
 St. Bartholomew's Day massacre II:11
 Saint-Denys Garneau, Hector de III:200
 Sainte-Beuve, Charles Augustin III:116
 Saint-Exupéry, Antoine de III:380–381
Saint Genet, Actor and Martyr (Sartre). See Saint-Genet, Comédien et Martyr
Saint-Genet, Comédien et Martyr (Saint Genet, Actor and Martyr; Sartre) III:389
 Saint-Gilles, baron I:284
 Saint-John Perse. See Perse, Saint-John
 Saint-Léger, Marie-René-Auguste-Alexis. See Perse, Saint-John
 St. Michel, Elizabeth II:218 saints. See also Ambrose; Augustine; Francis of Assisi; Jerome; Thomas Aquinas Albert the Great I:303
 Basil I:12
 Clare of Assisi I:107
 Fulgentius I:108–109
 Gregory, Saint I:11, I:12
 hagiographies I:266
 Ignatius of Loyola II:119–120, II:124, II:284–285
 John of the Cross II:126–127, II:285
 More, Sir Thomas II:196–197
 Teresa of Avila II:284–285
 Saint-Simon, Claude III:202 saints' plays I:67
Une Saison à Rihata (A Season in Rihata; Condé) III:101
Une Saison au Congo (A Season in the Congo; Césaire) III:84
Saiyuki (Monkey, Monkey Magic, television show) II:308
 Saladin I:79, I:183
Salammô (Flaubert) III:148
 Saleh, Tayyib III:381–382
 Salem witchcraft trials II:179–180
 Salkey, Andrew III:176
 Sallust I:167, I:270–271
Salman the Solitary (Kemal) III:239
 Salonina (empress of Rome) I:244 salons II:263, II:265
 Salterton trilogy (Davies) III:112
 Salutati, Coluccio II:115
 Salvianti, Diane II:11

- Salzburg Tales* (Stead) III:413
Sama-Veda I:256
 Samman, Ghada III:382
 “Samnuak Khong Pho Thao” (“The Old Man’s Conscience”; Dhammachoti) III:117
Samson Agonistes (Milton) II:188
 Samuel of Taima I:140
San Camilo 1936 (Cela) III:82
 Sancho II of Castile I:71
Sancho Saldaña o el castellano de Cuéllar (Espronceda). See Sancho Saldaña of the Spaniard of Cuéllar
Sancho Saldaña o el castellano de Cuéllar (Sancho Saldaña of the Spaniard of Cuéllar; Espronceda) III:135–136
 Sand, George III:148, III:308, III:383–384
 Sandeau, Jules III:383
Sandglass (Gunesekara) III:186
San Diego Union Tribune (periodical) II:239
San-gouzhi yan-yi (San-kuo chih t’ung-su yen-i; Romance of the Three Kingdoms; Luo Guanzhong) II:125, II:165
Sangre y arena (Blood and Sand; Blasco) III:54
 Sanhājī, Sharaf ad-Dīn Muhammad ibn Sa’id al-Būsirī as-. See Būsirī, al-San Juan, Epifanio III:382–383
 SANLAM First Prize III:317
 Sanpoil Indian creation myths I:78
 Sanseverino, Roberto II:233
 Santa Cruz y Espejo, Francisco Javier Eugenio de II:259–260
 Santa Ritta Durão, José de II:100
 Sappho of Lesbos I:271–273
 influence of II:144
 life of I:174
 literary criticism on I:272–273
 themes of I:61
 translations of I:62, II:105
Sarah, Rings and I (Ndebele) III:317
 Saramango, José III:384–385
Sardines (Farrar) III:142
Sardonic Tales (Villiers) III:444
 Sargeson, Frank III:385–386
 Sarmiento, Félix Rubén García. See Darío, Rubén
 Sarraute, Nathalie III:321, III:386–387
 Sartre, Jean-Paul III:387–389
 existentialism and III:137
 friends and colleagues of III:42–43, III:75, III:164, III:320
 influence of III:22, III:351 literary criticism by III:62, III:84, III:387
 literary criticism on III:335
 and Theatre of the Absurd III:424–425
 works by III:318
 works on III:42, III:43
 Sarugaku II:143
The Satanic Verses (Rushdie) III:377
Satan in Goray (Singer) III:403
 Satie, Erik III:96
The Satin Slipper (Claudel) III:95
Satire I (Juvenal) I:150
Satires (Ariosto) II:9
Satires (Horace) I:135
satori I:339
Satura (Montale) III:301
 Saturn I:202
Satyagraha in South Africa (Gandhi) III:157
Satyagraha movement III:157
 Satyanarayana, Visvanatha III:389–390
The Satyr (Kochanowski) II:140
Satyricon (Petronius) I:233–234
Savacou (periodical) III:100, III:392
Savci’ya (To the Public Prosecutor; Dağlarca) III:108
The Saved Earth (Burkart). See Die gerettete Erde
Save the Beloved Country (Paton) III:342
Sa vie à ses enfants (Aubigné) II:11
 Saxo Grammaticus I:204
 Scala, Alessandra II:115
 Scala, Flaminio II:60
 Scaldic poetry I:204
 Scandinavian literature III:52, III:189–191, III:216–217, III:250–251, III:415–417, III:436
scapigliatura III:390, III:442
The Scapigliature and February 6th (Arrighi) III:390
Scarlet Song (Bà) III:35
 scar literature III:119, III:406
The Scavenger (Quevedo). See Historia de la vida del buscón
Scent of Eucalyptus (Quasimodo) III:360
The Sceptred Flute (Naidu) III:311
Schädelbasislektion: Gedichte (Basal Skull Lesson: Poems; Grünbein) III:182
 Scherzer, Rosalie. See Ausländer, Rose
 Schiller, Friedrich von II:260–261, III:390–392
 classicism in II:56
 friends and colleagues of II:102, III:171, III:207, III:208
 influence of II:207, III:59, III:205
 influences on I:154, I:203, II:138
 literary criticism by II:44
 literary criticism on II:138
 romanticism and III:374
 Schiller Prize III:153, III:197
Schindler’s Ark (Keneally) III:239–240
Schindler’s List (film) III:240
Schir William Wallace (Blind Harry) II:262
Die Schlafwandler (The Sleepwalker; Broch) III:66
 Schlamm, Carl I:19
 Schlegel, August Wilhelm II:261, III:412
 Schlegel, Friedrich II:261, III:412
 Schlesinger, Gerty III:207
 Schlöndorff, Volker III:180
 Schlonsky Prize III:365
 Schmidt, A.V.C. II:150
 Schmitz, Ettore. See Svevo, Italo
 Schnell, Horst-Günther III:371
 Schoeck, Richard J. II:196
The Scholar (Pliny the Elder) I:241
The Scholars (Wu Jingzi). See Bulin Waishi
 Scholz, Albert III:372
 Schoolcraft, Henry Rowe I:215
School Days (Chamoiseau). See Chemin d’école
 Schoolfield, George III:407
The School for Scandal (Sheridan) II:59
The School for Wives (Molière) II:58, II:190
 Schopenhauer, Arthur II:262, III:280–281
 Schubert, Franz III:375
 Schultz, Charles III:423
 Schwarz-Bart, André III:392
 Schwarz-Bart, Simone III:392
 “schweigen” (“Silence”; Gomringer) III:173
 Schweikle, Günther I:324
 Schwertfeger, Ruth III:257 science, mathematics and medicine
 Catholic Church and II:62, II:83
 Enlightenment and II:85 writers on I:20–21, I:33, I:34–35, I:110–111, I:129–130, I:219–220, I:276, I:340, II:4–5, II:7, II:16–17, II:61–63, II:72–74, II:95, II:99–100, II:112, II:114, II:118, II:153–154, II:154–156, II:159–161, II:178, II:215–217, II:294, II:296, II:302, III:151–152, III:152–153, III:182–183 science fiction writers III:2, III:225 scientific method II:242
 Scientific Revolution II:61, II:215
 Scipio Africanus I:96
 Scivias (Hildegard von Bingen) I:128
 Scodel, Ruth I:288
 scops I:217
 The Scorpion (Memmi) III:290

590 Cumulative Index

- Scott, Dennis III:49
 Scott, Lockhart I:72
 Scott, Tom II:113
 Scott, Virginia II:190, II:191
 Scott, Sir Walter ballad collection by II:84
 family of I:72
 influence of III:149, III:228,
 III:284, III:342, III:443
 influences on II:9, II:171, III:316
 Scottish Chaucerians II:262–263
 Scottish literature
 Enlightenment and II:85
 poets of 15th century II:262–263
 writers II:27–28, II:112–113,
 II:304
The Screens (Genet) III:164 screenwriters III:1
 screwball comedy (film genre), roots of
 II:59
 “Scribblings in the Margins of the Notebook of Defeat” (Kabbani)
 III:231
 Scriblerus Club II:278
 scriptwriters III:5, III:30, III:36
 Scrooby Separatists II:28
 Scudéry, Georges de II:263
 Scudéry, Madeleine de II:25, II:148,
 II:263–264
Sea Dragon (Santa Ritta Durão). See
 Caramurá
The Seafarer I:218
Sea Grapes (Walcott) III:447
Seagull (Kemal) III:239
The Seagull (Chekhov) III:89, III:90
Seamarks (Perse). See Amers
Sea of Death (Amado) III:17
Search Sweet Country (Laing) III:252
Sea Shells (Valéry) III:439
A Season in Hell (Rimbaud) III:145,
 III:371
A Season in Paradise (Breytenbach)
 III:63
A Season in Purgatory (Keneally)
 III:240
A Season in Rihata (Condé). See Une
 Saison à Rihata
A Season in the Congo (Césaire). See
 Une Saison au Congo
Season of Adventure (Lamming) III:254
Season of Migration to the North (Saleh)
 III:381, III:382
The Sea Wall (M. Duras). See Un
 barrage contre le Pacifique
 Sebastian (king of Portugal) II:38
Seçme Siirler (Selected Poems; Dağlarca)
 III:108
 Second Antifascist Writers Congress
 III:344
Second Birth (Pasternak) III:341
Second Class Citizen (Emecheta) III:133
 Second International Congress of Writers for the Defense of Culture
 III:440
 Second National Poetry Prize III:415
The Second Sex (Beauvoir) III:42–43,
 III:143
Second Symphony (Bely) III:48
The Secret: New Poems (Akhmadulina)
 III:10
Secret Book (Petrarch). See Secretum
The Secret History of Henrietta of England (Lafayette) II:147
The Secret Ladder (Harris) III:193
The Secret Life of Sa’eed, the Ill-Fated
 Pessoptimist (Habibi) III:188
The Secret of Heaven (Hagerkvist). See
 Himlens Hemlighet
Secret Rendezvous (Abe) III:2
 “The Secret Room” (Robbe-Grillet)
 III:373
Secrets of the Self (Iqbāl). See Asrar-i- Khudi
Secretum (Secret Book; Petrarch) II:222
Secular Love (Ondaatje) III:334
 Secundus, Gaius Plinius. See Pliny the Elder
 Secundus, Gaius Plinius Caecilius. See
 Pliny the Younger
 SED. See Socialist Unity Party
The Seducer of Seville (Tirso de Molina). See El burlador de Sevilla
 Seferiadis, Giorgos. See Seferis, George
 Seferis, George III:94, III:393–394
 Segal, Erich I:102
 Segel, Harold II:232
 Seghers, Anna III:451
 Ségou (Condé) III:101
 Segrais, Jean Renaud de II:147
 Segu cycle. See Bamana Segu, Epic of Seifert, Jaroslav III:394–395
 Sei Shōnagon I:273, I:273–274
Seis poetas de lengua inglesa (Six Poets Writing in English) III:150
 Sejanus I:234, I:235
 Se Jo (king of Korea) II:136
 Se-jong II:264–265
Sekai (periodical) III:2
Selected Fables, Put into Verse (La Fontaine). See Fables choisies, mises en vers
Selected Poems (Breton) III:62
Selected Poems (Dağlarca). See Seçme
 Siirler
Selected Works (Akhmadulina) III:10
The Self-Enamored Poet (Nikolev)
 II:205
 “Self-portrait” (Köhler) III:243
 Selu I:216
Selu: Seeking the Corn-Mother’s Wisdom
 (Awiakta) I:216–217
 Selvon, Samuel III:254
 Sembéne, Ousmane III:395
Semiramis (Metastasio) II:185
Sémiramis (Voltaire) II:298
 Seneca I:274–277
 family of I:175
 influence of I:168, I:276, II:8,
 II:115, II:160, II:185, II:222,
 II:286, II:289
 influences on I:302
 life of I:186, I:253
 opinions of I:173
 Seneca the Elder I:274
 Senghor, Léopold Sédar III:396–397
 friends and colleagues of III:84,
 III:120
 Négritude and III:317–318
 postcolonialism of III:353
Senhora (Alencar) III:15
El Señor Presidente (Asturias) III:72
Sentimental Journey (Sterne) II:242
Senzaishu (1183) I:108
 “Separate Ways” (Higuchi) III:204
 “Les Séparés” (“Apart”; Desbordes-Valmore) III:115–116
 Sepoy Mutiny III:166
Septemberlyran (September Lyric;
 Södergran) III:407
September Lyric (Södergran). See
 Septemberlyran
Septuagint I:49
 Serao, Matilde III:442
 Serbian literature, Popa in III:351–352
 “Sermon on the Interment of the Most Illustrious, Most Sovereign Peter the Great” (Prokopovitch) II:232 sermons II:80–81, II:232
Sermons of Job (Calvin) II:38
 Serote, Mongane Wally III:397
 Servatius, Bishop of Tongeren I:124
 Servetus, Michael II:37–38 Servitude et grandeur militaires (The Military Necessity; Vigny) III:443
Sesimiz (Our Voice; periodical) III:234
 Sessa, duke of II:162
Sessiz Ev (The Silent House; Pamuk)
 III:339
 Sestiger group III:65
 Seth, Symeon I:235
 Seth, Vikram III:397–398
 Sethol, Salvador López II:181
 Seti I (pharaoh of Egypt) I:53
Seven African Writers (Moore) III:7
Seven Against Thebes (Aeschylus) I:5
Seven Beauties (Nezāmī). See Haft
 Paykar
Seven Dada Manifestos (Tzara) III:434

- Seven Days Darkness* (Gunnarsson) III:187
Seven Dreams of Elmira (Chamoiseau) III:86
The Seven Enclosures (Ruusbroec) II:255
Seven Famous Greek Plays (O'Neill) I:21–22
Seven Gothic Tales (Dinesen) III:118
Seven Japanese Tales (Tanizaki) III:424
Seven Modes of Sacred Love (Beatrice of Nazareth) I:40
 Seven Odes. See Hanged Poems
Seven Poor Men of Sydney (Stead) III:413
 “Seventeen” (Ôe) III:331
The Seventh Day (Lasker-Schüler) III:257–258
Seventh Diary (Kobayashi Issa). See Shichiban-Nikki
 Seven Years' War II:258
 Sévigné, Henri, marquis de II: 265
 Sévigné, Madame de (marquise de Sévigné) II:147, II:148, II:265–266
Sextet on the Six Days (Habibi). See Sudasiyat al-ayyam al-sitta
 Sexton, James D. II:181
 Sextus Empiricus I:277
 Sforza, Lodovico (duke of Milan) II:155
 Shabbatai Zvi III:403
The Shadow (Pérez Galdós) III:347
Shadow Lines (Ghosh) III:166
Shadows (Collimore) III:100
 Shaftsbury, Anthony Ashley Cooper, third earl of II:76
Shah-nama. See Shahnameh
Shahnameh (Firdawsī) I:106, I:223, I:277–278, I:316
 Shakespeare, Hamnet II:266
 Shakespeare, Judith II:266
 Shakespeare, William II:266–268
 as actor II:127, II:266 adaptations of II:277, III:84, III:304, III:443
 burial of II:50
 comparable authors II:288
 contemporaries of II:48
 editors of II:202
 influence of I:2, II:27, II:102–103, II:157, II:299, III:5, III:20, III:84, III:111, III:112, III:163, III:180, III:205, III:255, III:308, III:349, III:381, III:446 influences on I:19, I:58, I:203, I:204, I:229, I:240, I:245–246, I:313, I:322, II:45, II:60, II:177
 literary criticism on I:84–85, II:48, II:54, II:128, II:190, II:266–268
 pastorals and II:217
 Renaissance and II:244
 Shakespearean sonnet II:274
 themes of I:62, I:66
 translations of III:55, III:153, III:361, III:437
 works by II:289
Shakespeare Wallah (film) III:226
 Shalamov, Varlam III:398–399
Shame (Rushdie) III:377–378
Shamela (Fielding) II:245
 Shamsuddin of Tabriz I:265
Shank's Mare (Jippensha). See Tokai dochu hizakurige
Shank's Pony along the Tokaido (Jippensha). See Tokai dochu hizakurige shan-shui tradition. See “rivers and mountains” tradition “Shards and ashes” (Mala'ika). See Shazaya wa ramad
 Sharif ar-Radi, al-Sayyid al- I:12
 “Sharing a Husband” (Ho) III:205
 Sharpeville Massacre III:249
shasei III:286
 Shastra, Narsingha I:155
 Shastri, Devadatta I:155
 Shaw, George Bernard I:203, II:288
 Shawn, William III:241
Shazaya wa ramad (“Shards and ashes”; Mala'ika) III:274–275
She Came to Stay (Beauvoir) III:43
 Shelley, Percy Bysshe I:6
 Shelmerdine, J. M. II:148
 Shen Fu II:268–269
Shen Pao (periodical) III:265
 Shepard, Sam III:425
 Sheridan, Richard Brinsley II:59
She Stoops to Conquer (Goldsmith) II:59
The She-Wolf (Verga) III:442
shi (poetry) I:171, I:253, I:291
Shichiban-Nikki (Seventh Diary; Kobayashi Issa) II:139
 Shi-De (Shih-te) I:121–122
 Shield Society III:295
Shi-er Lou (Shih-erh lou; Twelve Towers; Li Yu) II:158
Shifu, You'll Do Anything for a Laugh (Mo) III:297 Shiga, Naoya III:399
shih. See shi
Shih Jing. See Book of Songs
 Shiina Minako. See Oba Minako
Shiji (Shi-chi) I:290
Shijing. See Book of Songs
 Shikishi (princess of Japan) I:279
 Shi Naian (Shih Nai-an) II:125, II:165, II:269–270
Shinchokusenshu (1232) I:82
shingeki movement III:134
 Shinkankakuha (Neo-Perceptionists) movement III:238
Shinkokinshu (1201) I:108
Shinshichō (New Tides; periodical) III:12
 Shinto I:160, I:191
The Ship of Fools (Brandt) I:302, II:30
Ships in the Sky (Gunnarsson) III:187
The Shipyard (Onetti) III:336
Shi'r (periodical) III:8
 Shirhak (Practical Learning philosophy) II:129–130
 Shiva I:256
 Shiwei, Wang III:406
 Shoaf, R. Allen I:261
The Shock of Modernity (Adonis) III:8
 Sholokhov, Mikhail III:304, III:400
 Shonyoho I:279
The Shooting Gallery and Other Stories (Tsushima) III:431
 Shopenhauer, Arthur III:324
 Shorris, Earl II:54
A Short Conversation between Three Persons: Pan, Voit, and Pleban (Rej) II:243
The Shortest Way with Dissenters (Defoe) II:69
Short Stories (Calvino) III:73
Short Story Monthly (periodical) III:366
Short Story of the Rise, Reign and Ruin of the Antinomians, Familists and Libertines that Infected the Churches of New England (Winthrop) II:307
 Shoshi (empress of Japan) I:194–195
Showdown (Amado) III:18
Shuihuzhuan (Shui-hu-zhuan, Shui-hu chuan, Outlaws of the Marsh, Wild Boar Forest, Water Margin, The Men of the Marshes, Marshes of Mount Liang, All Men Are Brothers; Shi Naian and Luo Guanzhong) II:125, II:165, II:269
 Shu Qingchun. See Lao She
A Shuttle in the Crypt (Solyinka) III:409
Siam Rath (periodical) III:117
Sic et Non (Abélard) I:1
 Sicilian school I:318
Siddhartha (Hesse) III:203
 Sidney, Mary II:271
 Sidney, Sir Philip II:270–271
 influence of II:30
 influences on I:175, II:171
 pastorals and II:217
 Renaissance and II:244
 themes of I:66
Sido (Colette) III:99
 “Le Siècle de Louis le Grand” (Perrault) II:221
Le Siècle de Louis XIV (Voltaire) II:298

592 Cumulative Index

- The Siege of Thebes* (Lydgate, trans.) II:167
 Siegfried I:212
 Sienkiewicz, Henryk III:400–401
Sierrade Teruel (film) III:278
 “Siglo de oro en las selvas de Eriphile” (Balbuena) II:15
 “Sign Language: The Semiotics of Love in Lope’s El Perro del Hortelano” (Friedman) II:162
Sigríð Undset (Brunsdale) III:436
 Sigrun I:205
sijo II:129, III:191
 “Silence” (“schweigen”; Gomringer) III:173
The Silence of Love (Han) III:191
The Silent Cry (Ōe) III:332
The Silent House (Pamuk). See Sessiz Ev
Silent Operas (Li Yu). See Wu-sheng xi
 Silverman, Kenneth II:178, II:179
 Sima I (Ssu-ma I; emperor of China) I:264
 Sima Qian (Ssu-ma Ch’ien) I:74, I:164–165, I:290
 Simonon, Georges III:401
 Simmons, Harold (Harry) III:446
 Simocatta, Theophylactus II:61
 Simon, Claude III:402
 influence of III:373
 influences on III:357
 New Novel and III:321, III:387
 Simonides I:37
 “Sin and Death in French Poetry since Baudelaire” (Ionesco) III:219
 Sinchi Roca I:199
 Sinclair, Emil. See Hesse, Herman
 Sinclair, Upton III:176
 Singer, Isaac Bashevis III:191, III:402–403
Singing from the Well (Arenas) III:26
 Sin-Leqi-Uninni I:113
 “Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God” (Edwards) II:81
Sinn und Form (Meaning and Form; periodical) III:211
The Sin of Father Amaro (Queiróa). See O crime do padre Amaro
 Sino-Japanese War III:119, III:256, III:285, III:303, III:425
Sir Charles Grandison (Richardson) II:246
Sir Gawain and the Green Knight (Pearl poet) II:271–272
 allegory in II:6
 author of II:50, II:218 authors contemporary to II:150 content and themes of I:66, I:190, I:258
 influence of II:171
 influences on I:68, I:200, I:219
Siroe (Metastasio) II:185
 Sis, Bartolo II:239
A Sister to Scheherazade (Djebar). See Ombre Sultane
 Sistine Chapel II:186
 Sita I:316–317
 Sitaramiah, V. I:316 situation comedy (TV genre), roots of II:59
Six Characters in Search of an Author (Pirandello) III:349–350
 Six Poetic Genuises I:221
Six Records of a Floating Life (Shen Fu) II:268–269
 Sixtyers III:65
 62: A Model Kit (Cortázar) III:103
 Sjoestedt, Marie-Louise I:201
 Skamander group III:433
 Skandagupta I:153
 Skelton, John II:272–273
 Skelton, Martha Wayles II:121 skepticism, as philosophy I:277
 “Sketch” (Pak) III:339
A Sketch on a Trip to Europe (Tian) III:426
 Škvorecký, Jozef III:403–404
 Sky, Wind, Stars and Poetry (Yun) III:460
A Slap in the Face of Public Taste (Mayakovsky) III:287
The Slave Girl (Ěmecheta) III:133 slavery ending of II:123
 in U.S. Declaration of Independence II:123 views on I:23, I:102, II:123 works on II:87, II:111, II:122, II:152, II:212, II:304–305, II:307, III:85, III:126, III:267–268
Slaves in Algiers (Rowson) II:254
 “Sleeping at Sermons, is a Great and Dangerous Evil” (Mather) II:180
 “Sleeping Beauty” (Perrault) II:221
The Sleepwalker (Broch). See Die Schlafwandler
slokas I:251, I:315
Slon (The Elephant; Mrozek) III:303–304, III:405
 Slonim, Vera III:309
Slowa we Krwi (Words Bathed in Blood; Tuwim) III:433–434
Slowing Life (Dağlarca) III:108
The Slow Natives (Astley) III:31
 Slowness (Kundera) III:245
 “Slums of Our Earth” (Anyidoho) III:22
A Small Place (Kincaid) III:241 smallpox, victims of II:265, II:307
 Smart, Christopher I:235
Smile, Please: An Unfinished Autobiography (Rhys) III:369
 “The Smile of a Mountain Witch” (Minako) III:330
 Smith, Adam III:102
 Smith, Colin I:72
 Smith, John II:22, II:273
 Smith, Patti III:371
 Smith, Robert P., Jr. III:76
 Smith, William Jay II:187
Smoke (Turgenev) III:433
 Smollett, Tobias II:207
The Smug Citizen (Gorky) III:178
 “The Snake” (So) III:404
Snakes and Ladders: Glimpses of Modern India (Mehta) III:289
Snapshots (Robbe-Grillet) III:373
 Snitkina, Anna III:124
 Snorri Sturluson I:95, I:204, I:269, I:279–280
Snow Country (Kawabata) III:237
 “The Snow Queen” (Anderson) III:20
Snow That Falls on the Three Southern Provinces (Hwang Tonggyu) III:215
 “Snow White” (Grimm and Grimm) III:182
 Snyder, Gary I:339
 Só (Nobre) III:326
so beginnen am körper die tage (so begin the days along your body; Falkner) III:140 so begins the days along your body (Falkner). See so beginnen am körper die tage
 So Chông-ju III:404
 social comedy II:58
The Social Contract (Rousseau) II:250–251, II:251–252
 Socialism. See Communist and socialist authors socialist realism III:404–407
 alternatives to III:10
 in Chinese literature III:300
 in East German literature III:211
 impact of III:7
 literary criticism by III:456
 opponents of III:12, III:44, III:62, III:211, III:432, 62 practitioners of III:25, III:130, III:178, III:265, III:288, III:337, III:420
 works III:119
 Socialist Unity Party (SED) III:451
 Society of Jesus. See Jesuits
 Society of Lovers of the Russian Word II:72
 Society of Patriots of Chile II:259
 Society of Women Writers and Journalists III:17
 Socrates I:280–282

- contemporaries of I:101, I:179,
 I:281–282, I:286, I:332
 existentialism in III:136
 influence of I:167, I:237
 life of I:74
 literary criticism on I:174
 philosophical method of I:277
 works on I:20, I:27, I:237–239
 Socratic Method I:237–238, I:281
 Södergran, Edith III:407
Soeur Philomène (Goncourt and Goncourt) III:315
Les Soeurs Vatarad (The Vatarad Sisters;
 Huymans) III:213
The Soga Heir (Chikamatsu) II:52
La Soif (The Mischief; Djebbar) III:121
Solaria (periodical) III:168 Ein Soldat und ein Mädchen (A Soldier and a Girl; Fried) III:153
A Soldier and a Girl (Fried). See Ein Soldat und ein Mädchen
Soledades (A. Machado y Ruiz) III:268
Las Soledades (Solitudes; Góngora y
 Argote) II:106
Solibo Magnificent (Chamoiseau). See
Solibo Magnifique Solibo Magnifique (Solibo Magnificent;
 Chamoiseau) III:85
Soliloques (Yacine) III:454
Soliloquies (St. Augustine) I:11
 “The Solitary Life” (Leopardi) III:260
Solitudes (Góngora y Argote). See Las Soledades
 Solomon (king of Jerusalem) I:157–158
 Solon I:237
So Long a Letter (Bâ) III:35
 Solovyov, Mikhail III:48, III:419
 Solovyov, S. M. III:407
 Solovyov, Vladimir III:48, III:407–408,
 III:419
 Solzhenitsyn, Aleksandr III:408–409
 soma I:256–257
Someone Talking to Sometime (Aidoo)
 III:10
Some Prefer Nettles (Tanizaki) III:424
 “Some Tentative Suggestions for the Reform of Chinese Literature” (Hu)
 III:209, III:299–300
Something Childish (Mansfield) III:283
Some Verses by Ripano Eupilino (Parini)
 II:214
 Sondheim, Steven II:132
Soneti lussuriosi (Aretino) II:7
song (sung) I:51–52
 “Song: to Celia” (Jonson) II:128
 “Song by Cacamatzin” (Cacamatzin).
See “Cacamatzin Icuic”
Les Songs en Equilibre (Hébert) III:200
Song of Algeria (Dağlarca) III:108
Song of Antioch (Richard the Pilgrim)
 I:80
 “Song of Axayacatl, Lord of Mexico”
 (Axayacatl) II:13
Song of Exile (Gonçalves Dias) III:174
The Song of Hiawatha (Longfellow)
 I:215
The Song of Igor I:283
Song of Jerusalem I:80
Song of Lawino (p’ Bitek) III:345
 “Song of Macuilxocitl” (Moquihuitzin).
See “Macuilxochitzin Icuic”
Song of Nezahualpilli during the War with Huexotzinco (Nezahualpilli). See
Icuic Nezahualpilli yc Tlamato Huexotzinco
The Song of Ou-Yang Hai (Chin)
 III:406
Song of Roland. See Le Chanson de Roland
 “Song of the Campeador.” See “Carmen Campidoctoris”
Song of the City (Abrahams) III:5
Song of the Departed (Trakl) III:430
 “Song of the Elders” (Axayacatl)
 II:12–13
 “Song of the Jade-hunter” (Li He)
 I:169
 “The Song of the Merchant
 Kalashnikov” (Lermontov) III:261
Song of the Volsungs. See Volsunga saga
Song of Youth (Yang) III:406
A Song on the Sorrows of Departure (Qu Yuan). See Li Sao
Sóngoro cosongo (N. Guillén) III:184
Songs (Kochanowski) II:140
Songs of Ch’u. See Qu Elegies
 “Songs of Depression” (Yang Wanli)
 I:335
Songs of Flying Dragons (Se-jong). See
Yongbi eocheon ga
Songs of Life and Hope (Dario) III:111
Songs of Liongo (Abdallah) II:1
Songs of Love and Grief (Heine) III:201
Songs of Mihiyar the Damascene
 (Adonis) III:8
Songs of shadow (Senghor). See Chants d’ombre
Songs of Sorrow (Ovid). See Tristia
Songs of the Fringed Mouth Gods I:210
Songs of the Highest Mountains I:210
Songs of the Killer Enemies I:210
Songs of the Navajo Canyon I:210
Songs of the Sand Painting I:210
Songs of the South. See Qu Elegies
 “Songs of the Wedding Bed” (Sappho)
 I:271–272
Songs of Yesterday (Feng) III:144
Songs Without Words (Verlaine) III:443 Song Taizong longhu fengyun hui (The Wind-Cloud Meeting of the Sung Founder; Luo Guanzhong)
 II:164–165
 “Song Under Martial Law” (Hwang
 Tonggyu) III:215
 Son-Jara. See Epic of Son-Jara; Sundiata, an Epic of Old Mali
 Son-Jara, Epic of. See Epic of Son-Jara
 Sonnet 73 (Shakespeare) I:62
 “Sonnet of the Vowels” (Rimbaud)
 III:371
 sonnets II:273–274
 introduction to France II:226
 Petrarchan II:20, II:144, II:162
 sonnet sequences II:274
 writers of II:78, II:94, II:100,
 II:187, II:188, II:248–249, II:266,
 II:270, II:277, III:144, III:349,
 III:370
Sonnets (Feng Zhi) III:144
Sonnets (Pessoa) III:349
Sonnets to Helene (Ronsard) II:248–249
Sonnets to Orpheus (Rilke) III:370
 “Son of Light Kills the Monster” I:314
Sonsan of Kaarta, Epic of II:275
 “Sons of Ben” II:128
Sons of Captain Poetry (film) III:323
 Sontag, Susan III:242
 Son tradition II:136
 Sophocles I:286–289
 adaptations of III:304
 contemporaries of I:102, I:125,
 I:280, I:286
 influence of I:203
 literary criticism on I:24,
 I:287–288, II:277
 themes in I:136, I:137
 translations of II:157, III:361
 and unities II:292
 works by I:137
 works on I:21
 Sordello I:312
Sorg-Acre (Sorrow Acre; Dinesen)
 III:118
 Sor Juana. See Cruz, Sor Juana Inés de la
 Sor Juana Inés de la Cruz prize III:79
Sorrow Acre (Dinesen). See Sorg-Acre
A Sorrow Beyond Dreams (Handke)
 III:193
The Sorrow of Young Werther (Goethe)
 III:170
 “The Sorrows of Misfortune” (Shen Fu)
 II:268
The Sorrows of Young Werther (Goethe).
See Die Leiden des jungen Werther
 “Sortie” (Cixous) III:93
 Soto, Hernando de II:101
The Sot-Weed Factor (Barth) II:61

594 Cumulative Index

- The Sot-weed Factor* (Cook) II:60–61
Sotweed Redivivus (Cook) II:61
 Souhami, Jessica II:10
Soul Mountain (Gao) III:159
The Soul's Awakening (Abdallah) II:1
 “Sound of One Hand Clapping” (Flanagan) III:147
The Sound of the Caravan Bell (Iqbāl).
See Bang-i-Dira
Sound of the Mountain (Kawabata) III:237–238
 Soupault, Philippe III:25, III:62, III:107, III:434
Sœur Pholmène (Goncourt and Goncourt) III:175
 South Africa, censorship in III:246, III:249
 South African literature III:4–5, III:63–64, III:64–65, III:97–98, III:104–105, III:113–114, III:176–177, III:199–200, III:246, III:249, III:275, III:316–317, III:325–326, III:327, III:342, III:397, III:449
South African Times (periodical) III:449
 Southeast Asian Writer Award III:117
Southern Mail (Saint-Exupéry) III:381
South of the Border, West of the Sun (Murakami) III:306
 “South Seas” (Pavese) III:343
Souvenirs Pieux (Dear Departed; Yourcenar) III:459
 Souza, Eunice de III:409
So Vast the Prison (Djebar) III:121
Sovereignty and Goodness of God, Together With the Faithfulness of His Promises Displayed (Rowlandson) II:252–253
 Soviet literature III:18, III:68–69, III:125–126, III:130, III:139, III:287–288, III:398–399, III:408, III:444–445, III:457, III:461. See also socialist realism
Soviet Rus (Yesenin) III:457
Soviet South (periodical) III:139
 Soviet Union
 censorship in III:11–12, III:18, III:36, III:69, III:279, III:341–342, III:398–399, III:405, III:408, III:420, III:432, III:444–445, III:457, III:461 collapse of III:354
 postcolonialism and III:354
 Soviet Writers' Union III:12, III:125, III:342, III:408, III:461
 Soyinka, Wole III:353, III:409–410
 Spain, censorship in II:164, II:220, III:29
Spain, Take This Cup from Me (Vallejo) III:440
 Spanish-American War III:163
 Spanish-American writers II:15–16, II:43–44, II:45, II:65–66, II:93, II:101, II:210, II:220, II:249, II:259–260
The Spanish Brabanter (Bredero) II:31
 Spanish Civil War III:435, III:440
 Spanish literature. See also Generation of 1898 Golden Age of II:36–37, II:48, II:161, II:254, II:287
 humanism in II:115
 modernism in III:269
 romanticism in III:47, III:104, III:136
 sonnets in II:274
 writers II:2–3, II:35–36, II:36–37, II:47–50, II:64–65, II:74, II:105–106, II:117, II:119–120, II:126–127, II:151–152, II:161–164, II:164, II:198, II:230–231, II:235–236, II:254, II:284–285, II:287–288, III:13, III:28, III:39, III:46–47, III:53–54, III:79–80, III:82, III:135–136, III:159–160, III:184, III:227, III:268, III:269, III:336, III:347–348, III:435–436
The Spanish Tragedy (Kyd) II:289
The Spark from the Fire-stick (Al-Ma'rri) I:181
The Sparkling Stone (Ruusbroec) II:255
Sparks (Depestre). See Étincelles
 Spartacus League III:44
Speak, Memory (Nabokov) III:310
Speaking Alone (Tzara) III:434
 Specialetti, Amelia III:361
Spectator (periodical) II:142
 Spector, Robert Donald III:251
Speculations about Jacob (U. Johnson).
See Mutmassungen über Jakob
Speculum Meditantis (Mirror of Man; Gower) II:106
 “Speech Made by a Scapegrace in a Gathering of Fools” (Krylov) II:142
 “Spell” (Grünzweig) III:183
 Spence, Joseph II:227
 Spenser, Sir Edmund
 allegory in II:6
 influence of II:30, II:45
 influences on I:68, I:128, I:229, I:313, I:322, II:9, II:171, II:177, II:271, II:283
 Renaissance and II:244
 romance and II:247
 and Spenserian sonnet II:274
 themes of I:66
 works by I:97, I:203
 Spinoza, Benedictus (Baruch) de I:184, II:33, II:275–276, III:402
Spirale (periodical) III:173
The Spirit of Laws (Montesquieu) II:85, II:194
The Spiritual Canticle (St. John of the Cross) II:126–127
 “Spiritual Couplets” (Rumi) I:265
The Spiritual Espousals (Ruusbroec) II:255
Spiritual Exercises (Ignatius of Loyola) II:119–120
The Spiritual Regulation of Peter the Great (Prokopovitch) II:232
Spiritual Relations (Teresa of Avila) II:285
Spiritual Songs (Novalis) II:207
The Spiritual Tabernacle (Ruusbroec) II:255
 Spivak, Gayatri III:352
A Sport of Nature (Gordimer) III:177
sportsbild (periodical) III:367
Sprache im technischen Zeitalter (Language in the Technological Age; Höllerer) III:209
Spring (Ba Jin) III:34
 “Spring's Return” (Horace) I:135
The Sprouts (Ba Jin) III:34
 Sprüche poems I:324
 Squanto II:29
Le Square (M. Duras) III:127
The Square Moon (Samman) III:382
Srikanta (Chatterji) III:89
Srimad Bhagavatam I:251
 Srinivasa, Srirangam Rao. See Sri Sri Sri Sri III:410–411
Sri-Sri Sahityamu (Sri Sri) III:411
 Srivastana, Dhanpat Rai. See Premchand, Munshi
 Ssu-ma I. See Sima I
Stabat Mater (hymn) I:144
 Staden, Hans II:276–277
 Staël, Germaine de III:411–412
 friends and colleagues of III:102
 romanticism in III:375
 Staines, David I:68, I:258
Stalactite (Yu) III:459
 Stalin, Joseph censorship under III:405, III:457
 influences on II:169
 literary interests of III:288 opponents of III:62, III:399, III:408
 petitions to III:69 rule of III:12, III:179, III:405
 works on III:279, III:457
 Stalin Prize III:60, III:119, III:130, III:400
 Stamp Act (1765) II:75, II:95
 Stanford, Donald E. II:283
 “Stanzas of the Soul” (St. John of the Cross) II:126
Stanze (Poliziano) II:226–227

- Star* (periodical) III:17
The Star Apple Kingdom (Walcott) III:447
Star in My Forehead (Lasker-Schüler) III:258
The Starry Messenger (Galileo Galilei) II:99
The Stars (Bing Xin) III:51
The Starving Years (Enchi) III:134
Statecraft Drawn from the Very Words of the Holy Scriptures (Bossuet) II:27
State of Siege (Camus) III:75
 State Prize in Literature (Soviet Union) III:11
States and Empires of the Sun and Moon (de Bergerac) II:21
The Static and the Dynamic in Arabic Culture (Adonis) III:8
Static Poems (Benn). See Statische Gedichte
Statische Gedichte (Static Poems; Benn) III:49
 Statius II:50
La Statue de sel (The Pillar of Salt; Memmi) III:290
Stay Alive, My Son (Yathay) III:456
A Stay in the Country (Kirsch). See Landaufenthalt
 Stead, Christina III:375, III:413–414
 Steele, Richard I:300, II:278
 Steiner, Rudolf III:48, III:407
 Steiner, Yann Andréa III:127–128
 Stendhal III:414–415
Stephanos (Bryusov) III:67
 Stephen (king of England) I:15
 Stephen Leacock Medal for Humour III:112
Der Steppenwolf (Hesse) III:203
E Sterna (The Cistern; Seferis) III:393
 Sterne, Laurence II:207, II:242, III:428
 “The Stern October Has Deceived Me” (Yesenin) III:456
Sternverdunkelung (Eclipse of the Stars; Sachs) III:379
 Stesichorus I:127
 Stevens, John I:258
 Stevens, Wallace III:150, III:276, III:452
 Stevenson, Robert Louis II:219–220, III:55, III:73
 Stewart, Allen II:271
 Stewart, Dugald III:102
Stinking Rose (Bhatt) III:51
Stirrings Still (Beckett) III:46
 Stoddard, Esther II:80
 Stoddard, Solomon II:80
Stoicheia (Elements; Euclid) I:100–101
 stoicism adherents of I:175, I:184, I:241
 goals of I:277
 influence of I:244
 origins of I:301
 tenets of I:99–100, I:275
 works on I:275–276
 Stoll, David III:291
Stone (Mandelstam). See Kamen
 Stone, I. F. I:281, I:282
 Stone, Oliver III:199
The Stone Age (Dağlarca) III:108
The Stone Country (La Guma) III:249, III:250
The Stone Raft (Saramago) III:385
 Stoppard, Tom III:202, III:425
La Storia (History; Monrante) III:301–302
Stories and Pictures (Peretz) III:347
Stories for Ninon (Zola). See Contes à Ninon
The Stories of Eva Luna (Allende) III:16
Stories of the Chinese Countryside (Tian) III:425
 Storm, Theodor III:350
The Storm and Other Poems (Montale) III:301
The Storm of Steel (Jünger) III:230
The Stormy Life (Ehrenburg) III:130
 Storni, Alfonsina III:415
 “The Story of a Mother” (Anderson) III:20
The Story of Gösta Berling (Lagerlöf) III:251
 “The Story of Hsuan-Tsang and the Origin of the Mission to India” (Wu Chengen) II:308
The Story of Sapho (Scudéry) II:264
 “The Story of Shunkin” (Tanizaki) III:424
 “The Story of Sohrab and Rostam” (Firdawsī) I:278
The Story of Thebes (Racine). See La Thébaïde
The Story of the Dilapidated Kiln (Wang Shifu) I:326
The Story of the Eye (Bataille) III:40
 “Story of the Owl” (Ujpan) II:181
The Story of the Stone. See The Dream of the Red Chamber
The Story of the Western Wing in All Keys and Modes (Dong Jieyuan) I:325
 Strabo I:17, I:288–289, I:300
The Straight Mind and Other Essays (Wittig) III:450 Strait Is the Gate (Gide) III:167
 Strand, Mark III:13
The Strange Bride (Ogot) III:333
The Strange Case of Peter Lett (Simenon) III:401
The Stranger (Camus). See L'Étranger
Stranger Stories: Literary Essays 1986–1999 (Coetzee) III:64
Strange Words (Chamoiseau) III:86
 Stranheim, Carl III:138
 Straparola, Giovanni Francesco II:221
 Strassberg, Richard I:252, I:325
 Strauss, Richard II:287, III:207
 Stravinsky, Igor III:78 stream of consciousness III:356
 Streep, Meryl III:16
 “The Streetcar Gone Astray” (Gumilev) III:186
 “The Streets” (Fan Chengda) I:104
 Strega Prize III:129, III:303, III:343
 Strenger, Elizabeth III:379
 Strindberg, August III:138, III:251, III:416–417
Strings (Akhmadulina) III:10
Strong Winds at Mishi Pass (Hwang Tonggyu) III:215
Strophe (Turning Point; Seferis) III:393
Struggle at Thebes (Mahfouz). See Kifah Tiba
The Struggle for Life (Baroja y Nessi) III:39
The Student from Salamanca (Espronceda) III:136
The Students (Ariosto) II:9
Studies of Women (Capuana) III:442
 Sturluson, Snorri. See Snorri Sturluson
Der Sturm (periodical) III:122
Sturm and Drang (Klinger) II:113
 Sturm and Drang movement II:102, II:113–114
Styx (Lasker-Schüler) III:257
 Suard, Jean-Baptiste-Antoine III:102
 Suarez, Michael II:245
 Subandhu I:155
 sublime I:173
 “Submission” (Han) III:191
 Subtelny, Orest II:40
Such a Long Journey (Mistry) III:297
Such a Pity (Habib). See Ikhtayyi
Sudasiyat al-ayyam al-sitta (Sextet on the Six Days; Habibi) III:188
 Sue, Eugène III:258
Sueños (Dreams; Quevedo) II:236
 Suetonius I:241
The Suffrage of Elvira (Naipaul) III:311
 Sufism II:109–110, II:117, III:108
Sugar Street (Mahfouz). See Al-Sukkariyya
 “Suggestions for a Reform of Literature” (Hu) III:209, III:299–300
 Sugimori Nobumori. See Chikamatsu Monzaemon
 Sugiyama, Yōko III:295
A Suitable Boy (Seth) III:398
 Sukarno III:426
Sukeroku, Flower of Edo (Tsuchi Jihei) II:131–132

596 Cumulative Index

- Al-Sukkariyya* (Sugar Street; Mahfouz) III:272
- Suleri, Sara III:417
- Sulla, Publius I:70
- Sullivan, Bruce I:181, I:182
- Sulma, Zuhayr ibn Abi I:120–121, I:298
- Sult* (Hunger; Hamsun) III:190, III:335
- Sumarokov, Alexander II:277
 influence of II:71–72
 literary criticism by II:232 rivals of II:160
 works on II:205
- Sumerian civilization I:113
- “Summary of a Conversation” (Bitton) III:52
- A Summary View of the Rights of British America* (Jefferson) II:122
- Summa Theologica* (Aquinas) I:303–304
- Summer (Camus). See Été
- “The Summoner’s Tale” (Chaucer) II:91
- Sunblossom Press III:236
- Sunday Times* (periodical) III:58
- Sundiata I:98, I:289
- Sundiata, an Epic of Old Mali* I:289
- Sun Jo (king of Korea) II:114
- The Sunken Bell* (Hauptmann). See Die versunkene Glocke
- The Sunken Bell* (periodical) III:144
- Sunken Oboe* (Quasimodo) III:360
- Sun Poem* (Brathwaite) III:59
- “The Sun Priest and the Witch Woman” I:341
- Sunset* (Babel) III:36
- Sunset Village* (Sargeson) III:386
- The Sun Shines over the Sanggan River* (Ding Ling) III:119, III:406
- Sun Stone* (Paz) III:344–345
- Sun Sunt-zu. See Sunzi
- Sun Tsu and the Art of Business* (McNeilly) I:290
- Sunzi (Sun Tzu) I:289–291
- The Supermale* (Jarry). See Le Surmâle
- Superman* (Bing Xin) III:51
- Supernatural Mail* (periodical) II:142
- The Suppliant Maidens* (Aeschylus) I:5
- Suppliant Women* (Euripides) I:102
- Supposes* (Ariosto) II:9
- surahs* I:161, I:162
- Surface-loci* (Euclid) I:101
- Le Surmâle* (The Supermale; Jarry) III:225
- surrealism
 critics of III:224
 existentialism and III:62
 in fin de siècle III:145
 forerunners of III:258
- influence of III:8, III:25, III:36, III:96, III:103, III:259–260, III:411
- influences on III:24
- literary criticism by III:291
- magic realism and III:271
- practitioners of III:25, III:30, III:40, III:69, III:76–77, III:78, III:86, III:131, III:159, III:319, III:344, III:362, III:434
- and Theatre of the Absurd III:424
- works on III:62
- Surrey, Henry Howard, Earl of II:274
- The Survivor* (Keneally) III:240
- Susanna* (Kochanowski) II:140
- Su Shi (Su Shih) I:104, I:290, I:291–292
- Sutra II:308
- Sutra Vritti* (Shastra) I:155
- Su Tung-po. See Su Shi
- Suvorin, Alexey III:89
- Su Xun I:290
- Suyte des Marguerites* (More Pearls; Marguerite de Navarre) II:173
- Suzanne et le Pacifique* (Giraudoux) III:169
- Svevo, Italo III:301, III:417–418
- Swahili literature II:1
- Swami and Friends* (Narayan) III:313
- The Swamp* (Hwang Sun-won) III:214
- Swan of Cambrai II:92
- Swanton, M. J. I:15
- Swedberg, Jesper II:277
- Swedborg, Emanuel. See Swedenborg, Emanuel
- Swedenborg, Emanuel II:277–278, III:37
- Swedish Academy III:251
- Swedish writers II:277–278
- Sweet and Sour Milk* (Farrah) III:142
- Sweet Diamond Dust* (Ferré) III:144
- Sweetness of Power* (Guicciardini) II:108
- Sweet Words* (Ishigaki). See Yasashii Kotoba
- Swift, Jonathan II:278–280
 allegory in II:6
 influence of III:128
 influences on I:176, II:40
 literary criticism by I:174
 literary criticism on I:150, I:176, II:278–280
 neoclassicism and II:202
 works by II:290
- Swimming Lessons and Other Stories from Feroz Shah Baag* (Mistry) III:297
- The Swinging Bridge* (Espinet) III:135
- The Sword in the Stone* (White) I:131
- “Sydney Cove in 1794” (Watling) II:304
- Sydney Morning Herald* (periodical) III:451
- Sylvae* (Trees; Poliziano) II:227
- Sylva Sylvarum* (Bacon) II:15
- symbolism (symbolist movement) III:418–419
 acmeism and III:7
 alternatives to III:11
 in Chinese literature III:300
 critics of III:185
 influence of III:8, III:103, III:110, III:165, III:349, III:363, III:390, III:407, III:437
 influences on III:42
 Latin-American modernism and III:298–299 practitioners of III:42, III:67, III:145, III:244, III:270, III:275–277, III:341, III:356, III:360, III:371, III:376, III:393, III:438, III:442–443, III:444, III:448
scapigliatura and III:390
 works on III:48, III:67
- Symphonia armonie celestium revelationum* (The Symphony of the Harmony of Celestial Revelations; Hildegard von Bingen) I:128
- Symphonies* (Bely) III:48
- The Symposium* (Plato) I:20, I:238
- Symposium* (Xenophon) I:282, I:332
- synesthesia III:371, III:419
- Synge, J. M.
 influence of III:44
- syphilis, victims of III:40, III:42, III:286–287
- Syrian Nationalist Socialist Party III:8
- “Szkam slowa” (“I Am Looking for a Word”; Szymborska) III:420
- Szymborska, Wislawa III:420

T

- Tabakovic, Ivan III:351
- Tabishui* (Travel Gleanings; Kobayashi Issa) II:139
- Tachetti, Iginio Ugo III:390
- Tachibana no Norimitsu I:273
- Tacitus, Cornelius I:293–294
 contemporaries of I:242, I:243, I:293
 influence of II:46
 influences on I:241, I:254, I:271
 literary criticism by I:233
 literary criticism on I:59, I:293–394
 works by I:204
- T’aejong II:264
- Taeuber, Sophie III:28
- Tagore, Rabindranath III:421–422

- influence of III:88, III:166
translations of III:12, III:52
works by III:81
- Tahafat al-Tahafat (The Incoherence of The Incoherence; Averroës)* I:33
- Tain Bo Cuailnge* I:200
- Taine, Hippolyte III:148
- Taira no Sukemori I:82
- Taiwanese literature III:210–211, III:459–460
- Takamura Kotarō III:189, III:422–423
- Takamura Kōun III:422
- Takasago* (Zeami) II:313
- Takeda Izumo II:281
- Takemoto Gidayu II:34, II:53
- Takemotoza theater II:53
- Takhmisa* (Abdallah) II:1
- Takia Haymanot (king of Gondar) I:158
- Taledanda* (Karnad) III:236
- A Tale of a Tub* (Swift) II:6, II:279
- The Tale of Don L'Original* (Maillet) III:274
- The Tale of False Fortunes* (Enchi) III:134
- The Tale of Genji* (Murasaki) I:82, I:141, I:194–196, II:125, III:134, III:458
- The Tale of Izumi Shikibu* (Izumi Shikibu). See Izumi Shikibu Nikki
- The Tale of Kieu* (Nguyen). See Truyen Kieu
- “Tale of the Fisherman and His Wife” (Grimm brothers) III:180
- The Tale of the Love and Death of Coronet Christoph Rilke* (Rilke) III:369–370
- The Tale of the Oriole* (Yuan Zhen) I:325
- The Tale of the Rose* (Saint-Exupéry) III:381
- Tales and Novels in Verse* (La Fontaine). See Contes et nouvelles en vers
- Tales from Djakarta: Caricatures of Circumstances and their Human Beings* (Toer) III:427
- Tales from the Heart* (Condé) III:101
- Tales of a Long Night* (Döblin) III:122
- Tales of Amadou Koumba* (B. Diop, trans.) III:120
- The Tales of Ferozsha Baag* (Mistry) III:297
- The Tales of Hoffmann* (Offenbach) III:206
- Tales of the Don* (Sholokhov) III:400
- Tales of Times Now Past* III:13
- Taliesin I:39, I:199
- Talessin through Logres* (Williams) I:131
- “Talk of the Town” (column) III:241
- Talk Yuh Talk* (Dawes) III:58, III:135
- Talmud I:294–296
Dead Sea Scrolls and I:88
origins of I:48
works on I:183
- Tamarind Season: Poems* (Goodison) III:176
- Tamburlaine* (Marlowe) II:176
- Tametaka, Prince I:141
- The Taming of the Shrew* (Shakespeare) II:266
- Tamura Toshiko Prize III:223, III:247
- Tamurlane. See Timur Lang
- Tanach* I:47
- Tana Press III:328
- Tandem* (Sargeson and Campion) III:386
- Tane I:206
- Tangaroa I:206
- Tangled Hair* (Yosano). See Midaregami
- Tango* (Mrožek) III:304
- Tang Xianzu (T'ang Hsien-tsu) II:281–282, II:310, II:312
- Tanikawa Shuntaro III:423
- Tanizaki Jun'ichirō III:424
- Tanizaki Prize III:134, III:306, III:330
- Tanjong (king of Korea) II:136
- Tanka (uta; waka) I:296–297
characteristics of I:213, I:222 practitioners of I:108, I:142, I:213–214, I:221, I:279 related forms II:110
uta I:279
waka I:222
works on III:285–286
writers of II:256, III:422, III:458
- T'ao Ch'ien. See Tao Yuanming
- Taohuashan* (T'ao-hua shan; Peach Blossom Fan; Kong Shangren) II:141–142
- T'ao Hung-ching I:334
- Tao-Lao. See Storni, Alfonsina
- Tao Yuanming (T'ao Yüan-ming) I:38, I:297, I:297
- Tapinar, Ahmet Hamdi III:233
- tarab* III:8
- Tarafah ibn 'Amr al-'Abd I:120, I:181, I:297–298, I:298
- Ta'rif* (Ibn Khaldūn) II:119
- The Tartar* (Beaumarchais) II:19
- Tartuffe* (Molière) II:190, II:202
- Tasan. See Jung Mong Joo
- Tasks and Masks* (Nkosi) III:326
- Tasso* (Goethe) II:283
- Tasso, Torquato II:282–283
allegory in II:6
influence of II:48, II:161
influences on II:21
pastorals and II:217
- romance and I:258, II:247
themes in I:80
- Tatler* (British periodical) II:278
- Tattler* (Chinese periodical) III:265
- “The Tattooer” (Tanizaki) III:424
- “Tattoo Marks and Nails” (La Guma) III:250
- Tawhaki I:207
- The Tax Inspector* (Carey) III:78
- Taylor, Edward II:283–284
- Taymor, Julie II:34
- Tchaikovsky, Peter I. III:359
- The Teacher* (Augustine) I:30
- Teahouse* (Lao) III:256
- Tedlock, Dennis I:299, II:229, II:239
- Tehuty I:53
- Teilez, Baltazar I:158
- Tekkan Yosano III:458
- telaapi* I:299
- telapnaawe* narratives I:299
- Telemachus* (Fénelon) II:92, II:175
- Telemachus, a Parody* (Marivaux) II:175
- “Telephone Conversation” (Soyinka) III:410
- Télez, Gabriel. See Tirso de Molina
- Telling Maya Tales* (Gossen, ed.) II:181
- Telugu school III:410–411
- Temistocle* (Metastasio) II:185
- Temmu (emperor of Japan) I:160, I:213
- A Tempest* (Césaire). See Une tempête
- The Tempest* (Shakespeare) II:267, III:84
- Tempest-Tost* (Davies) III:112
- Une tempête* (A Tempest; Césaire) III:84
- Temple, Sir William II:278
- The Temple of Fame* (Pope) II:228
- The Temple of the Golden Pavilion* (Mishima) III:295
- Temple scroll I:89
- Le Temps Moderne* (periodical) III:388
- The Temptation of the West* (Malraux) III:278
- Ten Centuries of Spanish Poetry* (Turnbull) II:163
- Tench, Watkin II:284
- Tenchi (emperor of Japan) I:213
- Tencin, Madame de II:4
- Tenderness* (Mistral) III:296
- Tendulkar, Vinay III:118
- Tennyson, Alfred, Lord
influence of III:135, III:373
influences on I:68, I:131, I:322, II:171
literary criticism on I:331
- The Tenth Muse Lately Sprung Up in America* (Bradstreet) II:29–30
- Tent Posts* (Michaux) III:292
- Ten Thousand Leaves*. See Manyoshu
- Ten Years of Exile* (Stael) III:412
- Teotochi, Isabella III:150
- Te Po* I:206

- Terence I:299–300
 influence of I:300, II:9, II:60
 influences on I:188
- Terentianus I:173
- Teresa of Avila, Saint II:126, II:284–286
- Terra Nostra* (Fuentes) III:154, III:271
- Terra Vergine* (D'Annunzio) III:110
- terrorism III:63
- Terry, Patricia I:205
- terza rima* I:84
- Teseida* (Boccaccio) II:23
- Tesoretto* (Little Treasure; Latini) I:167
- Testament* (Francis of Assisi) I:107
- The Testament* (Villon) II:297
- The Testament* (Wiesel) III:450
- Le Testament d'Orphée* (The Testament of Orpheus; Cocteau) III:97
- The Testament of Cresseid* (Henryson) II:113, II:263
- Testament of Jean de Meun* (Jean de Meun) I:147
- The Testament of John* (Lessing) II:158
- The Testament of Orpheus* (Cocteau).
 See Le Testament d'Orphée
- Testaments Betrayed* (Kundera) III:245
- Testimonies of Exile* (Busia) III:71
- The Test of Promises* (Ruiz de Alarcón).
 See La prueba de las promesas
- Tête d'or* (Claudel) III:95
- Tétel, Marcel II:193
- Tetralogies* (Antiphon) I:26
- Tevye the Dairyman* (Aleichem) III:14
- Texaco* (Chamoiseau) III:85
- Texts for Nothing* (Beckett) III:45
- Tezozomoc II:196
- Thabit, Zayd Ibn I:161
- Thai literature III:117
- Thakur, Rabindranath. See Tagore, Rabindranath
- Thaler, R. P. II:242
- Thammachot, Atsiri. See Dhammachoti, Ussiri
- "That Our Desire Is Increased by Difficulty" (Montaigne) II:193
- "That Summer" (Sargeson) III:386
- "That the Taste of Good and Evil Depends in Large Part on the Opinion We Have of Them" (Montaigne) II:193
- That Time* (Beckett) III:45
- Theater of Cruelty III:30
- The Theater of Heiner Müller* (Kalb) III:305
- Theater of the Absurd III:424–425
 existentialism in III:137
 influence of III:425
 practitioners of III:23, III:28–29, III:45–46, III:164, III:219–220, III:225, III:304
- Theaterprobleme* (Dürrenmatt) III:128
- Theatetus* (Plato) I:238
- Théâtre Alfred Jarry III:30
- The Theatre and Its Double* (Artaud) III:30, III:424
- Théâtre Libre movement III:315
- La Thébàide* (The Story of Thebes; Racine) II:240
- Theban Plays (Sophocles) I:286–287
- The Journey to the West* (Wu Chengen).
 See Xiyouji
- Theo, Ion. See Arghezi, Tudor
- Theobald, Archbishop I:112
- Theocritus II:217
- Théodicée* (Leibniz) II:154
- Theodorakis, Mikis III:132
- Theodorescu, Ion N. See Arghezi, Tudor
- Theodoric (king of the Ostrogoths) I:50
- Theogony* (Hesiod) I:127–128, I:202, I:203
- Theologica Christiana* (Abélard) I:1
- Theologica Summi Boni* (Abélard) I:1
- A Theologico-Political Treatise* (Spinoza) II:275
- "Theology of Aristotle" (Plotinus) I:244
- Theophrastus I:187, I:300–303
- Theory of Colors* (Goethe) III:171
- Thérèse Raquin (Zola) III:462
- Thesaurus Antiquitatum Sacrarum* (Ugolino) I:295
- The Thesmophoriazousai* (Aristophanes) I:101–102
- The Thief and the Dogs* (Mahfouz) III:273
- The Thief's Journal* (Genet) III:164
- Thienemann, Marie III:196
- Thieves (Mishima) III:295
- Thieves' Carnival* (Anouilh) III:22
- The Things* (Perec) III:346
- "Things Experienced" (Yuan Hungdao) II:312
- Things Fall Apart* (Achebe) III:6
- The Third Book about Achim* (U. Johnson). See Das dritte Buch über Achim
- The Thirtieth Year* (Bachmann) III:37
- 30 Days in Sydney* (Carey) III:78
- Thirty Poems* (Collimore) III:100
- Thirty Tyrants I:179, I:281
- Thirty Years' War II:59, II:260, III:391
- "This Is a Photograph of Me" (Atwood) III:32
- This Is Lagos and Other Stories* (Nwapa) III:329
- Thomas, Dylan III:105, III:153, III:419
- Thomas, J. W. I:125
- Thomas à Angleterre I:309, I:310
- Thomas à Kempis II:64, II:286
- Thomas Aquinas, Saint I:303–304
 contemporaries of I:318
 influence of II:39, II:286, III:129
 influences on I:184
 literary criticism on I:303–304
- Thomas Mann Prize III:229
- Thomas Paine* (Kaye) II:212
- Thomas the Impostor* (Cocteau) III:96
- Thor I:205
- Thoughts* (Pascal). See Pensées
- "Thoughts of a Fashionable Philosopher" (Krylov) II:142
- Thoughts on the French Revolution* (Staël). See Considerations sur la Révolution Française
- The Thousand and One Nights* I:232, I:304–306, II:51, III:118, III:378
- A Thousand Hoods* (Satyanarayana). See Veyipadagalu
- Three Cheers for the Paraclete* (Keneally) III:240
- Three Comrades* (Remarque) III:368
- Three Continents* (Jhabvala) III:227
- "The Three Crabs" (Ōba) III:330
- Three Essays on the Theory of Sexuality* (Freud) III:152
- The Three Leaps of Wang-lun* (Döblin).
 See Die drei Sprünge des Wang-lun
- The Three Marias* (Queiroz) III:362
- The Threepenny Opera* (Brecht) III:61
- Three Plays* (Firth, ed.) III:350
- Three Plays* (Walcott) III:447
- "The Three Ravens" II:84
- Three Secret Poems* (Seferis) III:394
- Three Trapped Tigers* (Cabrera) III:72
- "Three Warriors" (Kauraka) III:237
- Thrush* (Seferis) III:393
- Thucydides I:306–309
 contemporaries of I:280
 influence of I:270
 literary criticism on I:92, I:307–308
- Al-Thulathiyya: Bayn al-Qasrayn* (Palace Walk; Mahfouz) III:272
- "Thumbing a Lift" (Nortje) III:327
- Thus Spake Zarathustra* (Nietzsche) III:325
- Thwaites, Reuben Gold II:124
- Thyestes* (Seneca) I:276
- Tian Jian III:425–426
- Tian Wen* (Tien Wen; Heavenly Questions) I:253
- Tiberius (emperor of Rome) I:234, I:294
- Tibullus I:249, I:250, II:193
- Tiempo de Morir* (A Time to Die; Fuentes and García Márquez) III:161
- Tien Chien. See Tian Jian
- Tiepolo's Hound* (Walcott) III:448
- Tiers livre* ("The Third Book"; Rabelais) II:237, II:238

- Tiger Tim's Weekly* (periodical) III:17
The Tigh trope (Simon). See La corde raide
Ti Jean L'Horizon (Between Two Worlds; Schwarz-Bart) III:392
Tikhiy Don (Sholokhov) III:400
 Tiller, Terence II:107
 Tillett, Lowell II:205
Till Eulenspiegel II:286–287
Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks (Strauss) II:287
 Tillich, Paul III:136
 Timaeus I:92
The Time and the Place (Mahfouz) III:273
 “Timehri” (Brathwaite) III:58
The Time Machine (Wells) III:225
Time (magazine) III:306
The Time of Indifference (Moravia) III:302
The Time of Poetry (Adonis) III:8
The Time of the Hero (Vargas) III:440–441
Time Remembered (Anouilh) III:22
Times (periodical) III:124
Times of London (newspaper) III:269
A Time to Die (Fuentes and Garcia Márquez). See Tiempo de Morir
 Timotheus I:141
 Timur Lang (Tamurlane) II:109, II:119
The Tin Drum (film) III:180
The Tin Drum (Grass). See Die Blechtrommel
Tipitaka I:230
 Tirolien, Guy III:318
 Tirso de Molina II:287–288, II:289, III:447
 Titans I:202
 Titio. See Brandt, Sebastian
Titirel (Wolfram von Eschenbach) I:329
 Titus (emperor of Rome) I:186
 Titus Livius. See Livy
 Titus Lucretius Carus. See Lucretius
 Tlacaélel II:12, II:195–196
 “To Anaktoria” (Sappho) I:272
 “To Atthis” (Sappho) I:272
 “To a Young Writer” (Naipaul) III:312 tobacco, works on II:112
 “To Be a Woman” (Aidoo) III:10
 “To Córdoba” (Góngora y Argote). See “A Córdoba”
Today (periodical) III:47
Der Tod des Vergil (The Death of Virgil; Broch) III:66
 Tōdō Yoshikiyo II:18
 Tōdō Yoshitada II:18
 Todten, Marianne III:247
 T'oegyey II:152
 Toer, Pramodya Ananta III:426–427
To Every Birth Its Blood (Serote) III:397
To Give and To Have (Quasimodo) III:361
Tōhaku (periodical) III:458
To Have Done With The Judgment of God (Artaud) III:30
 “To His Coy Mistress” (Marvell) I:62
 “To His Mistress Going to Bed” (Donne) II:78
 Toichi (princess of Japan) I:213
 “To Italy” (Leopardi) III:260
 “To Jarifa in an Orgy” (Espronceda) III:136
 To Kabinana I:206
Tokai dochu hizakurige (Shank's Pony along the Tokaido; Shank's Mare; Jippensha) II:126
 To Karvuvu I:206–207
To Know a Woman (Oz) III:337
 “Tokyo” (Hayashi) III:198
To Live in Seclusion (Zhang Heng) I:340
 Tolkien, J. R. R. I:95, I:201, I:204, I:270
 Tolstoy, Leo III:427–429
 family of III:457
 friends and colleagues of III:341, III:369
 influence of III:70, III:178, III:226, III:272, III:281, III:402, III:429
 literary criticism by II:252
 literary criticism on III:190, III:398
 realism in III:366
 Tolstoy, Sofia III:457
 Toltec culture I:208–209, II:180, II:181, II:235
Le Tombeau des rois (Hébert) III:200
A Tomb for Boris Davidovic (Kí?) III:242
 Tomc, Sandra III:32
 “Tomorrow” (Lope de Vega) II:163
Tomorrow Is Ours: A Novel of India Today (Abbas) III:1
 “To My Brother Miguel In Memoriam” (Vallejo) III:440
 “To My Readers” (Han) III:191
 Tong Tianjian. See Tian Jian
Tongui pogam (Exemplar of Korean Medicine; Huh Joon) II:114
 Tony Awards III:22
Too Far Afield (Grass) III:181
Too Late the Phalarope (Paton) III:342
 Topelius, Zacharius I:152
Topology of a Phantom City (film) III:373
 Torah I:47–48
 oral I:294–295
 written I:294–295
 Toribio de Benavente. See Motolinia, Toribio de
- Tornimparti, Alessandra. See Ginzburg, Natalia
Torn Lace and Other Stories (Pardo Bazán) III:340
 Toronto Book Award III:335
To Roosevelt (Darío) III:111
 Torquemada, Juan II:203
Torrent (periodical) III:265
Torrent trilogy (Ba Jin) III:34
 Torres Bodet, Jaime III:429–430
 Torres Girbent, Alejandro III:429
 Torrigiano, Maestro I:94
 “Tortures” (Szymborska) III:420
Der Tor und der Tod (Death and the Fool; Hofmannsthal) III:207
The Tosa Diary (Tsurayuki). See Tosa nikki
Tosa nikki (The Tosa Diary; Tsurayuki) I:159–160, II:289
 “To Sayf al-Dawla on His Recovery from an Illness” (al-Mutanabbi) I:196
Tosca (Puccini) III:442
 Toshiko Tamura Prize III:223
 Tosui Nakarai III:204
 “To the Baseborn Tyrant” (Alcaeus) I:10
To the Daylight (Tsunami) III:431
To the Island (Frame) III:151
To the Land of Cattails (Appelfeld) III:24
 “To the Memory of Brave Americans” (Freneau) II:97
 “To the Music of Koras and Balaphon” (Senghor). See “Que m'accompagnent kóras et balaphon”
To the Public Prosecutor (Dağlarca). See Savci'ya
 “To the University of Cambridge, in New England” (Wheatley) II:304–305
 “To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time” (Herrick) I:62
Tour thro' the Whole Island of Great Britain (Defoe) II:70
To Us, All Followers Are Roses: Poems (Goodison) III:176
Toward Asmara (Keneally) III:241
Toward the Mountains (Paton) III:342
The Tower (Hofmannsthal). See Der Turm
The Tower of Babel (Canetti). See Die Blendung
 “The Tower of Light” (Breton) III:62
The Tower Struck by Lightning (Arrabal) III:29
 Towianski, Andrzej III:292
 Townsville Foundation for Australian Literary Studies Award III:277

600 Cumulative Index

- The Track to Bralgu* (Wongar) III:4
Traduit du grand large (Translated from the High Sea; Depestre) III:114 tragedy II:288–289. See also melodramma Aristotle on I:23–24 development of genre I:4
 unities and II:292
 writers of II:64, II:176, II:211, II:240, II:267, II:282
The Tragedy of Inês de Castro (Ferreira) II:94
The Tragedy of Julius Caesar (Shakespeare) I:58
The Tragedy of King Christophe (Césaire). See La Tragédie du roi Christophe
The Tragedy of Mr. Morn (Nabokov) III:309 tragic heroes II:288–289 tragicomedies II:267
The Tragic Queen (La corona trágica; Lope de Vega) II:162
Les Tragiques (d'Aubigné) I:322, II:11
 Trail of Tears I:216
The Train Was on Time (Böll) III:54
 Trajan (emperor of Rome) I:242, I:243, I:245
Trajectory of Dust (Castellanos) III:79
 Trakl, Georg III:82, III:257, III:430–431
Trans-Atlantic (Gombrowicz) III:172–173
Trans-Europ-Express (film) III:373
Transit (Höllerer, ed.) III:209
Translated from the High Sea (Depestre). See Traduit du grand large “Translating Apollinaire” (bpNichol) III:323 translators
 through 13th century I:10–11, I:50–51, I:147–148, I:167–168
 14th through 18th centuries II:76, II:101, II:105, II:228, II:237, II:243
 19th and 20th centuries III:82–83, III:103, III:150, III:153, III:210, III:215, III:228, III:279, III:302, III:313, III:319, III:343, III:344, III:349, III:361, III:365, III:370, III:379, III:394, III:411, III:423, III:434, III:437, III:459
The Transplanted Heart (Nkosi) III:326
 “Transportation in Westchester” (Lim) III:263
Trash (Yamada) III:455
Il Trattatto (Jacopone da Todi) I:144
Träume (Dreams; Eich) III:131
Travel Gleanings (Kobayashi Issa). See Tabishui
The Traveller Returned (Murray) II:200 travel narratives I:104, I:158, I:232–233, I:246–248, II:17, II:18–19, II:43–44, II:46–47, II:57–58, II:156, II:204–205, II:242, II:273, II:284, II:289–290, II:295, III:87, III:377, III:380, III:398, III:414, III:426, III:458
Travels in Africa (Tian) III:426
Travels in America (Chateaubriand) III:87
Travels in Mongolia and Manchuria (Yosano) III:458
Travels in Search of the Sources of the Nile (Bruce) I:158
The Travels of Lao Can (Ts’an) (Liu) III:264
The Travels of Marco Polo (Polo) I:246–248
Travels Through North and South Carolina . . . and the Country of the Chactaws (Bartram) II:17
Travels through the Interior Parts of North America in the Years 1766, 1767, 1768 (Carver) II:44
Treasure Island (Stevenson) III:73
The Treasure of the Humble (Maeterlinck) III:270
Treasury of the Excellencies of the Spaniards (Ibn Bassam) I:72
The Treatise (Lessing) II:157
The Treatise of Discerning of Spirits II:56
Treatise of the Culture of the Tobacco Plant (Carver) II:44
A Treatise on Tolerance (Voltaire) II:299
Treatise on Understandings (Abélard) I:1
Treatises of Civil Government (Locke) II:122 Treaty of Versailles III:300
The Tree of Knowledge (Baroja y Nessi) III:39
The Tree of Life (Condé). See La Vie scélérate
The Tree of Man (White) III:448
The Tree of the Sun (Harris) III:194
Trees (Poliziano). See Sylvae
Trees, Effigies, Moving Objects (Curnow) III:105
Trees on a Cliff (Hwang Sun-won) III:214
Trench Town Rock (Brathwaite) III:59
Trends and Movements in Modern Arabic Poetry (Al-Jayyusi) III:226
Treny: The Laments of Kochanowski (Kochanowski) II:140
The Trial (Kafka) III:233
The Trial of Socrates (Stone) I:282
The Trials of Persiles and Segismunda (Cervantes) II:48
La Tribuna (Pardo Bazán) III:340
The Tribute of the People (Pardo Bazán) III:340
Le tricheur (The Cheat; Simon) III:402
The Trickeries of Scapin (Molière) I:300
 “The Tricking of Gylfi” (Sturluson) I:95
Trifles (Rej) II:243
Trilce (Vallejo) III:439
Trilogy of Love (Ba Jin) III:34
 “Trilogy of the Children of the Rocks” (Kabbani) III:231
 Trinidad Theatre Workshop III:446
Le Triomphe de l’Aigneau (The Triumph of the Lamb; Marguerite de Navarre) II:173
 Triptaka. See Hsuan-Tsang
 “A Trip to the Gifberg” (Wicomb) III:449
Tristan (Béroul) I:258
Tristan (Gottfried von Strassburg) I:115, I:309
 Tristan and Iseult I:309–311
 and Arthurian legend I:65, I:67
 influence of I:257
 works on I:115–116, I:186, I:190, I:309
Tristan und Isolde (Wagner) I:309
Tristia (Songs of Sorrow; Ovid) I:228
Tristiya (Poems; Mandelstam) III:279
 Tristram. See Tristan
 “Triumph of Love” (Petrarch) I:147
The Triumph of Love and Death (Peralta). See Triunfo de amor y muerte
Triumphs (Petrarch) II:222
Triunfo de amor y muerte (The Triumph of Love and Death; Peralta) II:220 trobairitz I:93–94, I:311, I:312–313
trobar clus I:25
Troilus and Criseyde (Chaucer) I:261, II:51, II:106, II:113, II:263
Trois contes (Flaubert) III:148
The Trojan War Will Not Take Place (Giraudoux). See La Guerre de Troie n’aura pas lieu
The Trojan Women (Euripides) I:102
The Trolley (Simon) III:402
The Tropic of the Lamb (Langgässer). See Der Wenderkreis des Lammes
Tropiques (periodical) III:84
Tropismes (Sarraute) III:387
 troubadours I:311–313
 and courtly love I:65, I:189
 development of I:67
 examples of I:24–25, I:43–44, I:146, I:317–318 female I:93–94
 influence of I:85, I:107, I:118, I:119, I:144, I:318, I:329
 influences on I:250, I:262
 origins of I:257

- “Troubled Waters” (Higuchi) III:204
The Trouble with Nigeria (Achebe) III:7
 Trow, George W. III:241
Truant State (Hasluck) III:195
The Truce (Levi) III:262
The True-Born Englishman (Defoe)
 II:69
*The True Confessions of an Albino
 Terrorist* (Breytenbach) III:63
True History (Lucian) I:176
The True History of the Conquest of New Spain (Díaz del Castillo). See Historia verdadera de la conquista de la Nueva España
The True History of the Kelly Gang
 (Carey) III:77
True Justice (Ginzburg) III:168
A True Relation of Such Occurrences and Accidents of Note as Happened in Virginia (Smith) II:273
The True Story of Ah Q (Lu) III:265
 Trujillo, Rafael III:441
Truth: A Book of Fictions (bpNichol)
 III:323
Truth and Existence (Sartre) III:389 Truth Can't Be Trusted or the Liar (Ruiz de Alarcón) II:254
The Truth of the Sacred Scriptures
 (Wycliffe) II:311
The Truth Suspect (Ruiz de Alarcón).
 See La verdad sospechosa
Truyen Kieu (The Tale of Kieu; Nguyen)
 III:322
 Ts'ao Ming III:406
 Ts'ao Ts'ao. See Cao Cao
 Tsuchi Jihei II:131–132
 Tsukamoto Fumiko III:12
Tsurayuki Shu (Tsurayuki) I:159
Tsurezuregusa (Essays in Idleness;
 Yoshida Kenkō) I:337
 Tsushima Satoko. See Tsushima Yūko
 Tsushima Yūko III:431
 Tsvetaeva, Marina III:10, III:431–432
 Tu I:206
 Tuatha Dé Danann I:200
 tuberculosis
 victims of II:93, II:206, II:227,
 III:28, III:40, III:46–47, III:50,
 III:74, III:89, III:120, III:131,
 III:134, III:178, III:179, III:225,
 III:232, III:265, III:282, III:283,
 III:285, III:302, III:318, III:326,
 III:407
 works on III:119
Tughlaq (Karnad) III:235
 Tully II:178
 Tulsidas I:317
Tumatumari (Harris) III:193
 Tune: The Charms of Nien-nu” (Su Shi)
 I:291
- Tung Chieh-Yuan I:325
Tungsten (Vallejo) III:440
 Tupinamba culture II:276
 Turgenev, Ivan Sergeevich III:432–433
 friends and colleagues of III:148,
 III:174
 influence of III:70, III:226, III:461
 realism in III:366
 Turgeneva, Asya III:48
 Turgot, Anne-Robert-Jacques II:83
Turkish Embassy Letters (Montagu)
 II:289
 Turkish literature III:107–108,
 III:233–234, III:238–239, III:339
 Turley, Hans II:70
Der Turm (The Tower; Hofmannsthal)
 III:207
 Turnbull, Elizabeth II:163
The Turncoat (Maron). See *Die
 Überläuferin*
 Turner, Elizabeth II:227
Turning Point (Seferis). See Strophe
 Turolodus I:283–284
 Turville-Petre, E. O. G. I:204
tuuwutsi narratives I:313–314
 Tuwim, Julian III:433–434
Tvárin (periodical) III:197
 Twain, Mark II:50, III:14 “‘Twas Love, whom I desire as well as trust” (Vigne) I:319
Twelfth Night (Shakespeare) I:62, II:266
12, Edmonstone Street (Malouf) III:277
The Twelve Beguines (Ruusbroec) II:255
 “Twelve Night Pieces” (Malouf) III:277
Twelve Towers (Li Yu). See *Shi-er Lou
 Twenty Billion Light Years of Loneliness*
 (Tanikawa) III:423
25 Poems (Walcott) III:446
Twenty-Five Poems (Tzara) III:434
Twenty Love Poems and a Song of Despair (Neruda) III:318–319
Twilight of the Idols or How to Philosophize with a Hammer
 (Nietzsche) III:325
Twilight Songs (Hugo). See Chants du crépuscule
The Twin in the Clouds (Pasternak)
 III:341
Two Adolescents (Moravia) III:302
The Two Fires (Wright) III:452
The Two Friends (Beaumarchais) II:19
 “Two Poems on the Bianzhou Rebellion” (Han Yu) I:123
Two Women (Moravia) III:302
 Tyard, Pontus de II:225 typology II:290–291
 Tyramus. See Theophrastus
 Tzara, Tristan III:107, III:131, III:434
tz'u (poetry). See ci
- U
- Die Überläuferin (The Turncoat; Maron)*
 III:285
Ubirajara (Alencar) III:15, III:219
ubi sunt motif I:219
Ubu Bound (Jarry). See *Ubu echainé
 Ubu cocu (Ubu Cuckolded; Jarry)*
 III:225
Ubu Cuckolded (Jarry). See *Ubu cocu
 Ubu echainé (Ubu Bound; Jarry)* III:225
Ubu roi (King Ubu; Jarry) III:225,
 III:425
 Ueda Fumi. See Enchi Fumiko
 Ueda Kazutoshi III:134
 Uemura Bunrakuken II:34
 “The Ugly Duckling” (Anderson) III:20
 Ugolino, Blasio I:295
UGubudele namazimuzimu (Gubudele and the Cannibals; Nebele) III:317
 Uhland, Ludwig III:375
 Ujpán, Ignacio Bizarro II:181
 ‘Uke I:206
Ullenspiegel (Joker; periodical) III:247
 Ulster Cycle I:199, I:200
Ultimos cantos (Gonçalves Dias)
 III:174
Ulysses (Joyce) III:48
 Unamuno y Jugo, Miguel de III:163,
 III:435–436, III:436
Das Unauslöschliche (The Indelible Seal; Langgässer) III:256
The Unbearable Lightness of Being
 (Kundera) III:245
 “Uncle” (Ndebele) III:316–317
The Underground People (Nkosi)
 III:326
 Underhill, Evelyn I:144
 “Under Sentence of Death”
 (Espronceda) III:136
Understanding Christa Wolf (Resch)
 III:451
Under the Skin of the Statue of Liberty
 (Yevtushenko) III:457
 Undset, Sigrid III:436
 UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization)
 III:291
 Ungaretti, Giuseppe III:224, III:360,
 III:436–437
 “The Union Buries Its Dead” (Lawson)
 III:259
 Union of Czech Writers III:394
 Union of Polish Writers III:293
 Union of Soviet Artists
 III:405
 Union of Soviet Writers
 III:139
 United Representation of the Guatemalan Opposition (RUOG)
 III:291

602 Cumulative Index

- unities II:292–293
 advocates of II:25, II:128, II:175, II:277
 influence of II:64
 neoclassicism and II:202
The Universal Monarchy (Montesquieu) II:194
The Unnameable (Beckett). See L'Innommable
Unofficial History of the Literati (Wu Jingzi). See Bulin Waishi
Der Untertan (The Patrioteer; H. Mann) III:280
Untouchable (Anand) III:19
 untouchables. See Dalit literature
The Unusual Life of Tristan Smith (Carey) III:78
upapurana I:250
Urashima Grass (Ōba) III:330
 Urban II (pope) I:79, I:80
 Urban VIII (pope) II:100
 Usk, Thomas II:50
 Ussishkin Prize III:365
uta. See Tanka
 ‘Uthman, Caliph I:161
Utopia (More) II:197, II:238, II:244, II:293
Utopianism (Kumar) II:293
 utopias II:293
- V
- Vacca, Nicola II:185
 Vaez de Torres, Luis II:230
La Vagabonde (Colette) III:99
Vagabond's Song (Hayashi) III:198
 Vaïda, C. V. I:316
 Valco Fund Literary Award for Poetry III:23
 Valdez, Luis II:239
 Valente, Maury Gurgel III:263
 Valentinian (emperor of Rome) I:12
 Valerius I:29
 Valéry, Paul III:438–439
 friends and colleagues of III:276
 influence of III:62, III:184
 influences on III:419
 literary criticism on III:387
Valesquez, Goya, and the Dehumanization of Art (Ortega y Gasset) III:336
 Valhalla I:205, I:269
 “Valiha” (Rabéarivelo) III:364
 valkyries I:205, I:269
 Valle-Inclán, Maria del III:163
 Vallejo, César III:439–440
 Valmiki, Maharshi I:315–317
 Valmore, Prosper III:115
 Van Buitenen, J. A. B. I:181, I:183
 “Vande Materam” (“I Worship Mother” or “Hail Motherland”; Chattopadhyay) III:81, III:421
 Van Dyck, Sir Anthony II:301
 Vanek, Karel III:194
The Vanquished (Verga) III:441
 Vargas Llosa, Mario III:440–441
 influence of III:144
 magic realism and III:270–271
 precursors of III:335
 Vari I:206
Variations on the Theme of an African Dictator (Farrah) III:142
Various Songs (Brandt) II:30
Various Stories (Machado de Assis) III:267
 Varlik Prize III:239
 Varuna I:256
 Vassa, Gustavus. See Equiano, Olaudah
The Vatarad Sisters (Huymans). See Les Soeurs Vatarad
 Vatsyayana Mallanga I:155, I:156
 Vaz Dias, Selma III:368–369
 Ve I:204
 Vedas comparable texts I:152
 composition of I:315
 oral literature and I:224
 overview of I:256
puranas and I:251
 Rig-Veda I:256–257
La vega del Parnaso (Lope de Vega) II:162
Vegetations of Splendor (Depestre) III:114
 Vegetius I:147
 Velázquez, Diego II:64
 Veldeke, Heinrich von. See Heinrich von Veldeke
 “The Vendor of Sweets” (Narayan). See “Mithaiwalla” Venerable Bede. See Bede
A Venetian Night (Musset). See La Nuit vénitienne
 Venice Biennale Critics Prize III:121
Le Vent (The Wind; Simon) III:321, III:402
 Venus I:202
Venus and Adonis (Shakespeare) I:203
 Vercelli Book I:217
Verdadera historia (Díaz del Catillo) II:164
La verdad sospechosa (The Truth Suspect; Ruiz de Alarcón) II:254
 Verdeyen, Paul II:255
 Verdi, Giuseppe III:284
 Verga, Giovanni III:441–442, III:442
 Vergerio, Pier Paolo II:115
 Vergne, Marie-Madeleine Pioche de la. See Lafayette, Madame de verismo III:441, III:442
La Vérité immédiate (Éluard) III:131
 Verlag der Autoren III:192
 Verlaine, Paul III:442–443
 friends and colleagues of III:444
 homosexuality of III:145, III:371
 influence of III:110, III:269
 symbolism and III:418–419
Das verlorene Alphabet (The Lost Alphabet; Grünzweig) III:183
 Verne, Jules II:290, III:122
 Verocchio, Andrea del II:154–155
Des Verses (Maupassant) III:286
Die versunkene Glocke (The Sunken Bell; Hauptmann) III:196
Verteidigung der Wölfe (Defense of the Wolves; Enzensberger) III:134
A Very Easy Death (Beauvoir) III:43
 Vesalius, Andreas II:62, II:294
 Vespasian (emperor of Rome) I:149, I:241, I:253
 Vespucci, Amerigo II:295
 family of II:226
 influence of II:302
 works by II:289, II:302
 works on II:293
 Vespucci, Mario II:226
 Vespucci, Simonetta II:226–227
 Vessantara, Prince I:146
 Vesta I:203
Vestnik Evropy (The Messenger of Europe; periodical) III:235
 Veszy (periodical) III:48, III:67
Veyipadagalu (A Thousand Hoods; Satyanarayana) III:390
 Viareggio Prize III:129, III:302
 Vichrovski III:387
 Vico, Giambattista II:296
The Victim (D’Annunzio) III:110
Victim of the Aurora (Kenally) III:241
La victoire de Guernica (Éluard) III:131
 Victoria (Hamson) III:191
 Victoria (Rowson) II:253
La victoria de Junín (The Victory of Junín; Olmedo) II:210
 Victory Odes (Pindar). See Epinician Odes
La Vida Breve (A Brief Life; Onetti) III:335
La vida es sueño (Calderón de la Barca) II:36–37
 Vidal, Peire I:317–318
 contemporaries of I:319
 literary criticism on I:318
 on love I:312
La vie errante (The Wandering Life; Bonnefoy) III:55
Vie privée de Voltaire et de Mme du Châtelet (Graffigny) II:107

- Vierzehn Tage in Paris (A Fortnight in Paris; Fischer)* III:146
- La Vie scélérate (The Tree of Life; Condé)* III:101
- Vietnamese literature II:204, III:199, III:205, III:322
- Vietnam War, views on III:388
- View of Dawn in the Tropics (Cabrera)* III:73
- “A View of the Yasukuni Festival” (Kawabata) III:237
- Viga Glum’s Saga* I:269–270
- Vigil (Ungaretti)* III:437
- Vigna, Peitro della. See Vigne, Pier delle
- Vigne, Pier delle I:167, I:318–319
- Vigny, Alfred de III:443–444
- Vikings, characteristics of I:269
- Vikramorvashe* (Urvashi Conquered by Valor; Kalidasa) I:154
- Vili I:204
- The Village (Bunin)* III:70
- The Village by the Sea (Desai)* III:115
- Village Society (Chatterji)*. See Palli Samaj
- Village Voice* III:423
- villancicos* II:66
- Villehardouin, Geoffroi de I:80, I:190, I:319–320
- Villey, Pierre II:193
- Villiers, Mathias de. See Villiers de L’Isle-Adam, Auguste
- Villiers de L’Isle-Adam, Auguste III:444
- Villon, François I:190, I:263, I:267, I:313, II:211, II:296–297, II:297
- Villon, Guillaume de II:296
- Vilna (Mickiewicz)* III:292
- A Vindication of the Rights of Women (Wollstonecraft)* III:142
- Vineis, Petrus de. See Vigne, Pier delle
- A Violent Life (Pasolini)* III:341
- Viracocha I:199
- Virgil I:320–322
- adaptations of I:124–125
- contemporaries of I:32, I:134, I:172, I:249
- epic genre and II:86, II:87
- influence of I:168, I:172, I:174, I:175, I:189, I:229, I:269, I:320, II:23, II:48, II:50, II:71, II:148, II:178, II:217, II:221, II:227–228, II:270, II:282
- influences on I:18, I:63, I:96, I:127, I:202, I:203
- literary criticism on I:12, I:176, I:227, I:235, II:277
- themes of I:93, I:172
- translations of II:177, II:263, III:212, III:361
- works by I:97, I:132
- works on I:84, I:135
- Virgin Soil (Turgenev)* III:433
- Virgin Soil Uplifted (Sholokhov)* III:400
- Virtue Triumphant (Murray)* II:200
- Virues, Cristobal de II:161
- Visconti, Valentina II:210
- Vishnu I:256, I:316
- Vishnu Purana* I:251
- The Vision of Piers Plowman (Langland)* II:149–150
- Visions (Hadewijch)* I:118
- The Visit (Dürrenmatt)*. See Besuch der alten Dame
- Visnu Sarma I:230
- Vita (Life; Alfieri)* II:5
- Una Vita (A Life; Svevo)* III:418
- La vita nuova (The New Life; Dante)* I:83
- “Vita Springs” I:331
- Vivaldi, Antonio II:104
- Vivien, René III:145
- “The Vixen and the Hedgehog” (Aesop) I:7
- Vladimir (Prokopovitch) II:232
- Vladimir Mayakovsky: A Tragedy (Mayakovsky) III:287
- Vogel, Henriette II:137
- Vogelweide, Walther von der. See Walther von der Vogelweide
- The Voice (Okara)* III:333
- Voice and Void (Donohue)* III:140
- The Voice of Free Indonesia (Toer)* III:426
- Voice of One Crying (Gower)*. See Vox Clamantis
- The Voice of St. Lucia (periodical)* III:446
- The Voice of Things (Ponge)* III:351
- Voiceprint: An Anthology of Oral and Related Poetry from the Caribbean* III:253
- A Void (Perec)*. See La Disparition
- Voinovich, Vladimir III:444–445
- Voix intérieures (Inner Voices; Hugo)* III:212
- Vol de Nuit (Night Flight; Saint-Exupéry)* III:381
- Volk II:114
- Volksgeist* II:252
- Volpone, or the Fox (Jonson)* II:127
- Volsunga Saga* I:95, I:269
- Voltaire (Frame) II:299
- Voltaire (François-Marie Arouet) II:297–300
- Académie française and II:2
- burial of II:251
- on Crusades I:81
- Encyclopedia* and II:76, II:82, II:85
- enemies of II:251
- Enlightenment and II:4, II:85, II:102, II:242, II:243, II:258
- friends and colleagues of II:28, II:46, II:107, II:283
- influence of II:121, III:358
- influences on II:39, II:40, II:154, II:241
- literary criticism by II:104, II:175, II:228
- literary criticism on I:150, I:176, II:75–76, II:77, II:82, II:299–300
- neoclassicism and II:202
- Volume of poems in the national tongue (Nguyen Trai)*. See Quoc Am Thi Tap Vom Eigebreit: Gedichte (Grünzweig) III:183
- Vondel, Joost van den II:31, II:300–301
- Von deutscher Art und Kunst (On German Character and Art; Herder)* II:113–114
- Von deutscher Baukunst (Goethe)* II:102
- Vonnegut, Kurt, Jr. III:83
- Vor dem Sturm: Roman aus dem Winter 1812 auf 1813 (Before the Storm: A Novel of the Winter of 1812-1813; Fontane)* III:149
- Vormweg, Heinrich III:54
- The Voronezh Notebooks (Mandelstam)* III:279
- Vor Sonnenaufgang (Before Dawn; Hauptmann)* III:196
- Voss (White) III:448
- Vox Clamantis (Voice of One Crying; Gower)* II:106
- “Le Voyage” (Baudelaire) III:42
- Voyage in the Dark (Rhys)* III:368
- “The voyage of the Argo” (Apollonius of Rhodes). See Argonautica
- Voyages to the Sun and Moon (Bergerac)* I:176
- Voyage to Parnassus (Cervantes)* II:48
- The Voyageur: A Novel (Moravia)* III:303
- The Voyageur (Robbe-Grillet)* III:372–373
- Voznesensky, Andrey III:351
- Vsemirnaya Literatura (periodical)* III:461
- Vulcan I:203
- Vyasa I:251
- W
- W, or The Remembrance of Childhood (Perec)* III:346
- Wace (Norman-French poet) I:67, I:219
- Wacvie (Bandler) III:4
- The Wage Shark (Müller and Müller)*. See Der Lohndrücker
- Wagner, Richard
- enemies of III:95
- friends and colleagues of III:324

604 Cumulative Index

- influence of III:281
 influences on I:95, I:131, I:203,
 I:212, I:270, I:309, I:331
 works on III:324
- Wahl, Jean III:137
- waikan* narratives I:299, I:323, I:331
- Waingrow, Marshall II:28
- Waiting for Godot* (Beckett). See En attendant Godot
- Waiting for the Barbarians* (Coetzee) III:97
- The Waiting Room* (Harris) III:193
- The Waiting Years* (Enchi) III:134
- waka*. See Tanka
- Wakefield cycle II:66
- Wakefield Master I:197, II:66
- Walcott, Derek III:100, III:135,
III:446–447
- Walcott, Roderick III:446
- Walcott, Warwick III:446
- Waldman, Bryna II:10
- Waldseemüller, Martin II:295,
II:302–303
- Wales, mythology of I:199–202
- Waley, Arthur II:309
- Walker, Hallam II:191
- Walker, Kath. See Noonuccal, Oodgeroo
- A Walk in the Night and Other Stories*
 (La Guma) III:249
- A Walk Under the Trees* (Jaccottet)
 III:224
- “Walk with Love” (Miron) III:294
- Wallenstein* (Schiller) II:260, III:391
- The Walls Have Ears* (Ruiz de Alarcón).
See Las paredes oyen
- Walpole, Horace II:247
- Walther von der Vogelweide I:324
- The Waltz of the Toreadors* (Anouilh)
 III:22
- Wandang. See Kim Jung Hee
- The Wanderer* I:219
- The Wandering Life* (Bonnefoy). See La vie errante
- Wang Anshi (Wang An-shih) I:74,
 I:291, I:324–325
- Wang Fanggang II:136
- Wang Maoyuan I:171
- Wang Shifu (Wang Shih-Fu) I:325–326
- Wang Shiwei III:406
- Wang Wei I:325, I:326–327
- War against Jugurtha* (History of the Jugurthine War; Sallust) I:271
- War and Peace* (Tolstoy) III:177, III:428
- Ward No. 4* (Ba Jin) III:34
- Warens, Madame de II:250
- The War from London* (Madariaga). See La Guerra Desde Londres
- Warhol, Andy III:30
- Warner, Edmond I:278
- Warner, Maria II:225
- The War of Independence* (Dağlarca)
 III:108
- The War of the End of the World*
 (Vargas) III:441
- The War of the Saints* (Amado) III:18
- The War of the Sons of Light against the Sons of Darkness* I:89
- War of Time* (Carpentier) III:78
- Warren, James II:303
- Warren, Mercy Otis II:303–304
- Warshofsky. See Singer, Isaac Bashevis
- Wars of Religion (1562-1598) II:11
- “The Washing Stream” (Li Qingzhao)
 I:170
- Washington, George II:213, II:303
- Washington, Martha II:303
- Washington Post* III:86
- Wasps* (Aristophanes) I:20
- The Waste Land* (Eliot) I:131, III:301
- Watashi no Mae ni Aru Nabe to Okama to Moeru Hi to* (The Pots, Pans and Burning Fire Before Me; Ishigaki)
 III:222
- “Watching a Village Festival” (Yang Wanli) I:335
- “Watching the Reapers” (Bai) I:38
- “The Watch on the Kerb” (Lawson)
 III:259
- Water and Land* (Quasimodo) III:360
- “The Waterfall” (Derzhavin) II:72
- Water Margin* (Shi Naian and Luo Guanzhong). See Shuihuzhuan
- “Water Music Prelude” (Su Shi) I:291
- “Water’s Edge” (Tsushima) III:431
- Waters of Spring* (Bing Xin) III:51
- Water with Berries* (Lamming) III:254
- Watling, Thomas II:304
- Watson, Burton I:122, I:292
- Watt* (Beckett) III:45
- Watt, Ian II:70, II:246
- Watzenrode, Lucas II:61
- Waves* (Bei Dao) III:47
- The Way Back* (Remarque) III:368
- The Wayfarer* (Natsume) III:314
- A Way in the World* (Naipaul) III:312
- The Way of Perfection* (Teresa of Avila)
 II:285
- The Way of the World* (Congreve) II:59
- “Ways and Means” (Xenophon) I:333
- The Way to Wealth* (Franklin) II:95
- We* (Zamyatin) III:461
- We Are Going* (Noonuccal) III:327
- Weaver, William III:302
- The Weavers* (Hauptmann). See Die Weber
- Die Weber* (The Weavers; Hauptmann)
 III:196
- The Wedding* (Canetti) III:76
- The Wedding of Zein and Other Stories*
 (Saleh) III:382
- The Week* (periodical) III:373
- Weep Not, Child* (Ngugi) III:321
- Wegschilder und Mauerinschriften* (Road Signs and Wall Writings; Kunert)
 III:247
- A Weighty Consideration* (Erasmus)
 II:89
- Weill, Kurt III:61
- Weimar court theater II:260
- Weiss, Timothy F. III:312
- Wei Zhuang (Wei Chuang) I:297, I:327
- Welcome Home* (Condé). See Herémakhonon
- Welde, Thomas II:82
- “We Live Here” (Voinovich) III:444
- Welker, Glen II:70
- The Well Days* (Bunin) III:70
- Welles, Orson III:154
- Wells, H. G. III:55, III:225
- The Well-tempered Critic* (Davies)
 III:113
- Welty, Eudora III:306
- Der Wenderkreis des Lammes* (The Tropic of the Lamb; Langgässer)
 III:256
- Wenebajo I:215
- Wenis (pharaoh of Egypt) I:53
- Wenscelas (duke of Brabant) II:97
- Werfel, Franz III:138
- The West Australian* (periodical) III:195
- Western Australia Premier’s Award for Fiction III:195
- West Indian literature. See Caribbean literature
- West Indian Poetry 1900-1970* (essays)
 III:100
- West Indies, Ltd.* (N. Guillén) III:184
- Westminster Abbey, burial in II:50,
 II:128
- West of Sorrow* (Elytis) III:132
- Weston, Jessie I:130
- Westwards 1 & 2* (Brinkmann). See Westwärts 1 & 2
- Westwärts 1 & 2* (Westwards 1 & 2; Brinkmann) III:66
- Weyrauch, Wolfgang III:183
- “The Whale” I:44
- What Is Literature?* (Sartre). See Qu’est-ce la Littérature?
- “What Is the Word” (Beckett) III:46
- What Is To Be Done?* (Chernyshevsky)
 III:91–92, III:124
- “What the Twilight Says” (Walcott)
 III:446–447
- What Was Without Light* (Bonnefoy).
See Ce qui fut sans lumière
- Wheatley, Phillis II:304–305
- Wheelock, Eleazar II:209
- The Wheel of Fortune* (Moravia) III:302

- When Heaven and Earth Changes Places* (Hayslip) III:199
- When Rain Clouds Gather* (Head) III:200
- "When the Days Are Long in May" (Jaufré Rudel) I:146
- When the Mountains Tremble* (film) III:291
- Where Do I Go Now?* (Kaschnitz). See Wohin denn ich
- While the Billy Boils* (Lawson) III:259
- "While the young sleep" (Allfrey) III:17
- Whirlpools* (Sienkiewicz) III:401
- Whistler, James A. M. III:276
- Whiston, William I:149
- White, Patrick III:448–449
- White, T. H. I:68, I:131
- White Book of Rhydderch* I:201
- The White Castle* (Pamuk) III:339
- White Clothes* (Dudintsev) III:126
- "The White Dawn of the Hopi" I:314
- White Guard* (Bulgakov) III:68–69
- Whitehead, Alfred North I:239
- The White Horse and Other Stories* (Pardo Bazán) III:340
- White Mountain Apache myths and tales I:224, I:327–329
- The White Negress* (Capécia). See La Nègresse Blanche
- The White Wampum* (P. Johnson) III:228
- White Writing: On the Culture of Letters in South Africa* (Coetzee) III:98
- Whitfield, J. H. III:260
- "Whither Dede Korkut?" (Asgharzadeh) II:26
- Whitman, Walt III:8, III:319, III:343, III:407
- Who Do You Think You Are?* (Munro) III:306
- Who Is to Blame?* (Herzen) III:202
- The Whole Armour* (Harris) III:193
- The Whole Booke of Psalmes Faithfully Translated into English Metre* (Eliot) II:82
- "Whoroscope" (Beckett) III:45
- Wicomb, Zoë III:449
- Wide Sargasso Sea* (Rhys) III:369
- Wieland; or, The Transformation* (Brown) II:31
- Wiesel, Elie III:449–450
- Wife of Bath's Tale* (Chaucer) I:68, II:51–52
- The Wife's Lament* I:219
- Wigglesworth, Michael II:305–306
- The Wild Ass's Skin* (Balzac). See Le Peau de chagrin
- Wild Boar Forest* (Shi Naian and Luo Guanzhong). See Shuihuzhuan
- Wild Conquest* (Abrahams) III:5
- Wilde, Martha II:245
- Wilde, Oscar
and comedy of manners II:59
friends and colleagues of III:167
influences on I:233, III:113
life of III:44
literary criticism by III:213–214
translations of III:55
- Wilderness* (periodical) III:265
- The Wild Geese* (Mori) III:303
- "The Wild Honeysuckle" (Freneau) II:97
- A Wild Sheep Chase* (Murakami) III:307
- Wilhelm (kaiser of Germany) III:280
- Wilhelm, James I:43–44, I:147
- Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship* (Goethe) II:103, III:170
- Wilhelm Raabe Prize III:229
- Wilhelm Tell* (Schiller) II:260, III:391
- Willehalm* (Wolfram von Eschenbach) I:329–331
- William (duke of Normandy) I:189
- William IX (count of Poitiers and duke of Aquitaine) I:312
- William Faulkner Foundation Prize III:123
- William of England* (Chrétien de Troyes) I:67
- Williams, Charles I:131
- Williams, Ella Gwendolyn Rees. See Rhys, Jean
- Williams, Roger II:306, II:307
- Williams, Tennessee III:138
- Williams, William Carlos III:150
- "Willow Branch" (Li Shangyin) I:171
- Will the Soviet Union Survive to 1984?* (Amalrik) III:18
- The Will to Power* (Nietzsche) III:325
- Wilson, John II:82
- Wilson Harris and the Caribbean Novel* (Gilkes) III:194
- The Wind* (Simon). See Le Vent
- The Wind-Cloud Meeting of the Sung Founder* (Luo Guanzhong). See Song Taizong longhu fengyun hui
- Windsor Forest* (Pope) II:228
- The Wind-Up Bird Chronicle* (Murakami) III:306
- Wine Press* (Mistral) III:296
- The Wine Song in Classical Arabic Poetry* (Kennedy) I:298
- Winnebago
waikan narratives I:299, I:323, I:331
worak narratives I:299, I:323, I:331
- The Winners* (Cortázar) III:103
- "Winter Evening" (Alcaeus) I:10
- Winter Notes on Summer Impressions* (Dostoyevsky) III:125
- A Winter Piece* (Hammon) II:111
- Die Winterreise* (Müller) III:375
- The Winter's Tale* (Shakespeare) II:267
- Winthrop, John II:306, II:306–307
- Das Wirklichgewaltte* (Braun) III:59
- Wisdom* (Verlaine) III:443
- Wisdom and Destiny* (Maeterlinck) III:270
- The Wisdom of Life* (Schopenhauer) II:262
- Wisdom of the Sands* (Saint-Exupéry) III:381
- Wit and Wisdom from West Africa* (Burton) I:9
- With Fire and Sword* (Sienkiewicz) III:400
- Without a Shape* (Ōba) III:330
- Without Dogma* (Sienkiewicz) III:400
- Wittembergischer Nightingale* (Sachs). See Wittembergisch Nachtigall
- Wittembergisch Nachtigall* (Wittembergischer Nightingale; Sachs) II:257
- Wittgenstein, Ludwig I:339, III:36
- Wittig, Monique III:450–451
- Wives at War and Other Stories* (Nwapa) III:329
- Wochepost* (periodical) III:285
- Wohin denn ich* (Where Do I Go Now?; Kaschnitz) III:236
- Wolf, Christa III:247, III:451
- Wolf, Gerhard III:451
- Wolff, Geoffrey III:306
- Wolff, Kurt. See Benn, Gottfried
- The Wolf Hunt* (Verga) III:442
- Wolfram von Eschenbach I:329–331
contemporaries of I:329
influence of I:131
influences on I:68, I:115, I:131
literary criticism on I:329–331
medieval romance and I:258
works by I:65, I:131
- Wollstonecraft, Mary III:142
- Wolsey, Cardinal II:272
- Woman at Point Zero* (Sadawi) III:380
- Woman from Sarajevo* (Andric) III:21
- The Woman in the Dunes* (Abe) III:2
- A Woman Named Solitude* (Schwarz-Bart and Schwarz-Bart). See La mulâtresse Solitude
- The Woman of Samos* (Menander) I:188
- Woman of the Aeroplanes* (Laing) III:252
- Woman Running in the Mountains* (Tsushima) III:431
- A Woman's Life* (Maupassant) III:286
- Woman to Man* (Wright) III:452
- Woman Writer's Award III:199

- The Womb of Space: The Cross-Cultural Imagination* (Harris) III:194 women. See also feminism and women's issues in Africa III:35, III:133, III:328–329 in ancient China I:170 in ancient India I:156
 in ancient Japan I:194–195
 in Arab nations I:33, I:159, III:121 in Aztec culture II:196 in Byzantium I:16
 in classical Greece I:102
 in Colonial America II:195
 Dalit literature and III:109 education of II:199–200 advocates for III:340
 works on III:133, III:275, III:414
 in England II:135, II:139
 in Europe III:146, III:242, III:412, III:436 first Nobel Prize winner for literature III:251 in France II:144–145, II:224–225, II:264 and futurism III:285
 in India III:310, III:356, III:422
 in Japan II:131, III:134
 in literature, pre-14th century II:23–24 in Middle Ages I:66, I:94, I:119, I:129, I:190, I:258 in 19th-century Britain I:156 in Norse mythology I:205
 in Renaissance II:145
 in Russia II:33
 in Spanish America II:66
 in Third World III:142
 trobaritz I:93–94
 in United States II:199–200
Women and Men (Verlaine) III:443
Women and Sex (Sadawi) III:380
Women Are Different (Nwapa) III:329
Women in Action (video) III:253
Women in Love (Lawrence) III:282
Women of Algiers in Their Apartment (Djebar) III:121
Women of the Fertile Crescent (Boullata, ed.) III:275
Women of the Sun (Maris) III:3
The Women of Trachis (Sophocles) I:286
 Women's Literary Award III:247
Women Will Be Women (Lessing) II:157
Women Writing in Africa (Busia) III:71
The Wonderful Adventures of Nils (Lagerlöf) III:251
The Wonders of the Invisible World (Mather) II:179
 Wong, Timothy II:310
 Wongar, B. III:4
 Wood, Nigel II:279
The Wood Demon (Chekhov) III:89
The Wood of the Woods (Bacon) II:15
 Wooing of Étáin I:200
 Woolf, Virginia
 influence of III:103, III:144, III:154, III:282
 influences on III:357
 Woolman, John II:307
worak narratives I:299, I:323, I:331
The Words (Sartre). See Les Mots
Words Bathed in Blood (Tuwim). See Slowa we Krwi
Words Need Love Too (Brathwaite) III:59
 Wordsworth, William
 influence of III:310, III:358
 influences on I:306, I:322, II:84
 literary criticism by II:17, II:44
The Workers (Jünger) III:230
Works (Bécquer) III:46
Works and days (Hesiod) I:127
 Workshop of Potential Literature. See OULIPO
The World, or Treatise on Light (Descartes) II:72–73
The World as Will and Representation (Schopenhauer) II:262
World Literature Today (periodical) III:76, III:142, III:176, III:297
The World of Bede (Blair) I:41
World of Seven Wells (Storni) III:415
A World of Strangers (Gordimer) III:177
World of Wonders (Davies) III:112
 World Peace Prize III:205
 World Prize for Poetry III:452 World War I
 expressionism and III:138
 impact of III:21, III:131, III:187, III:257, III:282, III:298, III:357 objectors to III:44, III:280 service in III:23–24, III:25, III:40, III:49, III:60, III:62, III:68, III:83, III:122, III:130, III:169, III:229, III:232, III:244, III:255, III:301, III:307, III:367, III:430, III:437
 views on III:62
 works on III:203, III:250, III:269, III:367–368, III:437
 World War II impact of III:21, III:24, III:32–33, III:59, III:82, III:129, III:198, III:218, III:242, III:243, III:255, III:295, III:298, III:302, III:346, III:361, III:371, III:402, III:407, III:436, III:451 opposition to III:83 service in III:12, III:18, III:25, III:36, III:45, III:49, III:54, III:74, III:86, III:110, III:125, III:127, III:128, III:131, III:132, III:134, III:139, III:141, III:153, III:179, III:203, III:209, III:211, III:251, III:278, III:293, III:340, III:351, III:372, III:381, III:388, III:395, III:408, III:422, III:434
 views on III:62
 works on III:76, III:198, III:240, III:242, III:243, III:334–335, III:379, III:427
 Worthington, Ian I:90
Worth It Be (Elytis). See Axion Esti
 Woruk, Kona. See Harris, Wilson
 “Wo to Drunkards” (Mather) II:180
The Would-Be Gentleman (Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme; Molière) II:190
 Woyzeck (Büchner) III:68
 Wright, Ann III:291
 Wright, Judith III:327, III:451–452
 Wright, Richard III:254
 Wright, Susanna II:195
 Writers Association III:139, III:197
Writing and Being (Gordimer) III:178 writing as livelihood II:31, II:33
 “Writing Down What I See” (Yuan Hungdao) II:312
Writing in Limbo (Gikandi) III:96
Writing Us Mob: New Indigenous Voices (collection) III:4
 Written Torah I:294–295
 “Written While Traveling through the Western Suburbs” (Li Shangyin) I:171
The Wrong Side and the Right Side (Camus). See L'Envers et l'endroit
 Wu (emperor of China) I:337
 Wu Chengen (Wu Cheng-en) II:41, II:125, II:307–310, II:308–310
 Wu Ching-Tzu (Wong) II:310
 Wu Jingzi (Wu Ching-tzu) II:41, II:310
 Wulf, Karin A. II:195
Wulf and Eadwacer I:219
 Wu school II:136
Wu-sheng xi (Wu-sheng hsi; Silent Operas; Li Yu) II:158
wuwei I:165
 Wu Wenzao III:51
 Wyatt, Alysson II:309
 Wyatt, Thomas II:274
 Wycherley, William II:58, II:59, II:228
 Wyclif, John. See Wycliffe, John
 Wycliffe, John II:116, II:310–311

X

- Xala* (film) III:395
Xala (Sembène) III:395
 Xanthippe I:281
 Xavier Vaillaurrutia prize III:79, III:150
The Xenia (Martial) I:186
 Xenophon I:332–334
 contemporaries of I:332
 influence of II:4, II:97, III:348
 influences on I:308
 literary criticism on I:173, I:174, I:333
 translations of II:115
 works by I:281–282
 Xhuan Q'Anil. See Komam Q'Anil, Epic of Xian-qing ou-ji (Hsien ch'ing ou-chi; Random Ventures in Idleness; Li Yu)
 II:158–159
 Xiao Dezao I:335
Xiao hu lei (Hsiao-hu lei; The Little Thunderclap; Kong Shangren) II:141
 Xiao Xiaosheng (Hsiao-hsiao-sheng) II:41
 Xie Ling-yun (Hsieh Ling-yün) I:334
 Xie Wanying. See Bing Xin
 Ximénez, Don Francisco II:230
Xixiangji (Hsi-hsiang-chi; The Story of the Western Wing; Wang Shifu) I:325–326
Xiyouji (Hsi Yu Chi; The Journey to the West; Wu Chengen) II:125 xochicuicatl (“flower songs”) II:201–202, II:202–204 Xuanzhong (Hsüan-tsung; emperor of China) I:168
 Xu Hiaxin I:326
- Y
- ya* I:51–52
 Yacine, Kateb III:454–455
Yajur-Veda I:256
Yakhal'inkomo (Serote) III:397
 Yakir, Pyotr III:18
Yale Journal of Criticism (periodical) III:417
 Yamada Eimi III:455
 Yamada Futaba. See Yamada Eimi
 Yamaguchi Sodō II:110
 Yamamoto Eizo. See Ryokan
 Yan'an Forum on Literature and Art III:119
 Yáñez, Mirta III:455
 Yang Mo III:406
 Yang Wanli I:104, I:335
 Yanish, Karl III:343–344
 Yaqui
 creation myths I:78
 deer songs I:78, I:335–337
Yasashii Kotoba (Sweet Words; Ishigaki) III:223
 Yasodhara I:155
 Yasushi Inoue III:303
 Yathay Pin III:455–456
Yayati (Karnad) III:235
 Yazdegerd III (shah of Persia) I:278
 “Ycuic Axayacatzin, Mexico Tlatohuani” (Axayacatl) II:13
The Year of My Life (Kobayashi Issa). See Oragu Haru
The Year of the Death of Ricardo Reis (Saramago) III:384
The Year 2440 (Mercier) II:293
 Yeats, William Butler
 friends and colleagues of III:422
 influence of III:135, III:452
 influences on I:201
 themes of I:62
 translations of III:55, III:365
 Yedang. See Kim Jung Hee
 Yanan Forum on Art and Literature III:405
Yentil (film) III:403
 “Yentil the Yeshiva Boy” (Singer) III:403
 Yesenin, Sergey III:456–457
 Yevtushenko, Yevgeny III:10, III:125, III:351, III:457
 Yiddish literature III:14, III:346–347
Yigdal prayer I:184
 “Yisaeng kyujang cho*ⁿ” (Student Yi Peers Over the Wall; Kim Shi-sup) II:136
 Yi Song-gye II:129
 Yi Sunghun II:130
 Yi Yi. See Lee Yul Kok
 yoga I:46
 Yomiuri Prize III:295, III:306, III:431
Yongbi eocheon ga (Songs of Flying Dragons; Se-jong) II:264–265
 York cycle II:66
 York Realist I:197
 Yosano Akiko III:458
 Yoshida Kenkō I:337
 Yoshimitsu (shogun) II:313
 Yoshimochi (shogun) II:313
 Yoshinori (shogun) II:314
You Can't Get Lost in Cape Town (Wicomb) III:449
 “You Laughed and Laughed and Laughed” (Okara) III:333–334
 Young, John and Alex Dent II:269
Younger Edda (Sturluson) I:95, I:269, I:280
The Youngest Doll (Ferré) III:144
The Youngest Fate (Valéry) III:438
The Young Guard (Fadeyev) III:139
Young India (periodical) III:158

- Young Man's Pocket Companion* (Richardson). See The Apprentice's Vade Mecum
The Young Scholar (Lessing) II:157
Young Torless (Musil) III:307
 Young Vienna III:207
 Yourcenar, Marguerite III:458–459
 Yourcenar Prize III:121
Your Handsome Captain (Schwarz-Bart) III:393
Youth (Tolstoy) III:428
You Who Wronged a Simple Man (Milosz) III:294
Yo-Yo Boing! (Braschi) III:57
Ysegrinus I:262
 Yuan Hungdao (Yüan Hung-tao) II:312
Yuanyu (The Far-off Journey) I:252
 Yuan Zhen (Yuan Chen) I:38, I:325
 Yuan Zhongdao (Yüan Chung-tao) II:312
 Yue Fei (Yueh Fei) I:290
Yueh Fu (Li Bai) I:168
yugen II:205
 Yu Guangzhong (Yü Kwang-chung) III:459–460
 Yule, Sir Henry I:247
Yulgok Chip (Lee Yul Kok) II:152
Yūmoa no Sakoku (The National Isolation of Humor; Ishigaki) II:223
 Yun Hae-hwan. See Yun Tongju
 Yun Tongju III:460
 Yusuf, Abu Yaqub I:32–33
 Yusuf, Salah ad-Din. See Saladin
 Yu Xin (Yü Hsin) I:337–338
Yvain, or the Knight with the Lion (Chrétien de Troyes) I:67, I:68
Yvonne, the Princess of Burgundy (Gombrowicz) III:172

Z

- Zadig, ou la Destinée* (Voltaire) II:298
 Zagary III:293
Zaïde (Lafayette et al.) II:147
Zaïre (Voltaire) II:298
zaju genre I:325
Zamboa (periodical) III:189
 Zamyatin, Yevgeny III:461
 Zapata, Emiliano III:344
 Zapata, Luis I:233
 Zarucchi, Jeanne Morgan II:221
 Zavattini, Cesare III:360
Zazie dans le Métro (Queneau) III:363
The Zea Mexican Diary (Brathwaite) III:59
 Zeami Motokiyo (Motokiyo Kanze) II:143, II:313–314
 Zeami Motomasa II:314
Zeami's Style (Hare) II:313

608 Cumulative Index

- Zen Buddhism II:18, II:256, III:404
Zenge, Wilhelmine von II:137
Zeno I:99, I:301
Zenobia, Queen I:173
Zen parables I:339–340
Zeus I:202
Zeydel, Edwin I:330, II:30
Zhang Heng I:340
Zhang Zhun I:335
Zhangzong (emperor of China) I:326
Zhao Mingzheng (Chao Ming-Cheng) I:170
Zhao Zhenkai. See Bei Dao
Zheng Hou (Cheng Hou) I:290
Zhitie (Life; Avvakum) II:12
Zhou Shuren. See Lu Xun
Zhou Zuoren III:265
zhuaji II:152
Zhuskovskomu, V. A. II:233
Zhu Xi (Chu Hsi) II:129
Zilch, Elizabeth II:160
Zima Junction (Yevtushenko) III:457
Zindan Namah (Prison narrative; Faiz) III:140
Ziolkowski, Theodore III:66
Zipa (Chibcha ruler) II:124
Zitner, Sheldon P. I:24
Zola, Émile III:462–463
 and Dreyfus affair III:145
 as editor III:286
 friends and colleagues of III:53, III:148, III:357, III:433
 influence of III:441
 literary criticism by III:213
 literary criticism on III:90
 naturalism and III:314–315
“Zone” (Apollinaire) III:23
The Zoo (Rej) II:243
Zorba the Greek (Kazantzakis) III:14, III:238
Zoroastrianism I:106, I:257
Zoya’s Apartment (Bulgakov) III:69
zuihitsu I:274
“Zulma” (Staël) III:411
Zulu literature, Kunene in III:246
Zulu Poems (Kunene) III:246
Zumi creation myths I:78, I:299, I:341 narrative poetry I:78, I:328, I:340–341
 telapnaawe narratives I:299
Zuqaq al-Midaqq (Midaq Alley; Mahfouz) III:273
Zurich Schauspielhaus III:128
Zycie Literacia III:420
Zygal: A Book of Mysteries and Translations (bpNichol) III:323
Zygmunt August (king of Poland) II:140
Zynger, Icek-Hersz. See Singer, Isaac Bashevis women

- in Aztec culture 196
- in Colonial America 195
- education of 199–200
- in England 135, 139
- in France 144–145, 224–225, 264
- in Japan 131
- in literature, pre-14th century 23–24
- in Renaissance 145
- in Russia 33
- in Spanish America 66
- in United States 199–200
- Women Will be Women* (Lessing) 157
- The Wonders of the Invisible World* (Mather) 179
- Wong, Timothy 310
- Wood, Nigel 279
- The Wood of the Woods* (Bacon) 15
- Woolman, John 307
- Wordsworth, William 17, 44, 84
- The World, or Treatise on Light* (Descartes) 72–73
- The World as Will and Representation* (Schopenhauer) 262
- “Wo to Drunkards” (Mather) 180
- The Would-be Gentleman (Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme; Molière)* 190
- Wright, Susanna 195
- “Writing Down What I See” (Yuan Hungdao) 312
- Wu Chengen (Wu Ch’eng-en; Wu Chen-en) 41, 125, 307–310, 308–310
- Wu Ching-Tzu* (Wong) 310
- Wu Jingzi (Wu Ching-tzu) 41, 310
- Wulf, Karin A. 195
- Wu school 136
- Wu-sheng xi (Wu-sheng hsi; Silent Operas; Li Yu)* 158

- Wyatt, Alysson 309
- Wyatt, Thomas 274
- Wycherley, William 58, 59, 228
- Wyclif, John. See Wycliffe, John
- Wycliffe, John 116, 310–311

X

- Xenophon 4, 97, 115
- Xuwan Q’Anil. See Komam Q’Anil, Epic of Xian-qing ou-ji (Hsien ch’ing ou-chi; Random Ventures in Idleness; Li Yu) 158–159
- Xiao hu lei (Hsiao-hu lei; The Little Thunderclap; Kong Shangren)* 141
- Xiao Xiaosheng (Hsiao-hsiao-sheng) 41
- Kiménez, Don Francisco 230
- Xiyouji (Hsi Yu Chi; The Journey to the West; Wu Chengen)* 125
- xochicuicatl* (“flower songs”) 201–202, 202–204

Y

- Yamaguchi Sodō 110
- Yamamoto Eizo. See Ryokan
- “Ycuic Axayacatzin, Mexico Tlatohuani” (Axayacatl) 13
- The Year of My Life* (Kobayashi Issa). See Oragu Haru
- The Year 2440* (Mercier) 293
- Yedang. See Kim Jung Hee
- “Yisaeng kyujang chôn” (Student Yi Peers Over the Wall; Kim Shi-sup) 136
- Yi Song-gye 129
- Yi Sunghun 130
- Yi Yi. See Lee Yul Kok
- Yongbi eocheon ga (Songs of Flying Dragons; Sejong)* 264–265
- York cycle 66

- Yoshimitsu (shogun) 313
- Yoshimochi (shogun) 313
- Yoshinori (shogun) 314
- Young, John and Alex Dent 269
- Young Man’s Pocket Companion* (Richardson). See The Apprentice’s Vade Mecum
- The Young Scholar* (Lessing) 157
- Yuan Hungdao (Yüan Hung-tao) 312
- Yuan Zhongdo (Yüan Chung-tao) 312
- Yuan Zongdao (Yüan Tsung-tao) 312
- yugen* 205
- Yulgok Chip* (Lee Yul Kok) 152

Z

- Zadig, ou la Destinée* (Voltaire) 298
- Zaïde* (Lafayette et al.) 147
- Zaïre* (Voltaire) 298
- Zarucchi, Jeanne Morgan 221
- Zeami Motokiyo (Motokiyo Kanze) 143, 313–314
- Zeami Motomasa 314
- Zeami’s Style* (Hare) 313
- Zen Buddhism 18, 256
- Zenge, Wilhelmine von 137
- Zeydel, Edwin 30
- Zhitie (Life; Avvakum)* 12
- Zhuangzi* 152
- zhuanjí* 282
- Zhuskovskomu, V. A. 233
- Zhu Xi (Chu Hsi) 129
- Zilch, Elizabeth 160
- Zipa (Chibcha ruler) 124
- The Zoo* (Rej) 243
- Zygmunt August (king of Poland) 140